LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1977

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

COMMITTEE SITTINGS

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I suppose it's an inquiry more than a point of order, but I'll leave it to your judgement, sir, because I think it's important.

It appears that the resources development committee and the social development committee have decided to sit today, the former in order to deal with the Labour estimates. I don't want to get involved in a big battle over it, but my understanding of the way in which the structure was established was that there were certain time-frames when committees would be able to sit and that they could or could not sit in accordance with those time-frames, established by the panel of chairmen and by the House leaders.

I think we might as well get it straight right away whether it's within the competence of the committee to determine whether it will not sit at any time other than those times established. I find it most inconvenient to arrive in my office in the morning and discover that the committee, in all good faith, has decided not to sit when it was intended to sit and will sit at some other time which it deems to be appropriate but which may not be appropriate in accordance with other committees that have already been granted the power to sit at those times.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry that you're being troubled with this house-keeping matter, but may I speak to it?

As you perhaps know, sir, we've left the matter of committee meetings to the panel of chairmen to sort out against the background of a general timetable which had the standing committee on social development meeting on a Monday afternoon and the standing committee on resources development meeting on Monday evening, along with other allotted times set out in that schedule.

It became obvious, near the end of last week—and this information was not just communicated this morning, it was communicated near the end of last week—that the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) was having some problems meeting the Monday evening schedule and we felt that the committee itself could work out its own details. I was advised that the standing committee, for this day only—just for today—was asking if it could meet this afternoon in order that we wouldn't lose much-needed time for the consideration of these spending estimates.

Through some inadvertence, for which I must accept some responsibility, the notice that should have been in the order paper today regarding the meeting of the standing committee on social development didn't appear, although it's been generally known for some time that this was the afternoon, and there was some confusion with respect to procedural affairs.

However, we felt we had come, among the various parties, to a very satisfactory conclusion for today only that this afternoon, following the question period, the standing committee on resources development would meet to continue its review of the Labour estimates, and the standing committee on social development would meet this afternoon to start the estimates of Community and Social Services.

The procedural affairs committee, I understand, is meeting in room 228 simply to do some organizational work, so that can go on; tonight would be general government carrying on with the Treasurer; and starting tomorrow we would get back to the regularly understood timetable.

I apologize for any inconvenience this may have caused, but we felt, really, that the House leaders would best leave committee work to the panel of chairmen to work out the details.

Mr. Deans: On the matter, if I may, sir—just to clear it up from my point of view—I, first of all, don't require an apology. I didn't expect that anyone was to blame for it and didn't say so.

Hon. Mr. Welch: We had lunch together. Why didn't you mention it at lunch?

Mr. Deans: Because I didn't know at lunch.

Hon. Mr. Welch: If you had been here on Friday, you would have known.

Mr. Deans: Yes, that's fine. I was here Friday. I was here to hear the Premier's (Mr. Davis) disgusting—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. Will the member for Wentworth take his seat?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Stop bothering the House. Stop using the time of the House.

Mr. Deans: It wasn't brought to our attention.

Mr. Speaker: This change, for this Monday only, was brought to my attention last week and I just assumed everybody who was involved was made aware of it. It doesn't require a debate in this House. We have a panel for the express purpose of looking after the scheduling of committees and I am sure the matter is well in hand.

Mr. Havrot: The member doesn't know what is going on; stick around.

Mr. Deans: I was here. I listened to the Premier's disgusting remarks on Friday. Maybe you didn't hear them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, will the member for Wentworth come to order? That matter is closed.

Mr. Nixon: That matter of disgusting remarks—I thought it would be withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That was unparliamentary, Mr. Speaker. Really, if I were one to take offence readily, I would ask the hon. member for Wentworth to withdraw those observations—

Mr. Deans: Then ask; don't worry, ask.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —but knowing the contest in which he is engaged, and that he is feeling the heat a little bit, I will understand and not do it. I have been through it and I know what it does to the metabolism. It is sometimes upsetting.

Mr. Cassidy: That is patronizing.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, the member for Ottawa Centre is involved in the same process.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY LAYOFF OF NICKEL WORKERS

Hon. Mr. Davis: As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to make a few remarks at the end of the special debate on the announced layoffs at Inco in Sudbury, but given the continuing interest and concern about this matter I would like to make a brief statement at this time.

Let me say in the beginning that I don't for one minute question the concern that prevails in all quarters of this House as a result of the Inco announcement, and I recognize that there are and will be genuine differences of opinion as to how we in Ontario should meet this situation. I can even understand the desire of the NDP to bring out of the closet, where it has been well concealed in months past, its fervent desire to nationalize our resource industries.

None of these circumstances in itself is overly discouraging. But I must confess, Mr. Speaker, that if the special debate was intended as a means of dealing realistically and constructively with a serious situation, the results have been both disappointing and discouraging. For, unfortunately, as is all too often the case in the face of difficult circumstances, too much time is devoted to political gamesmanship or, indeed, blamesmanship, and all too little in offering practical suggestions that would help to alleviate, if not overcome, the problems before us.

In all quarters, and I must confess, at all levels of government, people seem to want to devote their time to pointing their finger at somebody else as having been the cause of the problem, while refusing to look in a realistic fashion at the circumstances underlying the situation.

What makes it worse, in my opinion, is the tendency to advocate sweeping courses of action, which are rolled out so easily but which would be so difficult if not downright impractical to apply. Unfortunately, those notions only feed the considerable emotionalism that already exists in a community such as Sudbury at a time like this and, to a considerable extent, further the sense of despair which inevitably accompanies an announcement of a large-scale layoff of this kind.

It is not my intention today, or at any time in the future, to indulge in such an exercise. We are going to deal adequately with the immediate situation, and with other economic difficulties that will arise in the future, only if we approach it, first, with a sense of reality; second, with proposals that are constructive and practical; and, finally, with a maintained sense of confidence in our own abilities and our own long-term future.

It strikes me as rather ironic that, during a period when I hear increased calls for less government interference in the business community, there should be a rush from both opposition parties for massive government intervention the moment that a problem arises. There are also exaggerated notions as to what a provincial government in Canada can do at a time like this and this only exacerbates the situation. For while it may sound negative to some, there must surely be some kind of appreciation of the things that this government cannot do, despite its considerable influence and absolute concern about the developments that are taking place.

Firstly, we cannot change the world market situation in respect to the sales of nickel. As much as some would like to blame us for each and every feature of the announced layoff, we do not, for example, control the steel industry of the United States which, primary among the circumstances now facing us, has reduced its demand for nickel in the short term.

Secondly, we cannot remove competition from the international marketplace. As long as nickel sources are going to be found in other parts of the world, there are going to be people willing to develop them and sell the product. If Inco does not choose to be part of that international development, others will and their efforts will show far, far less concern for the Sudbury operations than any undertaken by a Canadian corporation.

Thirdly, we are not in a position, either in terms of good business or in the wise use of public funds, to purchase and stockpile a product for which there is already a surplus supply in this world. Ramifications of that type of policy, spread across the broad front of our economic activity, are surely apparent to all of us.

What we can do, however, is give specific attention to things that can be done to assist the workers and the communities in which they live during the period when production is decreased and unemployment is created. That, in my opinion, is where we should be concentrating our attention. We should start our planning from the knowledge that we have in Sudbury the most efficient plant and work force that exists in the nickel industry today. That should give us confidence, therefore, that when the market conditions improve, Inco will be more than able to gain and hold a major share of that market. Further, it should give us some sense of hope that the situation we currently face is for the short term.

Fortunately, this province and this country have important social programs and legislation that are in place that give the people affected basic protection during these serious times. Without attempting to document a case, I have in mind, initially, the 16-week notice provided by an Act passed in this Legislature, the unemployment insurance that will ensure basic income to most of those affected by the layoff and such programs as our health and hospital insurance plan which will protect the affected workers and their families in essential areas of life.

In respect of the helpful steps that can be taken, the ministers who spoke on Friday, in my opinion, set forth some clear and reasonable alternatives, including variations in unemployment insurance arrangements and the provision of job opportunities in other locations. It is in regard to these and all other reasonable possibilities that the meetings involving ministry officials at the federal and provincial level, along with union and company spokesmen, will gather tomorrow in order to explore the various possibilities before us and devise a constructive plan of action.

Later this week, when I have had the benefit of the counsel which will arise from tomorrow's session, I plan to sit down with the chairman of Inco to explore each and every realistic possibility that can be put into place to alleviate the hardships created by this announced layoff. In addition, as was indicated in Friday's debate, ministers of this government stand ready to go to Sudbury to talk to those involved and work with them to develop possible courses of action.

I might also say that, if it is the desire of this House, I would be prepared to initiate an appearance before the standing committee on resources development of Inco officials, so that members on all sides of this House will have a complete understanding of the difficulties that company faces, which difficulties are now affecting the company's employees.

In all of these discussions and debates and activities, it is imperative in my view that we maintain a sense of confidence, both at home and, just as important, abroad, in our ability to rise to a situation of this kind. I said at the opening session last Monday that we know that these are difficult times and it will take a co-operative effort on a national and indeed an international basis in order to find appropriate answers.

The Inco layoffs can be taken as a classic case in point. But surely it is apparent that those who rush to preach doom and gloom or to propose massive government intervention do absolutely nothing to enhance the reputation of Ontario and Canada in respect to future development and investment.

At the same time, it undercuts our ability to maintain within our own people, confidence that we still have a strong and healthy economy which despite the exigencies of the moment, provides us with the kind of opportunities that we need to maintain our standard of living and enhance our quality of life in the future.

So I am urging all members of the House to face up to this situation realistically, to have confidence in our ability to deal with the situation, and let's give less time to blaming one another for the sake of political expediency and work to meet the situation that lies before us.

ORAL QUESTIONS

PREMIER'S VISIT TO JAPAN

Mr. S. Smith: A question to the Premier regarding the Inco matter. I welcome, by the way, his offer to go to the standing resources development committee, and thank him for that.

In view of the Minister of Labour's (B. Stephenson) statement on Friday that Canadian companies have been frozen out of the Japanese nickel market entirely, will the Premier tell the House if he discussed this problem during his trip to Japan? If so, with whom and with what result?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there was no specific reference to the nickel industry in my discussions in Japan. We touched upon a number of other industries.

The question of Inco being frozen out of the Japanese market is one way of describing it. I think the other way of describing it is that, as I understand it—and these are matters that will be clarified in my discussions with the chairman of Inco—the development in Indonesia actually provided access to the Japanese market in a way that might not otherwise have been available.

I would hope that in my discussions, and some may emerge tomorrow and certainly will on Thursday, I will be able to clarify that to a greater extent for the Leader of the Opposition. I think this is a matter that deserves exploration, I hope, in a constructive sort of way, if the resources standing committee deals with this issue as I have suggested.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: With great respect, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier; surely given the fact that he was undoubtedly aware of the grave difficulties facing the nickel industry, and given the fact it is one of Canada's and Ontario's largest and most important industries and the fact that Japan was one of the few countries buying nickel, can he explain why he didn't even raise the matter of the nickel industry during his much vaunted and touted trip to Japan?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I can't comment on how vaunted the trip to Japan was in the mind of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: How about touted?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Or touted; I really can't comment on those two descriptive terms. I can only say to the Leader of the Opposition that in my discussions, which were by and large general in nature, we really were suggesting to the Japanese business community that we would like to sell more of our products from Ontario to Japan; and secondly, we wished to see some joint venture development in the province of Ontario using Japanese technology—and to a certain extent financing; although, as the hon. the Leader of the Opposition knows full well, the extent of equity financing in Japan is somewhat less than traditionally, it is here in this jurisdiction.

I should also point out to the Leader of the Opposition that while Japan is still making quantities of steel, the fact of the matter remains that their own domestic market is down—their own internal orders for steel have somewhat diminished, and this is true of their total economy—and this was one of the reasons some of them are less enthusiastic at the moment about making investments either in this country or in several others.

I also pointed out, during that much vaunted and touted tour, which I found extremely interesting but somewhat tiring, that one of the problems we face is the perception that exists, or lack of understanding, of the political situation in Canada, and partially some of the decisions that have been made.

I would point out to the Leader of the Opposition, and more particularly to the leader of the New Democratic Party, one of the things they have difficulty in understanding in that country—and it is true in some others—is the fact that we have a federated state and that there can appear to be nine or 10 economic policies emanating from one country, which is not easy for a country that is a unitary state to understand.

It may come as a great surprise to the leader of the New Democratic Party that one of the areas of concern that was raised, both there and in West Germany, was the concern over the nationalization of the potash industry and whether this reflected on the economic policies of the province of Ontario. I assured them it did not.

Mr. Lewis: I'm glad they are watching socialist government here. It gives me heart.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: It is like watching a tarantula.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary which bears on the Premier's statement but not exactly on the Japanese dimension of it. May I ask it? Thank you, sir.

Given that Inco gave the Premier no advance notice whatsoever, and that he has not yet met with the chairman of Inco, and given that the Premier is going to refer it all to the resources development committee, why then can he not say to Inco, logically and reasonably, as Premier of Ontario, that he and his government will not permit the layoffs to occur at least until there is some—

Mr. Speaker: That is not a supplementary to the original question.

Mr. Lewis: I asked you, Mr. Speaker, if I could ask that—because it wasn't directly supplementary.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It wasn't related to either the question or to the answer.

Mr. Speaker: I had to find out whether it was supplementary, and I couldn't determine that until the member asked it. I have ruled that it is not supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: Okay, Mr. Speaker. I specifically made that request to tell you it wasn't supplementary.

Mr. S. Smith: My question is at least an attempt to be supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Again on the matter of the markets in Japan and what we can sell into that market. Considering the statement on Friday by the Minister of Natural Resources that—I think what he said was—"the whole nickel market has changed in the last few years," and he was speaking of the 75 per cent nickel matte which Japan and other countries want, will the Premier explain why Ontario has not kept up with these changes in the market and why he seems to have been so uninformed about the fact that the nickel market has changed in Japan, western Europe and elsewhere?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't pretend to be informed on every subject. I confess that, unlike the Leader of the Opposition, I don't really pretend to have that all-encompassing knowledge. But I do my best.

I would explain to the Leader of the Opposition that while I don't have this technical expertise to explain it to him, I am concerned that while certainly we as a government can alter certain policies, one policy I would not want to see altered, while I want us to remain totally competitive, would be a policy that might in the long run affect the economic welfare of Sudbury and its operations for the people in that community.

It is fine for the Leader of the Opposition to suggest as one of his constructive "suggestions" that we "Stop doing business in Guatemala," even though that plant doesn't come on stream for a year or so; or "You have no responsibility in Indonesia," and that is a solution to the problem. But I would also suggest to him that it is important from our standpoint that while we may adjust policies on matters of this kind at any time if it makes sense, one thing I would be very reluctant to do would be to alter a policy that would jeopardize the long-term employment opportunities of the people in Sudbury.

We are faced constantly with a desire which is legitimate on our part to improve the processing here so that more of it is done within this jurisdiction; and the fact remains that in terms of the product they are producing Inco and its product from Sudbury is competitive in the world marketplace—

Mr. S. Smith: Yes, even cheaper than Indonesia.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The truth of the matter is that the world marketplace is not buying. That is one of the practical realities that we face; for which I have profound regrets but which this government, and myself or any minister thereof do not have the power to alter. That is the basic problem facing Inco and the unfortunate workers of Inco situated in Sudbury and Thompson, Manitoba at this precise moment.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Just to establish whether this is a policy that has recently—in the last four or five days—been taken up by the government, or whether it's something it has had in mind for some time, did the Ontario government make any recommendations to the federal government as to our position about nickel tariffs in other countries in order to ensure greater access for Ontario's nickel in process to manufactured form? If so, what were those recommendations?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not to my knowledge. I don't pretend, once again, to be an expert in terms of tariffs, but my understanding is that it is not a question of tariff at this precise moment. Essentially—and I think if it is the decision of this House to get into a discussion with Inco in the resources development committee, this will emerge—the basic problem is not that of tariff, thank heavens. It's not, as faces us in some industries—and I think this is important to point out—our own economic situation, lack of productivity and lack of competitiveness that have created the situation.

Mr. Lewis: Not Inco.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It is not.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I say it is not. That is different from some other situations we face. I think it is important for the public to understand that it is something that is in terms of the marketplace, a situation where Inco can compete. They have a productive and efficient system and they have productive and efficient workers. But if people aren't buying then it's pretty darn tough to sell. It really is as simple as that. That may be an oversimplification, but that is, I think, the essential problem we face.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary: The Premier has not, in my judgement, adequately answered this question, and I would like to know the answer. Was he aware of the difficulties with Inco before his trip to Japan? If he was, why didn't he attempt to do something about it, like taking Ministry of Natural Resources people with him to enter into negotiations on the subject which may lead to changes in the Mining Act?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think certainly in the case of the members from Sudbury, because they have raised it in this House—they mentioned it, I think, in June, though I'm not sure whether it was in questions—there has been an awareness of the potential of the problem in the nickel industry. As I understand the facts, the market in the past 60 days, perhaps even in the last six weeks, has altered in a negative way even more rapidly than most had anticipated.

I think it is fair to state that if the member for London Centre is really expecting that one contract could be replaced by another or the supply could be replaced by another, one should take into account the contractual arrangements, I would assume. Secondly, I think I am right in this but I may be totally wrong, there may be some Japanese involvement in the plant in Indonesia—

Mr. S. Smith: Ten per cent.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes. I would expect that they would have some interest and some say in terms of where they buy.

Mr. Peterson: That wasn't the question I asked. Don't tell us all you know about nickel in five minutes or less, answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have endeavoured to answer the question. Once again, the member for London Centre may not have understood my answer. It may not be the answer he wanted to hear; it never is, but I have endeavoured to answer it to the best of my ability.

An hon. member: You haven't shown any ability.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, I know. We don't all have yours.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Germa: Supplementary: Accepting the Premier's theory that the problem is a world-wide problem because of overproduction in Canada and offshore, can he assure this House that the reduction in production is being carried out on an equitable basis by those two companies, Inco and Falconbridge, as far as their offshore productions are concerned?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have not been personally assured as yet, but it is one of those matters I intend to raise with the chairman of Inco on Thursday.

Mr. Lewis: That's it; that's right.

Mr. Speaker: We have had long enough supplementaries on that. The second question from the Leader of the Opposition.

LAYOFF OF NICKEL WORKERS

Mr. S. Smith: On the same topic, slightly related, my second question is to the Premier again. Is the Premier prepared, in his meetings with Inco officials, to use what influence he has to persuade the company to accept some of what I think are reasonable suggestions made by the union, regarding ways in which this blow to Sudbury, and to the people, can be mitigated; such suggestions as advanced pension arrangements, changes in overtime and other benefit arrangements, vacation schedules and possible supplementary benefits? Would the Premier use his influence with Inco to bring about at least, at the very least, the same arrangements that were in place in Port Colborne during the very unfortunate layoffs that occurred there recently? [2:30]

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in my statement, it would be my expectation that those three or four matters mentioned, and others that have been suggested from other sources, will be the subject of some discussion tomorrow. I said in my statement that those suggestions that seem to have some realistic or practical way of implementation, or at least consideration, would be part of the basis of my conversation with the chairman of the board of Inco on Thursday.

I would expect that those three or four matters, and I know several others, will be raised in the discussions with the company, union and federal officials tomorrow, and it will be from those discussions that we will be getting some hopefully practical and constructive suggestions.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Along the lines of mitigating the impact of this, is the Premier now prepared to offer a DREE arrangement to Eldorado to locate the uranium refinery in the Sudbury area or nearby?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I'm very anxious that any economic initiative that is proper be expedited as far as this government is concerned. With respect to the potential of the development on the North Shore, if it makes sense, if it can be worked out from an environmental point of view, if it is consistent with any policy of the government of Canada and is in all respects acceptable, then, of course, this could turn out to be a good site for it; but I can't tell the Leader of the Opposition, tying one to the other, that all of these circumstances will be met. We're anxious to see this problem resolved, but I'm sure he's aware of the complexity of this particular proposal and we're anxious to see that the right decision is made with the right terms and conditions.

Mr. S. Smith: No, DREE.

Hon. Mr. Davis: With respect, I don't think it is as simple as saying DREE money. That would be a federal matter in any event. It's not just a question of money. I don't think that's the only consideration.

Mr. Lewis: A question on the same subject: Since it emerges even in this question period that none of us, the Premier included, knows the facts about Inco, its Sudbury operation or its international operations, why will this government not rescind the Inco decision unless it is persuaded somewhere along the road that it contains some legitimate rationale? Why is the government letting Inco do it without response?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, of course, in the mind of the leader of the New Democratic Party it's a simple issue; and I'm saying, with respect, it is not that simple.

Mr. Warner: Do you ever answer a question?

Mr. Lewis: You have no answers.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The government of this province does not have the statutory authority to say to Inco or any other company: "Rescind that particular decision."

Mr. Lewis: Then ask for it. Give yourself the authority.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will not be seeking that authority, certainly at this time. As the leader of the New Democratic Party acknowledges—and this humility I find both new and interesting—he himself doesn't have all the facts. I think it is important for members of this House to have full knowledge of this particular issue. I will do my best to inform hon. members as to the extent of my knowledge and studies and meetings as we have them.

As I say, I have made the suggestion that International Nickel appear before the resources committee where the leader of the New Democratic Party himself, in his own inimitable fashion I'm sure, can elicit some of these observations. I'm not going to be here to defend International Nickel.

Mr. Lewis: That's what you are doing.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am here to see what we can do, as a government, to alleviate the problem.

Mr. Cassidy: Who's playing political games now? You are making cheap accusations.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In spite of all the member's prejudices, in spite of his philosophical approach, which is his and to which he is entitled, he is not going to sweep away a realistic situation where, in fact, there are not sufficient markets for what is being produced.

Mr. Lewis: What realistic situation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: He won't alter that with any approach that he has suggested.

Mr. Lewis: How do you know?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Nothing he has suggested will alter that.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Premier by way of supplementary: Does he realize that the entire community of Sudbury—MPPs; MPs; the mayor, who ran as a Conservative candidate; the regional chairman; the unions; the head of the Chamber of Commerce—all feel and express that this isn't some kind of short-term layoff, that this may be the beginning of a continuing dismantling of Inco's operations in Canada. Therefore, shouldn't the Premier be certain that all of us know what Inco's intentions are before he permits them to throw 2,800 people out of work?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if I were a resident of Sudbury, I would have concern about the immediate situation. I wouldn't minimize it for a moment. I am quite confident—

Mr. Makarchuk: You don't have to be a resident.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, I lived through a situation which was just as traumatic in my own home community in 1959. Most of the members were too young to remember it—

Mr. Lewis: I remember.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—but I do. I remember it well, and it was unpleasant.

Mr. Nixon: You're too old.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It was difficult.

Mr. Lewis: John Diefenbaker did it to you.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But believe it or not, the city of Brampton survived and today is a shade more prosperous than it was in 1959.

Mr. Deans: It had a distinct advantage.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There were a lot more than 2,800—there were 14,000 employees let out on that particular occasion. So I have some understanding of what's going on in Sudbury and what the people are facing.

But of this much I am confident, that this is not an action by Inco that relates to their long-term intent to move their production facilities out of Sudbury.

Mr. Lewis: How do you know? Do you know that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Because I am somewhat familiar as well with some of their long-term plans in terms of capital investment in Ontario—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, but they didn't tell you about this part of it.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—their complete confidence in the economy and the government of this province, of course, and their ability to compete in the international marketplace—

Mr. Mackenzie: What are their long-term plans?

Hon. Mr. Davis:—and they have no intention of moving out of the province.

Mr. Cassidy: How do you know?

Hon. Mr. Davis: That much I can tell you.

Mr. Makarchuk: It would be different, though, if they took their nickel with them, wouldn't it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: As the Treasurer has just pointed out, they have invested from 1970 until now, close to $1 billion in Sudbury. That's hardly the kind of action that a company would take if they intended to move out in two or three years.

Mr. Lewis: Did the Treasurer also inform the Premier that they've taken $1.7 billion profit out of Sudbury in the last 10 years, or did he neglect to say that to him as well?

I want to ask the Premier a very simple supplementary: If he has such confidence in his knowledge of their long-term economic investment in Ontario, how come he didn't have the faintest idea and how come he wasn't told that they were going to close down 2,800 workers in January 1978?

Hon. Mr. Davis: As I informed the leader of the New Democratic Party when we were discussing this, I believe on Friday last, the government was informed of this about 4:30 or 5 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon. I cannot answer for the head of Inco, nor am I suggesting—

Mr. Swart: That's really long-term notification.

Mr. Lewis: That's consultation.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's fine. I don't like it any more than anyone else.

Mr. Mackenzie: Then why do you apologize for them?

Hon. Mr. Davis: But my job here is to see what we can do to help, not to come here and say Inco should have told us two days before, or two weeks before—

Mr. Lewis: How can you trust them?

Hon. Mr. Davis:—I doubt that it would have altered the facts that we presently face. I think our task in this House and the task of this government is to see what we can do to help, not spend two hours or two weeks trying to find somebody to blame, some way to play politics and some way to cloud what are the basic issues and what we can do about it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West with his second question.

Mr. Lewis: Understanding the limitations of stockpiling as an economic tool, does the Premier not think that since we have stockpiled butter, wheat and uranium successfully in situations analogous to this, he might urge upon the federal government a short-term stockpiling route which would allow those 2,800 people to maintain their jobs while we look at the marketplace he's described?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Here, once again—and I confess my limitations—I am not an expert, but I think the—

Mr. Mackenzie: We know.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—well, I know it; I recognize that.

Mr. Breagh: It is becoming a little more obvious.

Mr. Speaker: The question referred specifically to stockpiling.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, stockpiling; I think the concern about stockpiling and urging the government of Canada to stockpile may just not be realistic—and this is something that I think can be explored; I'm not saying no. Part of the problem at the moment, I think, relates to nickel users running down their inventories—I'm only guessing at this—because they know that there's a year's supply immediately available in Sudbury. If you stockpile and continue to produce and the market doesn't improve, you could make the situation worse for the workers in Sudbury.

Mr. Lewis: It couldn't be worse than losing their jobs.

Hon. Mr. Davis: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I know that it's serious, but I don't want to be a part of a policy that will make it either more serious or more long-term than it needs to be. I would urge upon the leader of the New Democratic Party that while this may appear to be, on the surface, a simplistic solution, it might in fact turn out to be just the opposite.

Mr. Deans: It might not, you know.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm prepared to explore anything that makes sense. I've got one of the most open minds I know. It may be limited but, at least, it's open—

Mr. Breithaupt: Almost breezy.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —which is more than I can say for a lot of the members opposite.

Mr. Speaker: We'll have one final supplementary. We've spent over 23 minutes on this.

Mr. Lewis: I take it then, Mr. Speaker, if the Premier responds that way to stockpiling, what is really being said here today, when you strip away all of what you call "the political dimension," is that we have utterly no answer for this predicament; not a single specific initiative to suggest, at this point in any event, on behalf of those workers as a consequence of Inco's action?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think that is an unfair summation.

Mr. Breagh: But true.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am not suggesting that we have a solution to the problem.

Mr. Speaker: It's a questionable supplementary, too.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the hon. member is saying that we have not found a way to persuade Inco that it is in the interests of its employees, the community and the province to continue producing when they have no one to buy that which they produce—which, means ultimately, the company is in more difficulty, and so is the community, and so are the workers on a long-term basis—yes, Mr. Speaker, I'm saying that it is unfortunate, but we have to accept one of the realities. The basic reality is, and I think our discussions have to flow from this, that at this moment unless everybody is being misled—and I haven't heard even the members opposite accusing Inco of this—they do, in fact, have a very substantial surplus of product. There is a surplus on the world market and they, in fact, cannot sell. If somebody over there can prove that to be wrong, that adds another dimension, but I think, in fairness, they will have great difficulty in doing so. I wish they could.

Mr. Peterson: I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: No, there will be no more supplementaries on this item. We have spent over 23 minutes on it.

Mr. Peterson: But it is a very important issue.

Mr. Speaker: You cannot question the ruling of the Speaker during oral questions.

Mr. Reid: We have had only one supplementary on this question.

Mr. Speaker: We spent 30 minutes on Friday on this matter, and we've spent 25 minutes today. I recognize the hon. member for Kitchener-Wilmot with a new question.

OHC LAND SALES

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the Minister of Housing. Perhaps this is an issue that the government can do something about.

Given the fact that the minister has travelled around this province saying very clearly that there is need for more low-cost housing; given the fact that it's well understood that one of the problems in bringing low-cost housing on the market is the very high cost of serviced land, and given the fact that the land banks which his ministry has set up were built very specifically for the purpose of helping to bring low-cost serviced land on the market, what does he believe is a justifiable rate of profit for OHC when it sells its land?

Mr. Deans: That's doubtful, even that is doubtful. Tell him what Stanley Randall told us.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I am not about to suggest what is a justifiable rate of profit. I indicated when I first announced our new land policy in this House that we would sell land at the low end of the market, and that's exactly what we're doing.

Mr. Sweeney: Is the minister aware of the fact that in my community he is selling land supposedly for low-cost housing at a profit of at least 100 per cent on what he paid for it, and that by using market value as the basis, he is defeating the whole purpose of his intent? He is building in the speculative part of the profit, the very thing that he has said he wants to prevent, the very thing that local builders say prevents them from building low-cost housing, the very thing that the planners said was wrong. How can you justify it?

Mr. Deans: It has always been the government policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sweeney: How can you justify it?

Mr. Deans: Tell him, John; you have always done that.

Mr. Speaker: The question is, after all of the editorializing, "How can you justify it?" Does the minister have an answer?

Mr. Makarchuk: Darcy needs the money. [2:45]

Mr. S. Smith: What was the minister's answer?

Mr. Breithaupt: There was no answer.

Mr. Breaugh: Supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: There was no answer, so there can't be a supplementary.

Mr. Breaugh: To the original question?

Mr. Speaker: Do you have a new question?

Mr. Breithaupt: On a point of order, can I be advised if the minister is following the rule 27(i)? Is he, in his discretion, declining to answer that question?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't following any rule 27(i), I had just resumed my seat during the interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister can answer in any way he chooses, and he doesn't have the floor right now.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: The minister doesn't have the floor and the hon. member for Kitchener didn't have the floor to ask the question. If the member for Oshawa has a new question, I will recognize him.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think this may be appropriate. I think the minister of—

Mr. Speaker: There is nothing out of order at the present time so there can't be a point of order. I will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa.

Mr. Eaton: He was going to answer and was interrupted.

Mr. S. Smith: That was the best answer you ever gave, John.

Mr. Speaker: Does the member have a question?

Mr. Breaugh: Yes, I do. I would like to ask the Minister of Housing if it is accurate that the lands his ministry bought in this Kitchener area some nine years ago at $3,500 an acre, it is now marketing at $90,000 to $95,000 an acre? Is that accurate?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I can't give the exact price per acre. I can tell the member that the land was purchased in 1969—and I am referring now to the estimated land cost as I have it here—at $750,000 and the development cost was $4,350,00, for a total—in phase one only, which is 126.5 acres—of $8,070,000. Now, if I say that the land was purchased at $35,000 an acre, I will leave that to the member's own mathematics. I would also tell him that the land is being sold at the low end of the market value; what the price is will depend upon what the zoning is, as is usual in most cases in the sale of land.

Mr. Breaugh: I wonder if the minister could then present to the House within the next day or so the exact figures that he is using? What were his exact costs, what are his exact sale prices, because I have seen an indication in the past—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, certainly. It is either the fourth or fifth time they have been presented in the House. I would be quite happy to present those figures.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: If the Minister of Housing doesn't have the exact figures of selling, is it not true that the total value to his ministry, his so-called book value of that land, is $30,000 per acre and he is selling it in the range of $75,000 to $95,000. Is that not true? His book figures.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to enter into a debate on numbers with the hon. member because I don't know whether he is referring to the book value for raw land or the book value for developed land. As he well knows, sir—as I just said a few moments ago in response to another question—our development costs on 126 acres of that land were over $4,350,000, so I am not going to say that it's $30,000 or $35,000. I would like to get the exact costs of what our book value would be at this particular time, and I am estimating that our book value on that 126 acres of land would be in the area of $8 million plus.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, let's take it from another point of view. Using the minister's figure of $8 million, the best estimate from the planning department of the city of Kitchener is that he is going to get $17 million for spending $8 million. Would he agree with that?

Mr. Breithaupt: That's 100 per cent.

Mr. Sweeney: Over 100 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I am not sure whether the hon. member is dealing with the 305 acres of land in total or phase one, which is 126 acres—and I am not too sure that he is—

Mr. Sweeney: We're dealing with the same amount of land that the minister is talking about.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: To begin with, he is not accurate on the numbers he is using. I estimate—and I say quite openly—the total amount of profit, if you will, on this land will be in the vicinity of $3 million.

Mr. Sweeney: No way.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I don't have to respond any more than with the figures I have. The hon. member has not done his homework.

Mr. Sweeney: I have the figures.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: With the greatest of respect, he became involved in this issue over one piece of land—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been answered, thank you.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The hon. member hasn't done his homework. Let him count his fingers.

Mr. Sweeney: I got it from the planning department of the city of Kitchener.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Oh, do your homework!

Mr. Lewis: You shouldn't make a 35 per cent profit on public land.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I won't.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: He doesn't make it; the people do.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

LOSS OF DOCTORS

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, last week I was asked by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. Johnson) to report on physician emigration. Today I received such a report and I would like to table it for the members' information. It will be distributed to all of the members.

There have also been reports in the press about growing numbers of doctors leaving Ontario, and I would like to set the record straight.

Available data indicate that in the past few years the movement of Ontario physicians has increased from the 1971-72 level, when it was almost zero. But there is no hard evidence that the numbers of physicians lost represent an attrition greater than the average over the years. The real problem continues to be one of growing oversupply.

While there was a temporary drop in 1975, the average rate of attrition for physicians has been three per cent over the years, and recent emigration has not changed this.

One measure of the high living standards Ontarians share is the extent to which every resident, of whatever age and income, is covered by a basic but comprehensive government-sponsored health plan. Not only have we one of the best health insurance plans in the world, but it is backed up by some of the best doctors in the world.

I must say that I am very concerned about the morale of the doctors in Ontario, and our government is working closely with the medical profession—with the Ontario Medical Association, and with the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario.

Members will be aware of a statement in the press today about alleged bureaucratic harassment. I issue to the OMA or to any concerned party an invitation to bring to my attention any example of bureaucratic harassment. I make a firm commitment that as Minister of Health I will continue to address any such situation.

Ontario doctors have concerns and they share them with my ministry, so we can work them out together. I am aware of their concerns and we do meet regularly to discuss them. In short, I consider our relationship with the medical profession to be a good one. We are working together to get the real job done—looking after the health of every citizen of this province.

We have no shortage of doctors in Ontario, and we do not expect such a shortage to develop.

I am sorry that in the preparation of my answer some of the figures were not put into the text of my answer. This will be distributed to all members for their perusal and perhaps for their questions at a later time.

Mr. Reid: Supplementary: May I ask the minister, when he speaks of oversupply, what he is doing about the lack of supply of doctors in northern Ontario, specifically in communities like Ignace, Emo, Fort Frances and other areas like that? And other than the subsidy program that has been in effect for some years, what policy has the ministry come up with to supply doctors for those areas in northern Ontario that are grossly underserved?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am looking for some figures, Mr. Speaker; I had the numbers here for the underserved area program. At the present, out of 285 positions in the underserved area program, there are about 22 vacancies, I believe. And out of the 99 dentistry positions in the underserved area program, I think we are running at about 18 or 20 vacancies in that area.

This program, I think, has been eminently successful; it is one which has been examined by jurisdictions all over the world. In recent times visitors to Ontario have included the Minister of Health of Sweden and the Secretary of Health of the United States, both of whom have wanted to learn about our underserved area program and have gone away very impressed that it is one of the most thorough of its kind in the world.

Mr. Reid: Supplementary: I realize it is a pretty good program; I suggested it 10 years ago.

Mr. Speaker: Do you have a question?

Mr. Reid: But if we have this oversupply, what specific policies, other than the subsidy program, is the minister using to get doctors into these communities that are short of them? That's the question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As the hon. member knows, there are a number of instances where we fund clinics, if you will. There is one in Ignace, if my memory serves me correctly, where we fund the clinic on a global budget, and it hires the medical and nursing staff. That's an alternative that's available where such a clinic could be viable.

Otherwise, we are relying on the subsidy and, through Dr. Copeman in my ministry, we're working very hard to fill the vacancies as soon as possible.

EDWARDSBURGH LAND ASSEMBLY

Mr. Sterling: This is a question directed to the Minister of Industry and Tourism. In view of the comments contained in the Ontario Land Corporation annual report regarding the Edwardsburgh land site and recent speculation as to the transfer of responsibility of the site from Industry and Tourism to Natural Resources, can the minister indicate whether he is willing to table the final Dillon report on the land use capability of the site so that the local communities can have meaningful input before any final decision on this matter is made?

Mr. Breithaupt: We had that last week.

Mr. Nixon: That's not the Tory way.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, first of all, may I correct a misunderstanding—the land that presently is held in Edwardsburgh is not held by the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. The land is held by the Ontario Land Corporation. We as a ministry have been assigned the responsibility of trying to find industries that would locate in a major industrial park in Edwardsburgh.

Members will recall that some months ago we contracted with Dillon to produce—

Mr. Nixon: They still think you're off your rocker.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: We asked Dillon to put together a report indicating clearly the land-use factors, how the land should be divided and what other purposes it might be put into other than industrial use.

It was reported to this House, and it's been in the press, that Dillon clearly indicated to us that a large acreage could be used for industrial purposes, particularly that land adjacent to the St. Lawrence, while other lands could be used for recreational purposes, for forestry production and agricultural production.

The report has been with our ministry. There has been input to the report from the mayors and the reeves of the various communities, and I shall take under consideration bringing the report into a public position.

Mr. Nixon: You are off your rocker.

Mr. Samis: Supplementary: Can the minister assure the municipalities in eastern Ontario that there will be due opportunity for input given to the municipalities before any decision is made as to future use of this site? Secondly, on any use in terms of forestry, will he assure us there will be consultation with the forest industry, namely, the pulp and paper plants, in eastern Ontario before any decision is made?

Mr. Breithaupt: The same input they gave when you bought it.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I have no reason to indicate otherwise to this House. We will ask for the input of all of those at the political level and at the industrial level in eastern Ontario as to the future use of Edwardsburgh land.

Mr. Samis: Before any decision?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: There has been a very clear indication that a large acreage there can be used for forestry production. We are going to investigate it. The Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller) and others will work together in relation to that.

Regardless of who is asked to do what with this land in the interim, we are looking for industries for it. I can assure members that the ministry will continue to press to find large industries to go into Edwardsburgh township property. Let me make it very clear—

Mr. Speaker: The supplementary dealt specifically with forestry.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: No, it didn't, Mr. Speaker. I think it dealt with other uses as well, if I interpret the remarks. Very clearly, we will look at all aspects of it, but while the land is sitting there we are going to find some practical use for it until we find industry.

Mr. Sweeney: Give it to John.

JAILING OF WOMEN

Mr. Stong: In the absence of the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea), I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services.

In view of that minister's contemplation of the imposition of five-year jail terms on women and in the light of his policy statement in the Sunday Star yesterday: "We don't believe any more, that any mother is better than no mother, and we have facilities to look after her children"—

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: That is a sexist remark.

Mr. Stong: —has the Minister of Correctional Services discussed this government policy with his colleague, and if, as he advocates, there is a large-scale imprisonment of women, what arrangements has this minister made to assist and look after the children involved?

An hon. member: Put them all to work.

Mr. Breithaupt: Wait till Barbara Yaffe gets that one.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I must say I was not aware that there had been a policy decision on the part of the government on that particular matter. I have not had an opportunity to discuss it with my colleague, the Minister of Correctional Services, and I assure the member I will as soon as he is available.

Mr. Breithaupt: That's strike one.

Hon. Mr. Norton: However, should it become government policy I can assure members that my ministry is ready, willing and able to respond to ensure the welfare of the children who might be affected by any such policy.

[3:00]

Mr. Sweeney: Do you mean you are really going to try to follow it?

OTTAWA BOARD OF CONTROL

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Treasurer concerning his request to the city of Ottawa to withdraw its private bill concerning the abolition of board of control.

In view of the report of Mr. Hickey, the Mayo commission report and the very strong request of city council to go ahead with the abolition of the board of control, can he assure the House that the amendments to the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton Act in the spring will include the abolition of Ottawa's board of control?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I can't give that assurance until we have had a chance to examine the whole of the Mayo report. On the other hand, it is obvious that other legislation which has dealt with regions has in many instances wound up boards of control. So I think it is a reasonable assumption, if not an out-and-out commitment.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the statements made by the members for Ottawa South (Mr. Bennett) and for Ottawa West (Mr. Baetz) who did not like the city's request, can the minister assure the House that he will let the city of Ottawa know his intentions within the near future so that if they have to proceed by private bill they have ample warning?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: As soon as I know what my intentions are they will be announced in this House.

NURSES' DISPUTE

Mr. Lane: I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Health. Is the minister aware that the public health nurses in the Sudbury-Manitoulin district have been on strike since last Thursday morning? If he is aware of it, will he try to get these two groups together to try to settle the differences?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am aware there has been a strike in place in that unit since Thursday. The report I had, at least as of Friday, is that the board is going to try to get together with some of its employees to try to work out the differences. At this point in time, we are not intervening.

Mr. Lane: In view of the great distances covered by these nurses, would the minister contact the medical health officer in Sudbury to see just how acute the situation is at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I didn't quite catch the first part of the question but I take it the hon. member is asking that we ensure that the vital services of the health unit are as much as possible maintained. That is something we would monitor on a daily basis. I should point out that if there were to be any provincial government involvement in the labour dispute, it would be with the assistance of my colleague, the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson).

SKYWAY TOLLS

Mr. Bradley: A question for the provincial Treasurer: Last week the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) tabled an answer to a question I had in the House indicating that the tolls on the Burlington Skyway and Garden City Skyway produced a revenue of $4.28 million in the last full year of operation. In light of the Treasurer's expressed concern about the anticipated revenues for this fiscal year, has he given consideration to reimposing the tolls on these two bridges and allowing our American friends to assist us in paying?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. Swart: In view of the statement by the PMLC to the Treasurer last Friday, and I quote: "The PMLC considers the unilateral breach of the Edmonton commitment by the government of Ontario totally unacceptable," is he now willing to move back and negotiate his arbitrary revamping of the Edmonton commitment formula, which reduced the commitment from $421 million to $177 million or just a 5.3 per cent increase for those local government and agencies for next year?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The hon. member was there on Friday morning and he heard my answer, which was no.

Mr. Deans: Do you mean you haven't changed your mind since Friday?

Mr. Swart: Doesn't the Treasurer realize that this will likely force property taxes in 1978 up to a greater extent than the average 12.8 per cent for the last three years, and wouldn't everyone else but himself think that perhaps it's a rotten way to use the municipalities and the property taxpayers?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the answer to both parts of the member's question, as I heard them, is no.

CAS BUDGETS

Mr. G. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. In view of the Children's Aid Society's budgetary difficulties in the county of Simcoe, what programs will the minister be putting forth to end those problems?

Hon. Mr. Norton: The budgetary experience of that particular Children's Aid Society is not that different from a group of others whose budgets are still unresolved for this fiscal year.

We began communicating with that particular society in April of this year, indicating the degree of adjustment that would be made in their original estimates, pursuant to notification that each society got in December of last year. Since that time there has been a series of meetings with officials of my ministry going on throughout the summer. As of the early part of August or mid-August, the society was notified formally by me, of the final adjustment that would be in their 1977-78 budget.

That, as in the case of all Children's Aid Societies is a matter which is subject to appeal by the society to a committee of review, and we have been notified by the Simcoe County Children's Aid Society that they wish to have such a review.

I have appointed the chairman of the review committee and we are presently awaiting the appointment of the municipal representative by the municipalities affected. I have not yet received notification of their choice, but as soon as that takes place, I will be in a position to fix a date for the hearing and they will have a further opportunity to present their concerns. The committee will then recommend a final solution to me.

I would point out that in the longer term, I am well aware of the fact that this year there have been delays, as there have been for many years, in the processing of Children's Aid Society budgets. I have been working with my staff in an effort to try to improve upon that procedure. At the present time we anticipate receipt of the Children's Aid Societies' estimates for 1978 by approximately the middle of November and will immediately begin processing those with a view to being able to give them—

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. minister shorten his answer?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I realize that this is a question of considerable concern to members on both sides of the House and I simply wish to outline—

Mr. S. Smith: Just say yes.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I was asked what programs or what approaches the ministry had to try to resolve this kind of problem.

Mr. Warner: You have had enough time to explain the shambles.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Given the opportunity, I will complete that answer. It is our plan by the end of February to be in a position to notify the societies of what the adjustments will be in their budgets for that fiscal year. So the whole process should be moved up by six or eight months.

WINTARIO FUNDS

Mr. Kerrio: I have a question of the Minister of Culture and Recreation. Does the minister recall in the statement from the Treasurer that the major change in our financial situation is a significant downward adjustment in revenue? In the words of the Premier today these are difficult times. Would the minister think it is time to reconsider the application of Wintario funds—the spending of them?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The criteria for the Wintario grants program are under constant and regular review.

Mr. Kerrio: Maybe a more direct question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the financial difficulties in the province of Ontario, and job problems and such, would the minister reconsider and, maybe, put to this House the question of the reallocation of lottery funds to other purposes in our economy?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The hon. member will know that section 9 of the Ontario Lottery Corporation Act is very specific with respect to the areas to be given attention by the Ontario grant program.

Mr. Kerrio: I just ask the minister to consider. I know the specifics.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Would the hon. member drop me a note as to other areas in a specifically designated field which he thought should be covered by the program; no doubt he would share that information with me? I would point out that it's obviously against the general government policy; these are seen as dedicated funds and do not form part of the general revenues of the province.

Mr. Kerrio: That's right. That's what I would like to change.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You supported the legislation.

TTC FUNDING

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications: Why does the province of Ontario want to run the Toronto Transit Commission?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Resign.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Resign, you are a disaster.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I was going to say I don't know—

An hon. member: He is probably right.

Hon. Mr. Snow:—but I'd like to assure the hon. member that the province of Ontario has no intention or desire whatsoever to run the Toronto Transit Commission.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary: Is the minister then saying that he will take the strings off the conditional grant for operating expenses, so that Metro is not forced either to raise property taxes or the fares?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't know what strings the hon. member is referring to. To my knowledge there are basically no strings attached to the operating grants that this province makes in a very substantial amount to the TTC for operation of its system. We make two types of grants to Metro; we don't make any grants to TTC. We make a grant to Metro for operating expense. We met with the officials of Metropolitan Toronto this year and they are quite agreeable and satisfied, I believe, with the system as it's working and with the formula and the amount of grant that they will receive.

We also make grants, as the hon. member knows, I'm sure, in the amount of 75 per cent of the capital expenditures. My staff and the staff of the TTC, the staff of Metro and the budget chief of Metro between them have decided on their level of spending for this present year and for next year; and our budget has made provision for our 75 per cent of that level of spending. So I don't know what strings the hon. member is referring to.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Does the minister not recognize that the 75 per cent grant for capital might in certain instances be much better used to supplement operating expenses in order to prevent transit fare increases or property tax increases, because fare increases would further reduce ridership? Why does he not simply allocate an amount of money and let Toronto decide whether it wants to build such things as the light rail vehicle to Scarborough, or whether it wants to reduce its transit fares?

Hon. Mr. Snow: In the legislation there are two provisions for grants. I would not be prepared to consider removing the division between the operating and the capital grants, because they're two completely separate programs.

Mr. Warner: Is the minister not aware that a letter came from his ministry indicating that Metro must collect 70 per cent of the operating cost by way of the fare box, otherwise it does not get 15 per cent from the province of Ontario? And that the Metro chairman, Paul Godfrey—I gather a friend of the side over there—

Mr. Breithaupt: At times.

Mr. Warner: —reacts objectively and reacts against the letter that has come from your ministry?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't think the hon. member has his figures right at all. First of all, about a year ago, or a little earlier than this last year, I announced a new formula for all municipal transit systems whereby the provincial contribution would be based on a percentage of all operating costs of the system. I believe the percentage for Metropolitan Toronto is something in the neighbourhood of 13.75 per cent of total operating cost. This is based on the target established for Metropolitan Toronto of raising 72.5 per cent of their operating costs from the fare box, and the 13.75 per cent is 50 per cent of the difference between the anticipated fare box revenues and the operating costs of the system.

This leaves the municipalities with the option, if they can have a more efficient system, to still get the 13.75 per cent even if they get a higher revenue from the fare box, which would cut down on municipal expenditures.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

MINISTRY OF CONSUMER AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Davison moved first reading of Bill 75, An Act to amend the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Davison: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to require the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations to submit an annual report to the assembly, and thereby to the consumers of Ontario, so that we know what they're doing.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply.

On vote 1601, item 1, main office:

Mr. Chairman: When the committee rose last session, we were discussing item 1 of vote 1601. Any further comments?

Mr. Stong: I notice in dealing with the main office that the projected estimates for 1977-78 are $638 million. I also notice that in the material supplied to me for the Solicitor General the estimates for 1976-77 for the main office were $606 million. I'm wondering how he correlates that with the report of the public accounts committee which reported for the year ended March 31, 1977, an estimate of $226 million and Management Board approval of $36 million, making a total of $262 million. How does that correlate with the increase he is requesting under this particular vote in his estimates for this year?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, if you could wait for a minute, I think I'll have that information.

Mr. Chairman: I believe the hon. minister has the answer.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. If the hon. member is looking at the public accounts report to which he referred—and I think he's looking at estimates under what was then vote 1501, at a $226,000 estimate for item 1 and the Management Board approvals of $36,000—if he'll look at the next estimate of $380,000 under vote 1501, item 2, my information is that they have merged those two votes in the 1977-78 estimates.

Mr. Stong: I'm still having a little difficulty then, because the public accounts committee reported—and the minister will notice the explanation on page 253; it breaks it down item by item on the actual cost.

Just for my own understanding, the estimates for 1976-77 showed salaries and wages at $395,000, where in fact the actual cost was $218,277. That does not appear to me to be a merger between those two votes. However, I stand to be corrected on that. There's quite a discrepancy. Then this year the estimates are up to $416,500 over $218,277 for last year. If you take those two figures, the increase is almost double. I can't see any indication in the material of the combining of those two votes.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I wonder if the hon. member would tell us the place where he's getting the $395,000 from.

Mr. Stong: In the material supplied by the minister in the black book. It's under vote 1601, item 1, of the estimates for 1976-77 in the column for salaries and wages, which is $395,000. It was, in fact, for the same period. That's the estimate. It doesn't seem to separate those two votes, as the minister has indicated. Public accounts has another amount that is much less, and this year we're seeking much more.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I am not sure we have all the answers as clearly as we should have.

The answers are all here. What we are trying to do is put down in this year's estimates a number of figures from last year's estimates, some of which have been shifted about a little bit. Among them, there is an item for some $60,000 for legal expenses which have been transferred. That helps to add some confusion.

As I understand it, you are looking at salary and wages in the 1976-77 estimates of $173,000 and unclassified salaries of $17,000, which total $190,000. If we then head over to the main office in 1976-77, we get a number of figures here: Salaries and wages, $117,000; unclassified salaries, $26,000; then that legal figure of $60,000 comes in; overtime, $2,000, and attendance bonuses, $300, which gives us a total of $205,300.

I don't feel that you are going to be able to follow those figures from what I have been saying here. What we had better do for you at the supper break is give you a breakdown where you can follow where we have taken them out of last year's budget and placed them into this year's budget, if that will be satisfactory. I know it's confusing but when you transfer a few items from one budget in one year to another place in the budget the next year, such as was done with legal expenses, it does add to that confusion. If we can give those figures to you at the supper break, I think that will make it easier for you as well as myself to follow.

Mr. Stong: I wonder if I could have some explanation with respect to the $60,000 legal expenses. Is that outside of the lawyers that the ministry employs and, if so, to what firm was that paid and for what?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That is one of the items we are talking about that is for this year, shown in this place this year. Last year they were shown as a separate item. In other words, this year they are shown as part of the main office, where we think they are more properly shown, and last year they were shown as a separate item.

The $60,000 consists of the salaries of two lawyers who really belonged to the Attorney General's ministry but who have been attached to our ministry, Mr. John Ritchie and Mr. David Spring. They have one secretary between them. It covers two lawyers' and one secretary's salary.

Mr. Stong: Is that $60,000 representing salaries for the two lawyers and the secretary from the Attorney General's department? Are they on the Attorney General's payroll as well? I am concerned about a spill-over into the different ministries in this area in Justice policy. I am just concerned whether this represents something that could be combined in the ministries rather than separate.

[3:30]

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: They are not shown in the Attorney General's estimates, but in our estimates. For appointment and responsibility all of the solicitors throughout the whole government are considered as members of the Attorney General's staff who are giving legal advice, I believe. They are not shown, however, in the Attorney General's budget, but in the budgets of the various ministries.

When I say all lawyers, there are other lawyers such as my deputy minister who is a solicitor. I don't put him in that category; but those who are giving legal advice to the ministry.

Mr. Lupusella: As far as I see, it seems that from item 1 to item 7 there was an increase of $383,000. I heard the concern about those two lawyers working for the Solicitor General by providing legal assistance to him, and my main question is if it is possible, instead of having two lawyers in his office in relation to legal problems which might arise from time to time, that the Solicitor General could use the staff of the Attorney General for such assistance maybe this would save some money?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, of the two solicitors that we have, the junior of the two works almost exclusively for the Ontario Provincial Police. They have a number of ongoing problems on a daily basis and he works almost exclusively, as I say, with them. Those are for internal problems. I am not saying that he gives advice in connection with prosecutions at all, but just dealing with the legal questions that arise within the operations of the Ontario Provincial Police.

The other, Mr. Ritchie, who is the senior of the two, is the one in charge of drafting our various regulations and any proposed legislation that we may have. He also answers a number of legal questions, some of them that I see the most of are those dealing with the interpretation of the holiday and Sunday closing Act. I can't see that either one of them has any spare time.

As a matter of fact, I am pressing Mr. Ritchie to bring forward a little faster, if he can do so, some of the legislation that I want to put before the House. Our concern is, of course, that the House is not able to absorb the legislation as quickly as I might like to put it before you. Therefore, Mr. Ritchie is not behind as far as the House is concerned, but he has a heavy load as far as the ministry is concerned.

I don't see that we could get along with any less. Also, of course, we have problems coming up from time to time through the coroners. They have a variety of legal problems and they seek either the advice of Mr. Ritchie or Mr. Spring in regard to the matter of interpretation of the law that the coroners raise from time to time.

They serve the whole ministry, and I think if you look at the various ministries of the government you will find, when it comes to legal advice, for a ministry that is actively engaged in the law we are probably running as closely and as efficiently as any ministry in this regard.

Mr. Lupusella: With all respect to the minister's statement, I realize that there is a need, in fact, to seek legal assistance from the two lawyers involved. The reason I have been raising this particular concern is that, as we heard and read in the newspapers lately, almost 100 OPP officers are going to be laid off. I don't know when, and if, the Solicitor General in fact is going to follow this procedure to lay off 100 OPP officers. In northern Ontario, for example, there was a particular request for OPP officers; they do need them. Instead of following this kind of routine in relation to laying off the OPP officers, is there any other way the Solicitor General can trim different sectors of his branch? It is something which is not really necessary; we don't have to sacrifice 100 OPP officers. I would like to have an answer for that.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I am very pleased to have this opportunity to say a few words on that subject which, as we know, made a few headlines over the weekend.

I was interviewed by the Globe and Mail last Friday afternoon and as a result we had a flurry of stories over the weekend, some of them suggesting, as the hon. member for Dovercourt has done, that this was about to happen. My assurance to the press and my assurance to this House is that it is not about to happen without a great deal more examination. My expressed hope is that it will not happen at all.

The cabinet has issued a direction to us, like all of the ministries of government, that we should curtail expenditures where possible. This, of course, might lead in some cases to the curtailment of staff. I think that's very healthy and very good to examine this problem, and as in the other ministries, I asked my people to examine how we could go about this.

I think the hope of the Management Board and Treasury was that some curtailment of staff could take place by not filling the positions created by attrition. We're very fortunate in my ministry that the OPP do not have a sizable attrition rate. In other words, these are people who take the work on as a lifetime career. Many of those who might be unsuitable are weeded out in the early process before they become permanent—during the probationary period. By the time they become accepted officers on the force, they are determined to make it a lifetime career and we are satisfied that they are capable of making it a lifetime career. So we have very little attrition in the uniformed personnel of the OPP.

When we examined it—and as I say, it was a healthy exercise that we should examine it—we found that we could not meet any great savings by simply not re-appointing by reason of attrition. If we were to make any kind of a saving, it would have to be by reduction of the numbers of the junior officers, because they were the people without seniority and the people who, in the ordinary course, would go first.

My officials reported back to me very quickly that this is what their examination showed. I immediately made my concerns known to certain other members of the cabinet, including the Treasurer and the Chairman of Management Board and the Premier himself. The instructions I received at that time from them—I say instructions; the suggestions I received—were that certainly there was to be no dismissal of uniformed people at the present time until cabinet had reassessed the position in regard to all of the uniformed staff.

That reassessment is presently being taken. I hope to present to the Management Board very shortly the problem that we have. I am hopeful—and in fact expect—that some relief from that program will be given the OPP. I said to the question when it was raised—and of course there is no denying that we were looking at this possibility, but when the possible ways we can achieve it are reported back, I am satisfied that we are not going to achieve it in that way—by any reduction of OPP personnel.

I would remind you that we have a lot invested in these people. They have received extensive training, extensive screening and it is the young people we need in the OPP, people who we can move up into some of the northern detachments, some of the places that are not quite as desirable as other locations in the province. Certainly I have no thought that any of them will be dismissed because these are the people we perhaps need the most—the young and the new constables.

The following and overriding point I would like to make is that the province and the government regard law and order as a very essential part of the program of government. In these times of trouble when many people are calling for more policing, we are not about to reduce provincial policing.

I would remind you what we have done for the municipal forces. The municipal forces last year received greater grants on the per capita basis. I know those grants were unconditional grants, but they are based on the population and earmarked for police work. Last year we increased those, both to the regional and the municipal forces. It would be a little inconsistent for us to increase the grants municipally and reduce our own forces.

A further point: you will recall that in March of this year I announced that we had received another $1.25 million to help us in our fight against organized crime. Some additional officers were taken on as a result of that. I think that organized crime has improved—

Mr. Cunningham: Tell us all about it.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: When I say improved, I think it has been reduced a little since last March. But again it would be a little inconsistent, having given this extra money in the spring, to decide, a few months later, that we should retract it.

So, yes, the problem was examined. But when the exercise is looked at and the results of that exercise are made known to cabinet, I feel confident that we will not be reducing the police force and attempting to save money in that way.

Mr. Lupusella: I would like to make a short comment on that, if I may. I am really glad to hear that the Solicitor General has taken such a position and will protect those OPP members who are already on the force, in view of the total amount of money which the province of Ontario is spending on the OPP. I also would like to have an assurance from the Solicitor General as to whether or not he will protect, in some way, the service and the programs which the native police officers have initiated in order that no cuts will affect the native communities as well.

Mr. Chairman: I might say some of the questions properly should come under vote 1604. However if the minister wishes to complete the answer to that question, it would be all right.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In that this will be a final decision of cabinet, I, of course, am unable to give as definite assurance as I would like to be able to do. But I think I mentioned the other day that I couldn't say what the odds were but I thought that they were close to 90 per cent that we would not be reducing personnel.

The hon. member for Dovercourt makes reference to our native police program. It is one of our very successful programs. I think it is doing a great deal to establish a rapport among not only the police and the natives but, through the police, the civilian population off the reserves. I have the native chiefs asking for more police all of the time. In view of the fact that it is so successful and that that is where we want our young constables, both native and otherwise, I think if there should be any reduction—and the chance for reduction is slight—that the native program would be the last place that we would make that reduction.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any further questions on item 1? The member for Lakeshore. [3:45]

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, with your indulgence—and I'll test it—normally in estimates the initial questions under the main office vote or the first vote have within reason—whatever that is—fairly wide-ranging elements. I have some questions on that, while I suppose it could be argued they would fall elsewhere. At the same time, in my previous experience there have been no real objections. I will make them as short as I can. I have several very broad questions concerning the Solicitor Generalship as such. It also has the effect—and whether you do it later or you do it now I suspect matters very little—that you get a feeling of going ahead and getting on to the next vote. That may be illusory. Let's not hallucinate ourselves in this assembly.

First of all, very briefly, year after year in all the time I have been here, particularly with my colleague the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick), it seems as to the general philosophy of policing, let me put it that way, the department continues to exist in a state of confusion, even obfuscation, in this particular regard as to what it thinks the police function ought to be and what it is. On one side, the police chiefs almost invariably speak in terms of a para-military organization with all that that implies in terms of discipline, echelons, categories, uniforms, blowing your nose, polishing your boots and doing any other number of things, as though you were under basic training in a perpetual way.

That's the American concept of policing. We've been over this ground. But I'm just going to mention it briefly again this year.

That's the whole American approach to the police operation. There is a British approach, which I thought you would be more attuned to in the department, which is more in line with the report on the status of policing in Ontario, that a very considerable amount of autonomy, spontaneity and individual judgement be reposed in the individual police officer, that he has a very considerable discretion. That discretion was reaffirmed in the reports, et cetera. But that's not the way the thing operates, and it bothers me.

I think that you are going to have to straighten out in your own mind as to where the emphasis should be. There have to be internal disciplines but do they have to be on a military model, or might they not be on a more flexible type of British model with respect to the way in which our particular police act? That would greatly aid in rapport with the citizen at large and in the approach of the police officer. Again, as I say, it's in line with the report. But that's not what you do. Your whole gravamen is towards the American system and it's getting worse. That's my first serious thought. Do you want to answer that? I have some more specific stuff.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I appreciate the question from the member for Lakeshore and I am sure I could discuss it with him at great length. I think that on appearances we are closer to the British system than the American system.

He mentioned the matter of discipline and the matter of judgement. I don't say they don't necessarily go hand in hand. If you look at the American policeman we have an image of them. I don't wish to run down the American patrolmen as such, but I think you will find that the policeman on patrol in most Ontario communities has a smarter, more military appearance and is more like the policemen you will see working under the British system than those you find in the United States. When it comes to dress, appearance and actions on the street, you will find our Ontario policemen more akin to the British policemen in matters of this sort than you will to the American policemen.

In all of these things, it is a case of trying to hit a happy mixture. Police operations must be of a semi- or para-military nature.

If you detail a man to go to a certain place you expect that man to be there, and you expect him to be there when the hour of his appointment calls for him to be there. In that sense you must have discipline. He can't return to his officer and say, "I thought I had something more important to do," or, "I had to answer some other type of call." If he is delegated to go there, he must be there and he must be ready to account for his attendance there, or explain why he was not there.

Mr. Lawlor: So do you.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That is right, but his officer must know that he is there. If I am not where I'm supposed to be I have to do an accounting of sorts too, but it's probably not a matter of life and death if I'm not there. Very often in the police operations it is a matter of life and death.

So I'm not going to say that you can remove the type of punctuality and that kind of obedience of orders from our police, nor is it removed from the British system. I had the advantage of going to a short inspection of the British college just outside London in February of this year, and if you think we have spit and polish around our training barracks, you should see the kind of operations they are put through there.

So when you try to differentiate our system from the British system on these matters of discipline I fail to see that you're making a valid differentiation. When it comes to matters of judgement I would hope that the kind of people we are now getting into the force and the kind of education that we are giving them at Aylmer and other places would allow for greater discretion; but nobody objects to the use of police discretion—unless they give that discretion in the favour of the citizen—faster than the citizen himself.

As you know, when a breach of a statute or a law, the Criminal Code or otherwise, occurs, we don't want to turn the policeman into both judge and jury. On this matter of breathalysers, we are finding that people object to the policeman being the person who should decide. I know under the Criminal Code they don't decide that, but giving them as much discretion as the present use of the roadside breathalyser would purport to give them, I don't know just where the division is between the policeman exercising his judgement and passing the judgement on to the courts to be exercised by them.

I am one who thinks that our police would probably gain in favour a little bit with the public if they gave out more warnings. You can't, of course, give out a warning in a criminal case, but you can under the Highway Traffic Act. I just notice that the hon. member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) is in his seat, and I think if he was to ask me what about safety problems on the highways, he would probably be in favour of fewer warnings and more summonses issued when it came to such matters as seat belts, speeding and breaches of the Highway Traffic Act.

I would hope that we would strike a happy balance in regard to discipline. I would hope that we could strike a happy balance in regard to the exercise of discretion by policemen. We are training them at Aylmer to use more discretion, and I think we're getting the kind of officer with the educational background in a variety of subjects who will be able to use that discretion. Having said that, I don't expect my hon. friend from Lakeshore to agree that we're following the right course. If he has any specific recommendations, I'd be glad to receive them.

Mr. Lawlor: We have very limited time in this debate, and as the hon. minister says we could spend the whole time pretty well over this very issue. I only want to mention Ramsay Clarke's "Crime in America," the first portion of which is dedicated to the causes of crime in the society and the second part to the operation of police forces as such, apart from the courts, Crown attorneys and what not, and there's particular emphasis upon the professionalization of the police forces which you had mentioned a moment ago. I believe this is being done through the auspices of the OPP to some commendable extent. That would involve, of necessity, a greater self-determination or autonomy, not only on the part of the individual officer but of these highly-trained individuals who will not work under those circumstances if they are given too much direction and there is too onerous a control.

The other day, you said you would update the status report on policing. Have you been able to do that, and have we been supplied with copies thus far?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I do have an update of that and I believe there are copies here. Perhaps I could arrange for their distribution to the two opposition critics and Mr. Lawlor. I would be pleased if they could be distributed—as many as are available.

Mr. Lawlor: Thank you very much. Now, under "analysis, research and planning," which is the fifth vote—

Mr. Chairman: I'd say to the member for Lakeshore, we've really just called item one.

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, you're just on item one? Okay, we'll leave it.

Just a word on organized crime, which is an overwhelming issue in this House. I know you've taken a minatory position but I suspect your position profoundly. Governments and people in governments always, for their own self-preservation if nothing else, take a sanguine or lordly position with respect to that subject.

Are you aware that one of the Dubois brothers from Montreal recently moved into Ottawa; that the particular spill-over from the Quebec crime commission proceedings is affecting, and has affected, this province? The business of too much secrecy, vis-à-vis this House, and vis-à-vis the general public for that matter, with respect to this organized crime menace that hangs over all of us, the fact it is not given consideration and sufficient disclosure, this hiding behind the veil of secrecy in this particular matter, will do no good so far as the province is concerned. There must be reposed in the commissioners a very strong area of secrecy, you can't spill all the beans or give all the information on wiretaps or what not; but we get absolutely nothing. We come cap in hand, begging to learn what extent organized crime has developed or to get some rational statement about it. Some of us over here feel it is a far more serious matter. We will learn in the newspapers some morning, I suppose, when something cracks open. That's a poor time, either for the government to make disclosures or for us to learn of these matters.

Precisely the reason for these estimates is to do a little digging in this particular respect. I think we should push you a little harder than we have in the past in this particular regard.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That is one of the disadvantages, Mr. Chairman, of dealing with estimates in the House instead of in committee. Last year we had various people, both from the Ontario Police Commission and from the OPP, answer a few questions on what they were doing to try to enclose organized crime. I can repeat what was said last year. I've made suggestions to the opposition critics; and I'm not being critical but the offer wasn't taken up. I didn't push it after the estimates were over but neither did the critics ask for any further information. But I would be glad to take them into our confidences—more than it would, perhaps, be wise to do in the House—let them see some of the things we're doing and talk to the officers who are more closely involved. I would be glad to do that.

You say do I know that this certain person has moved into Ontario. Certainly I, personally, don't get reports on a day-by-day basis as to the movements of people suspected of organized crime, but the OPP do. I shouldn't just limit it to the OPP, because we have a joint force working with the various municipal forces. The main one involved, of course, is the Metropolitan Toronto police force, but also the RCMP and the OPP. They work very closely together and I'm sure they know of the movements of all of these people.

As I've said so many times, it's not a case of knowing who is involved in organized crime; that seems to be easy to follow. When one person is taken out for various reasons, either death or imprisonment, the mantle seems to fall automatically on somebody else. From time to time I see reports that say so-and-so has now, apparently, taken over the running of one particular group from somebody else who, as I say, has passed on for various reasons.

Our problem is to get the evidence to convict. You will recall when Quebec commenced its inquiry into organized crime they had a great many unsolved murders which they felt were connected with the underworld. Thank goodness, we in Ontario didn't have that kind of a problem. Their problem, in regard to violence and that type of thing, was much more severe, at least in my opinion and in the opinion of those who advised me, than anything we had here in Ontario.

Neither the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) nor I have ruled out the possibility and said there are no occasions on which an inquiry into organized crime might be in the general public's interest. I think it probably was in the Quebec situation. A lot of things were reviewed; a lot were brought to light in that inquiry. But, again, I would remind you that in the case of some of the names that were brought out there, the convictions were obtained in Ontario and not in the province of Quebec.

So our main job is to gather the evidence. Charges are laid from time to time both for drug trafficking and bookmaking. I think bookmaking is one of the most insidious crimes that we deal with, but certainly there have been charges laid on that.

Mr. Lawlor: Loan-sharking.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Loan-sharking. What did I say?

Mr. Lawlor: Bookmaking.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I'm sorry, loan-sharking is what I meant to say.

If the House would like me to bring names and convictions—that type of thing—before them, I can certainly arrange to do that from time to time, but by that time it's not news. Certainly the papers are more on top of it as it's happening than I am and, therefore, they have it by the time I could report to the House.

In other words, I don't ask that the police—and I think it advisable that I shouldn't—that they advise me every time they're going to make some major raid or have enough evidence to arrest somebody. I certainly don't want that kind of information in my office; I don't think there's any need for me to have it. I certainly get it after they have made any arrests of this nature, but the newspapers and media in general have it almost the instant it happens. By that time, there's not much point in me reporting it to this House. If you wish me to institute some more up-to-date scheme whereby I could report on what we are doing in the way of prosecutions and following them up, I will try to do so for the advice of the House.

Mr. Lawlor: I think it would be valuable.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: All right, I'll see what I can do in that regard.

Mr. Lupusella: If I may, I would like to reply with a short statement about organized crime and the way in which the Solicitor General has been expressing ideas and manoeuvres in which organized crime actually is under control.

We had the words, several times; "Organized crime in the province of Ontario is under control." My main question, and the question which I raised in my opening statement, is how the Solicitor General can justify the statement which has been made by the federal Solicitor General, Mr. Francis Fox, trying to tell policemen in Toronto that they haven't been doing an adequate job in fighting organized crime. There is a contradiction in the statement which was released when the CBC broadcast a program about organized crime and the statement that was made at that time by top police officers that organized crime in the province of Ontario is under control. The question is why there is such contradiction that Mr. Francis Fox is coming from Ottawa, stating that we didn't do an adequate job. Can I have an answer to that?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: You will probably have to get that answer from Mr. Fox. As I said, we are working very closely with the RCMP, and I suppose it is a matter of one person's opinion as against another person's opinion as to when anything is under control.

I don't get, from talking to the RCMP, that they believe organized crime is not in control in Ontario. You can ask, is any crime ever in control? As far as I am concerned, if crime exists to any extent it's out of control. The question is, is it sufficiently under control to take more drastic steps such as have been suggested, by way of some inquiry? All I am saying is that we would lose more by a public inquiry than we would hope to gain.

Certainly murder is not under control in this province in that we have a good number of murders, although I think the statistics show that they were down last year over the previous year. We have still got too many murders, because one murder is too many. So, depending on whom you are talking to, murder is either under control or out of control.

The same applies to any crime, and I think you can follow that through into the field of organized crime. I have admitted that there is organized crime here in the province of Ontario. When we obtained that $1¼ million I gave a very quick rundown on some of the places where it was operating and the fields it was getting into. I am suggesting that organized crime is no greater here today than it was two or three years ago. Does that mean it's under control? As far as I am concerned, as I say, as long as it exists it is not under control, but I think it's under control sufficiently that we are currently dealing with it in the best possible means that we can employ.

We are always looking for better ways to deal with organized crime. The suggestion of the opposition, and about the only constructive suggestion I have heard in this regard, is to deal with it by a public inquiry. I am saying to you that the advice of my officials is that that would not be helpful at this time. But if you can suggest any better ways to control it, other than the methods the police are currently employing and apart from a public inquiry, I will be very happy to have those suggestions and will seek the advice of the police as to carrying them out.

Mr. Cunningham: I have a few brief general comments relating to the Ontario Provincial Police, and I would ask your indulgence in this regard, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Minister, I am delighted to see that you are going to resist any move by the executive council to reduce the staff of the Ontario Provincial Police, but I want to say to you that I am concerned about the phrase "until adequate reassessment has been given." I want to say to you that I hope you might take copies of the debate, both the comments by myself and other members of the House in both the opposition party and the third party, to your executive council to convey to them the extent of support that I think exists for our police force and the concern I know that we all have collectively as it relates to adequate protection for the citizens of the province of Ontario.

The speaker just prior to myself made reference to organized crime, and I must say I share his concern. In these times of increased crime, to reduce the Ontario Provincial Police would be a retrogressive step to say the least. I know in my constituency we rely tremendously on your police force and I have come to appreciate them and know them by name, not only having been stopped on the highway on the odd occasion to be reminded that I might be speeding—in fact, I was reminded once in a very tangible way that I was speeding—but also to maintain law and order.

Mr. Lawlor: How tangible?

Mr. Cunningham: About $35 worth.

Mr. Maeck: How many points?

Mr. Cunningham: I know in communities such as mine that the smaller and rural townships have come to rely on and appreciate the Ontario Provincial Police in a way that people possibly residing in the Etobicoke area could never appreciate. Notwithstanding the fact that the general policing responsibilities in my constituency now are the responsibility of the Hamilton-Wentworth police force, many citizens still are inclined to call the Ontario Provincial Police first because they know that they can count on them. Secondly, they know they can find their way around the rural areas on a continuing basis.

They are charged with the responsibility of highway traffic enforcement on that large Highway 6 that runs through my constituency and also on Highways 2 and 53 where we are having, I must say to you, some problems with enforcement. I think that is specifically a problem where there aren't enough members of the force to adequately cover it. I know that the members of the force are aware of the tremendous problem that exists there and I am sure you will direct that their continuing attention is given to adequate enforcement on that rather dangerous stretch of highway.

I can only say to you that in my view there seems to be some sort of duplication between the regular police forces in the outlying communities and the Ontario Provincial Police. I think there are some cost efficiencies that might be obtained by restoring some of those responsibilities back to your police force. I was wondering if you have any statistics at the moment that you could either send me now or at a later date that relate to the cost per capita of policing in these outlying areas so that I might make some reasonable comparison with regard to policing costs per capita in constituencies that are administered by their own local police forces. I would find that information very valuable.

Before I take my place, I would encourage you to possibly direct your officials to maintain a more constant vigilance on Highways 2 and 53. This has been a matter of great discussion with myself, citizens of my area, citizens of the village of Alberton and the town of Ancaster, and the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow), who until very recently was reluctant to accept our point of view. Effective enforcement of the highway speed regulations and the various other regulations of the Highway Traffic Act, I think, will contribute greatly to reduced levels of accidents on that stretch of highway. I would encourage you to see that that vigilance is maintained.

Mr. Worton: While the minister is getting some facts on this particular issue, he is well aware that on Saturday night I had the opportunity to attend a retirement function for a gentleman who had given some 30 years to the OPP in the various parts of Ontario, and in the last 10 years in Guelph.

The minister indicated to me that he would be happy if I brought greetings on behalf of his ministry and the government. I felt maybe I was stepping into something that had been unknown to me before. I did open my remarks by saying that I felt something like the cattle thief that was about to be hung. As he walked up the steps, he said to the fellow, "take it easy, this is the first time this has happened to me." Sure enough, he was right. I soon learned after a few remarks that there had been an announcement made that day that there was going to be a cutback on the staff of the OPP.

After all the events were over, I talked with many of the men of his agency there, of the OPP. Like the previous members, I would be very concerned if these steps were taken because I think it's the wrong time for your ministry to be instituting cutbacks in this force. I would like you to take back to your executive body the reaction I got from the calls on Sunday. Perhaps it is because there are a lot of people who know me and call me first-hand. I was certainly made aware of the feelings of the public. Quite frankly, until I got there on Saturday I was unaware of the situation. I thought that maybe it was the Toronto police that was undertaking his cutback.

As I mentioned earlier, and the other two members have mentioned, you should take a very serious look at this and talk to those other ministers who sit around you. Put your foot down and say that we want to maintain our strength and maintain the effective force that we've had in the past.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister, would you like to reply at this time?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I'll try to do that. I was asked about the cost per capita and my information is $54.08 per capita; the information pertaining to operation of police forces in the province of Ontario, $54.08.

Mr. Nixon: That's all forces?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The information that my deputy has given me is that that is OPP. The total of municipal forces per capita cost, $47.44; Metro and regions, $48.72; villages, towns et cetera, $35.47. Those must be averages when you're dealing with the regions.

I think Metropolitan Toronto was the highest. I don't see that right here. I know we have it, because I was reading it the other day and it runs in my mind that the city of Toronto was up in the $60 figure per capita. The OPP is $54, and, of course, it varies from municipality to municipality on a per capita basis.

I know the problem that the hon. member for Wentworth North (Mr. Cunningham) was speaking of in regard to traffic and speed limits. There were a great many complaints in connection with Highway 2 running through your riding where the people, because of a number of accidents which had occurred there, felt that they were not getting sufficient policing.

As a result of that, we did put more police patrols on. The OPP tries to regulate its supervision with radar and that sort of thing, depending on where their experience would lead officers to say which are the most dangerous and the highest risks, and that was one. I think as a result of their additional surveillance of it there was less speeding, naturally, and greater enforcement. I hope the people there are a little more satisfied with conditions as they presently exist, as opposed to what they were before the present tightening up.

I have a good number of letters from the general public recently talking about the saving of energy and abiding by the 50 and 60 speed limits respectively, depending on what road you're on. Again, I'm back into miles rather than kilometres, but in any event, a number of them have counted the number of speeders that have gone by.

I think I've had about 10 letters along this same line, saying they have been travelling at the speed limit and they have been counting the number of vehicles that passed them at certainly much greater than the speed limit I have, of course, replied to these along the line that we are doing our best.

There was about a 60 per cent increase in the amount of traffic tickets issued last year as compared with the previous year. Of course, I quote them that figure. Getting the people down to these lower speed limits is going to take a great deal of time. Certainly they are travelling at lower speeds than they did when the speed limit was 10 miles greater than it presently is.

I believe the public is being educated, particularly through the greater number of tickets that are given. As I say, it's about a 60 per cent increase over the previous year since the speed limits were reduced.

Mr. Nixon: Might I ask the minister if he has specific information that the average speed is down, or is that just his impression?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: If you ask me have I got a report that says what the average speed on the road is, no, I haven't got that. We can certainly get something more specific. I'm just looking at the fact, from my own experience I guess, in travelling Highway 400, when I myself used to travel a few miles over the speed limit, many people went by me at that.

Now if I'm still a couple of miles over the speed limit, there are a few people who are still going by me, but not at the great speeds they used to go by me. So I think we have reduced the average speed by about 10 miles. But that is an impression, you are quite right. I'm using my own observations in my own driving rather than the statistics. So when you pin me down, do I have a report from the police saying it is 10 miles lower; no I haven't. But I do have a report from the police saying that we have issued 60 per cent more tickets at the reduced speed limit.

I don't know whether I can get that other kind of information. I doubt if they've made that—

Mr. Nixon: I doubt if it exists.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I doubt if they have made that kind of survey. I don't know how they would, exactly, without knowing how much—

Mr. Cunningham: Especially the trucks.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth:—without knowing how much the average speed was before over the speed limit.

Mr. Nixon: They've just made a lot more lawbreakers; they haven't really reduced the speed.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: No, no; I would disagree with that. I think they probably could give you some information on the amount over the speed limit they're now clocking people at, as compared to what they were clocking them at before. I think you will find it is about the same percentage over, but I would have to get that for you. I don't have it.

Mr. Nixon: Do you go over the speed limit in your government car?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Very rarely, sir, very rarely.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Nixon: I find that shocking.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I must admit that once or twice I have and only when I am driving it myself. The provincial driver never does that.

Mr. Nixon: That is even more shocking.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Is that more shocking? I will have to take the blame. But very rarely, very marginally.

Mr. Nixon: Just by a mile or two; pardon me, a kilometre or two.

Mr. Chairman: Would the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk please keep in order.

Mr. Nixon: Not when you are talking about OPP and the speed limit.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The hon. member has put me completely off here. I did want to mention Waterdown. I was in the riding of Wentworth North as recently as yesterday.

Mr. Nixon: You're wasting your time.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I was just through there to observe the beauties of the riding.

Mr. Cunningham: Certainly is.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I went to the rock garden, and then up from the rock garden I took a nice little road I hadn't been on before that led up to Dundas Street. But in the process I went—I guess it was the old Guelph Road I travelled on—in any event I went by the old OPP Waterdown detachment building there. They ran a good detachment there and that is in the process of being turned over to the regional police.

Mr. Cunningham: Sad.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: It may be. The Hamilton-Wentworth regional department is a good force. We will still be patrolling the highways in that area, but gradually they have taken over the other policing duties.

Mr. Cunningham: Did you sell the building?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That is still under the process of negotiation; of course it won't be my ministry that will do it, it will be Government Services.

Mr. Nixon: You don't have anything to worry about there, George is bidding at $5.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I think they want it for $2. I think the building is in much better shape than $2. However, I won't comment on whether they should get it for $2 or $2 million—

Mr. Breagh: Better be careful John Rhodes doesn't get hold of it. It will cost you more than two bucks.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: We want, in any event, to co-operate with them and see that a police detachment of some sort is maintained in that place. As you know, we will be continuing to do the provincial highways in that area.

Mr. Cunningham: I am just wondering, Mr. Chairman, has the minister undertaken to see that all the speedometers have been changed and all the speed detecting equipment has been changed to reflect our new metric speed limits? An when did that take place if it did?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: You mean in the provincial cars?

Mr. Cunningham: Yes.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The OPP have certainly changed all of theirs with the new signs on them. Of course most of them had, I assume, the new kilometers marked because they are fairly recent cars that most of the police drive. Certainly I personally haven't examined them all to see if that has taken place, but they have had extensive information and instruction on the metric system and how it affects their problem with traffic control. So I think that has been done, but I can't say that I have personally examined them.

I just wanted to mention the comments of the member for Wellington South (Mr. Worton) on bringing greetings to his riding last week where an officer from the force was retiring. I thank you for extending those greetings. I didn't know when I asked him to do that that he'd be walking into the hornet's nest that he did.

Mr. Nixon: He blamed it on you.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I am sure he would. I can't say anything more. I spoke on it earlier. I don't think it's about to happen and certainly we in this ministry will resist it for the many reasons that I gave earlier. I am sure you defended me well, and thanks for doing it.

Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of little things I wanted to speak to the minister about on this particular vote. The minister and I have talked about these things before, but I was intrigued by the fact that he mentioned that his own personal position was that he feels that more warnings could be used rather than charges. I was a member of the OPP for eight years and I recall when I took my training here at 13 Queen's Park Crescent, where the Frost Building is now, there was an instructor there by the name of Bill Oliver, Sergeant Oliver, and one of the things that I recall him telling the class at the time was that a policeman is not judged by the number of charges he lays but by the absence of crime in the community he serves. I think that is still good today.

When I was on the OPP originally, when I first started out, we were given a lot of leeway. We used our own judgement and we didn't have too many NCOs standing over our shoulders telling us what we should do or shouldn't do. We had enough to get some advice from, but it really was a matter of a policeman making his own judgement on many things.

Mr. Nixon: What year was that?

Mr. Maeck: It was 1949 when I joined and I resigned in 1957.

Mr. Worton: Better than politics?

Mr. B. Newman: Better than politics?

Mr. Maeck: Well, I'll tell you, it was a little easier. The pay wasn't too good in those days. Anyway, to give you an example of what I am talking about, it's not so long ago that I had a constituent come into my office and this gentleman was, I believe, 68 years old. He had become involved in a minor accident. A lady had backed out of a driveway and into the back of his truck or something such as that, and the lady was charged with an offence under the Highway Traffic Act. In the investigation, the police officer suddenly realized that this gentleman had not changed his address on his owner's permit and immediately gave him a summons for $28.

In my day, we would have probably said to that man, who was a local person—he'd moved probably 20 miles from where he had originally lived all his life—we would probably have said, "You go and get your address changed on your owner's permit and come back to us in 24 hours" or 48 hours.

Mr. Nixon: Very sensible.

Mr. Maeck: The job would have been done, he would have been happy and the law would have been complied with, but today it seems to me that in many detachments—and it may not be prevalent throughout the whole province—there seems to be a competition as to who can lay the most charges.

I just don't believe that that is the way police work should be done. I believe it can be done just as effectively in many cases by issuing warnings, and there's no reason why the officer can't keep track of the warnings that he has issued so that he can report to his senior people that he is doing his job. I just believe that in some cases we have strayed too far from that system. I am not advocating warnings for not using seatbelts. I am not advocating warnings for speeding. I believe that those are safety things that should be enforced very strenuously. There are many small traffic offences where I believe charges are being laid today just as a matter of bringing up the count.

Mr. Lawlor: No wonder this is five million too many.

Mr. Lupusella: Just to raise money.

Mr. Maeck: I just believe the job can be done just as well in many cases by issuing warnings. So, Mr. Minister, I am very happy to see that you share at least part of my outlook.

While I am on my feet I would also like to mention that I believe each summer even yet we are having OPP officers transferred from detachments in the Parry Sound area to do summer duty in places such as Wasaga Beach and other places.

I'm wondering if that is still continuing and, if it is, I'm wondering if those officers could not be picked from areas that are not tourist areas, because we have a great influx of people in the Parry Sound area during the summer and that's the time we need the extra officers. Yet that seems to be the time that they're siphoned off. I would suggest to you that the people from southern Ontario are spending their time up north and maybe you wouldn't need as many down here. Maybe those are the ones who should be going to the special duty detachment where you increase the staff for the summer.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The hon. member for Parry Sound has spoken to me about his thoughts in regard to issuing warnings, and I think I share them. As a matter of fact, when I was speaking to some police here a short while ago I mentioned your words to them, that the effectiveness did not depend on the number of tickets that has been issued but the spirit of law-abiding people in the community. That's good, and that's why I would like to see us place more policemen on the beat, where they know the community people and know which ones they can warn and which ones they can't warn. I think that can apply to many of the small towns across this province, where the policemen should know the people they are dealing with.

It becomes a little different problem when you are dealing with Metropolitan Toronto, as I'm sure you realize. A policeman may stop me today for doing two miles over the speed limit, that I admit that I sometimes travel. If he issued me a warning he doesn't know he's just one of many policemen who have issued me a warning. In the course of a week I may get 10 policemen stopping me, all giving me warnings, and me not doing anything about them because I know I'm going to get that kind of easy treatment from them.

Mr. Nixon: But that wouldn't happen if you drove over the speed limit.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I know that won't happen, but that's what I tell most of the people who write to me who think they have been unfairly treated. I said that if they keep by the laws they won't be unfairly treated. That doesn't always get a very warm reception from the recipients of the letters either.

However, all I'm saying is if we could have more community policing I think we could do more of that, but the police are abused many times and taken for bits of patsies if, in a municipality like Toronto they simply issue warnings rather than the summonses.

In trying to enforce the seatbelt legislation, I have asked the OPP and the municipal police through the OPC if they will not be a little tougher in issuing summonses, in that they've had a considerable length of time to give warnings, and for the most part they have been warnings with regard to seatbelts. I'm asking now that they should toughen up and give a few more summonses for non-wearing of seatbelts than they have in the past.

This again becomes a matter of discretion. We give some general guidelines, as we've attempted to do on seatbelts, but it really comes down to the point that the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) was using at the start, let's give our policemen a little more discretion. I would suggest that the discretion that can be used in community policing is a little broader than the discretion that might be used when you have the kind of policing that is done in Metropolitan Toronto.

The member for Parry Sound also asked about taking constables from the Parry Sound detachment and using them in seasonal detachments. I can't say whether that is done in Parry Sound, but you're telling me it is done. That is a matter that the force regulates. I certainly don't try to give them any direction as to where they take their people from, but we do have a number of seasonal detachments, as you are aware, and they take the people to staff those from the places where they feel they can afford them best. I can see, yours being a summer community and you have an influx of people, that you say take them from some other place, and I'll discuss that with the commissioner. As I say, he's doing it on the basis of where he feels he can spare them best.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I would like to reply to a fundamental problem which was raised a few minutes ago, the relations between the police force and the public. I think the Solicitor General recognizes this particular problem existing, especially—and I want to emphasize the word especially—in the Metropolitan area.

I raised this particular matter in my opening statement. The police should change their attitude when they are dealing with the public. I think that is a very, very important issue and I think the public also recognizes a lack of concern coming from the police force. I had a great opportunity to talk to a lot of people here in Metro Toronto especially to people coming from each different ethnic community in the Metropolitan area. They are really concerned about this attitude.

I don't think people are worrying so much that they have been penalized, that they have to appear before the court, that they have to pay a traffic summons; they are really concerned about the way the police officers are treating them when they are approaching the public. That's the principle which I would like to raise during these estimates, and I think that the Solicitor General is supposed to bring this particular concern to the police force.

When the police stop someone in the street, that person, I'm sure, will recognize that something was wrong. If the police officers are going to be a little bit more humane—that's the word which I would like to use—more humane when they approach the public, I think the public will respond in a better way. They are not worried so much because they are supposed to pay the summons, and I'm sure they will recognize that they were wrong in some way. It's the duty of the police officer to approach that person in a more humane way, which at the moment is not done.

The ethnic communities and a lot of people in Metropolitan Toronto recognize this kind of a problem. We can integrate the principle of education of the police officer and the public through this kind of approach between the public and the police officer. I'm not saying that the police officers from now on don't have to penalize people when they are wrong. I'm not saying that. It's the kind of approach—to explain to people why they were wrong. I'm sure most of the time when police officers are giving out tickets they don't explain to people why they were wrong. That's the kind of educational approach which we have to use in the province of Ontario.

I'm not saying, as someone suggested when I made my opening statement, that from now on we don't have to stop the criminals, or we don't have to take criminals to court. I'm not suggesting this kind of a principle. I'm suggesting that police officers have a role in our society not just to penalize people but to educate people by being more humane when they approach the public. I hope that I make myself clear on that statement and I hope that the Solicitor General will understand, and understood what I was talking about when I made my opening statement.

A lot of people among the ethnic communities see the misunderstandings which are taking place between the police officers and the minority groups in Metropolitan Toronto. I hope this kind of attitude will change somehow and that this message is going to be brought by the Solicitor General to the police force here in Metropolitan Toronto.

A lot of people have been coming into my office complaining, not so much about the amount of money which they are supposed to pay in court, or just because they were taken to court. They've been complaining about this lack of understanding and lack of concern by the police officers. I hope the Solicitor General will consider this particular problem and will bring this kind of message to the police force in Metropolitan Toronto.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Could I have an answer to that, please, if it is possible?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Yes. I hope I expressed sympathy with those views in what I have previously said. Again, it comes to dealing with a municipality like Toronto or Hamilton, or a local municipality where all of the policemen know most of the citizens there. So often the policemen in Toronto see a person for the first time when they are dealing with him because they've stopped him for a traffic offence or something else, and may never see that same person again.

It becomes difficult for them to know who are the good guys and who are the bad guys, and I'm afraid sometimes they take the attitude that everybody is a bad guy. Not all policemen do so, but certainly some do, and they approach a lot of people on the basis that they have to be rough and tough with them before perhaps sounding them out and saying: "Is this a person whom I can treat as another human being as opposed to somebody who is trying to pull the wool over my eyes?"

Thank goodness, most of our policemen are polite. The member for York Centre raised the point where he had seen a Metro Toronto policeman apparently intimidating some person in public near the exhibition grounds. Regrettably, that does go on from time to time. It shouldn't go on. I know a person who is most concerned about that is the Metropolitan Toronto Chief Harold Adamson, who instructs his police otherwise.

Certainly, they are instructed otherwise in all of the schools they attend, whether at Aylmer or whether at our own OPP college on Sherbourne, or the Metropolitan Toronto college, or the various police schools across the province. They should be courteous. Certainly, I will pass your comments on to the various forces, suggesting this matter of sympathy and courtesy when they're dealing with individuals.

I wanted to make a comment in regard to the ethnic problem, because I know you raised it with me over a year ago in connection with the enforcement of our holiday and Sunday closing bylaw. I shouldn't call it a bylaw, our statute.

Mr. Lawlor: You are still on the Etobicoke council.

Mr. Nixon: He wishes he were.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Yes, sir, it was pretty good there too. They were good days. However, when I refer to bylaws I guess I'm thinking of birdhouse bylaws and bathwater bylaws. In any event, when we're dealing with the ethnic communities there are a variety of traditions, a variety of practices that each of the ethnic communities carry out. Of course, when we are drafting our statutes we don't allow that the Portuguese people may do something that is in keeping with their customs. We have made certain allowances for the Jewish people when we were dealing with the closing bylaws, and maybe we should have tried to accommodate each of the ethnic groups for their own purposes.

Yours was a concern about selling certain things in Portuguese stores on a Sunday which they might ordinarily be able to sell in their own native land. I don't know how you can accommodate that. We have asked the police to be sympathetic with it, yet the police can't say, "All right, this is a set of rules or laws for the Portuguese and there is another set for the Italians and another set for somebody else."

There has to be a certain uniformity in our laws, and if the exceptions are not made in the statutes or the bylaws it becomes a little difficult to ask the police to apply those, other than in the same sense that you are asking they apply them with, a little courtesy and a little understanding. Thank you.

Mr. Lupusella: I just have a short comment, Mr. Chairman. I didn't really raise the particular concern of enforcement of the law by the police. I'm not trying to make any exemptions for people. There are certain statutes in the province of Ontario. I think that police officers, in a good manner, have a role in the implementation of those statutes. I do recognize that but I don't see any justification of the toughness between the police officers and the public. I am not just emphasizing the problem of minority groups. I am talking about Metropolitan Toronto and the province of Ontario as a whole.

I think when police officers meet the public they should be polite. Policemen shouldn't be the judges on the street. That's what I am trying to aim at. It's up to the judicial process to recognize if the person is found guilty or not. I am not saying that the person shouldn't be taken to court if he made a mistake or didn't follow certain regulations.

I am talking about the particular problem which is taking place when the officer is approaching the public, the way they are approaching the public, the way they are fining the public and the way they are taking people to the police cell or before the court. That's the critical point which I hope the Solicitor General will understand, and that's the principle which a lot of people are complaining about. Toughness in 1977 is something which shouldn't exist at all. The way policemen are approaching the public is something which is important. I want to say to the Solicitor General, as an example, if I break the law, of course I recognize there are certain detrimental effects just by breaking the law, but I cannot support and I cannot see the policeman really being rough to me, screaming on the streets when they stop me. They have the role of educating me by stating, "Well, sir, you made the mistake. I don't think that you should do it. That's $28 which you have to pay."

I would be more pleased if I saw this kind of effect taking place between the police officers and the public. That's the complaint which is taking place from the public to the police officers. I hope somehow and in some way this problem will disappear, especially in Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Chairman: Was there any reply from the minister?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: No, I don't think I can add anything further, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nixon: I am not sure how we got so specifically on to the matters of policing, but since we are there I do want to join in the discussion that has gone on now for about the last hour. I want to take another point of view and to assure the minister that I know that he wants the police to act in a proper way with those people they contact in the community, and, in my observation, they almost invariably do.

I want to say, on the other hand, that if the police are in a situation where they have to have their authority at least acknowledged, particularly when they are dealing with young people, then I do not approve of any of the muscular stuff unless it is necessary. I do feel that the police, in the experience that I have, do accomplish this in a reasonable and fair and equitable way.

While you may have had indications from my colleagues and other members of experiences where the police have transgressed, I think we must make it quite clear that we also expect them to enforce the law. We, as members, meet the police ourselves when we are that mile or two over the speed limit that the minister referred to. I, myself, have not, of course, experienced that, but I understand that some have.

Mr. Samis: What about the member for Essex North (Mr. Ruston)?

Mr. Nixon: Even before they see your licence, I find they are invariably polite under those circumstances, but it is not often you get a chance to see them in action where there is some real action around, when they are not aware they are being observed by somebody, let's say a member of the Legislature or some other person on a police commission. Just outside our farm gate, about three weeks ago, there was a very serious accident involving a lot of property damage, injury and so on. The representative of the Brantford detachment who came out there—certainly I was watching him in action, and I thought more than once, not only how well trained he was, but what good personal sense he showed as the only officer on the scene, with all sorts of people around there undertaking to direct traffic and do this and do that. In a very fine way he assumed the leadership of all these well-meaning citizens so that what had to be done was accomplished without delay.

What really impressed me was that after the ambulance had gone and after the tow truck had dragged away the wrecks, he went around and shook hands with three or four of the people who had been particularly helpful to him. I thought, those people are going to go home and be very impressed with the fact, not only that they had come forward as citizens and helped but that the person in charge had recognized their help.

You can train them to do many of these things, but it's basically the good sense of the man or the woman. We have a number of women OPP in our area who are being well received and who are very effective, I understand, at determining that mile or two over the speed limit that we were talking about.

I do want to say something about the matter the minister raised in his opening remarks having to do with policing, and that is the commitment of dollars towards the police force. I was quite surprised actually to see that the amount we expend on OPP was as small as it is. Presumably this does not include their offices and the serving of their offices.

I know we are not dealing directly with OPP now but with policing in general. However, I would hope that the minister would use his undoubted persuasive powers with those of his colleagues who want to establish regional police forces, even in areas not now regionalized. I really believe that this in the long run is a mistake. Our OPP have an excellent reputation. When they appear on the scene they carry with them a kind of authority that I would say to the minister is unmatched by other forces.

In my view the OPP is to be preferred to allowing and insisting on regional policing to come out into the square miles of rural areas where highway patrols are necessary and where policing in small towns or villages that don't even have a bylaw enforcement officer is necessary.

There is an argument on behalf of the local people as well; that is, that it is cheaper for them. But as soon as you insist that they go into a regional policing situation, they pay for the OPP through their regular sources of taxation and then pay through the nose for what is essentially an urban kind of policing, which they don't want and which, in my opinion, they don't need.

There has got to be somebody in that cabinet, in the arguments that I hope are taking place behind closed doors, who is going to put that position against the undoubted powerful arguments from the Treasurer and others that have led us into the multiplicity of hugely expensive regional police forces. Certainly I would not in any way criticize those regional police forces, but my own observation is that their capabilities and their morale leave something to be desired.

We were at the opening of the police headquarters in the town of Paris. A representative of the Ontario Police Commission was there, and we may talk about that in detail under another vote. But one of the things that was discussed—we were talking about the undoubted excellence of the refurbished house that was in use in Paris—was the comments made by people with a broad ambit of responsibility about, for example, the new regional police headquarters in Hamilton-Wentworth.

Somebody said that, taking into account all the expenditure associated with that, there was a commitment of $15 million for that regional police headquarters. It probably was the most effective and up-to-date police headquarters in the world—and no doubt there were those people who had travelled to many parts of the world to see that it was—with in-house TV surveillance and all the rest—everything was the best that money can buy.

Of course we want the best for Hamilton and region; and yet I would say to the minister that if, through our regional governments, we are going to provide the best in this area as well as the best in new regional headquarters—and, as in the instance of Hamilton-region, the very best in lower-tier regional governments—then we are just not going to be able to foot the bill.

While we're talking about this specific instance, I really hope that the minister is going to be perhaps a little tougher than he sometimes is with us and others in putting an alternative approach to the general policing across the broad areas of the province to his colleagues. Do not allow us to be sucked in to this regional police concept by the argument from the Treasurer and others that some people are getting off without paying their fair share.

You might even have to accept an adjustment in the so-called fair share, but you should be arguing, in my view, not for any decimation of the OPP—in my view it is the best police force that I have ever experienced, and I have seen the police in Paris, France, with the tommy guns on their backs. I've tried, for example, to get into the legislative building or the parliament buildings, Chambre des députés—as we call it in South Dumfries—in Paris, and seen the barbed wire and the armed guards and had them put the gun across like this to keep you out.

Maybe that's necessary. Thank God, it's not necessary here. At the very other end of the policing situation, I know that in the small towns in my constituency, where some of the young bucks get out of hand on Saturday night and maybe Friday night and maybe Thursday night too, there is no police there, but when the black and white car comes in and the people in the properly kept up uniforms who know how to handle those situations arrive, there is a feeling, "Well there's somebody here who knows how to run this situation and bring it under control."

While, of course, they must be polite, they must also be prepared, when the circumstances warrant it, to be tough as nails so that these people who are habitual law-breakers, pushing closer and closer to the line, are going to know that in the name of public order there is someone there who knows how to enforce the law, knows how to treat these people—not with brutality, which we can't admit, but at least with the strength that is obviously required under these circumstances.

I'm glad the minister is saying we're not going to back down on this budget, and I would certainly support him, as it expands.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: All I can say to the hon. member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk is thank you very much for your support of the police. You've expressed it to me from time to time, but again, I'm going to send a copy of Hansard containing what you've said to the commissioner, because it's good to hear it said and it's not said frequently enough.

I've got my concerns about regional policing, mainly from the point of view that we do have a good provincial force, as everybody here seems prepared to admit, and that if we allow it to gradually be dissipated by reason of regional forces taking over large areas of the province we will come to the point where the force may not require certain operations that it has.

If it's left, for instance, with only the northern part of Ontario to supervise, then how do we maintain some of the operations that it presently has? I know that the commissioner is concerned about this as well. We don't want it to become merely a highway patrol, as it might do if we simply said, "All right, we'll continue to manage the provincial highways of the province, but you look after all of the Criminal Code offences and things of that nature."

I want the force to remain capable of looking after Criminal Code offences. I want it to remain capable of looking after all parts of law enforcement and not those just dealing with highway traffic. I too am concerned. Our ministry is concerned and the commissioner is concerned that taking over various regional forces should not be done to the detriment of the OPP.

To a certain extent you can say that is already happening by the regions that have been established, but I think that has slowed down. I hope it has slowed down, and I will certainly make my voice heard, not only here in the House but in the cabinet if there is any continuing movement in this way.

Mr. Nixon: You could even roll it back.

[5:00]

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: It could be rolled back. I don't want to speak against regional policing. I'm concerned not so much that the regional forces are good, but that the provincial police should not become less able.

Take, for instance, regional policing: When the municipality of Durham took over its regional policing, it immediately was concerned about the response time. We don't expect to have a two or three-minute response time to all of the calls that the OPP get. If you recall, down in Pelee Island we were criticized last year because it took them a day in some circumstances with bad weather and a few other things to answer—

Mr. Ruston: They can't walk across water; some of them found it hard to get there.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: —what appeared to be a routine call. If it was an emergency call, I hope other measures would have been taken. But in the eyes of the caller it was an emergency. That is one thing regional policing is doing. It is lessening the response time. I mentioned that in Durham. They were slow to take over the northern part of their region because they said there was no way at the present time they could give the kind of response time they were giving in the southern part without a great many more automobiles and men to do it.

When you look at regional policing, I think it does in many cases give a better service. It has better communication and it has better response time, but those, I agree, are not the only factors to take into account. As I say, I don't want to get into an argument with you other than to point out some of the other sides. Basically I am in agreement with all of the things you have said about the OPP, regional policing and things of that nature.

Mr. Williams: There are two matters of concern to me that I would like to discuss with you pertaining to the policing, and in particular the enforcement of speed limits on provincial highways. If I could for a moment, I would like to pursue the matter that was raised by the member for Wentworth North (Mr. Cunningham) a while back when he made reference to the use of official metric speed limits.

In that regard, it is my understanding that when the federal authorities enacted the metric system and it became the law of the country, they did not at that time make it mandatory that all of the existing automobiles on the highways had, in turn, to convert the speedometers in their automobiles other than the automobiles that were being manufactured during the current production year and subsequent thereto.

Consequently, I perceive that possibly a difficulty could arise. I ask you without intentionally begging the issue, whether or not the inception of the new metric system and speed limits, to your knowledge, any court cases have arisen wherein the technicality has been raised by counsel for a person who has been charged with a speeding conviction that because the person was being charged for speeding using the metric figures while the speedometer within the automobile was using the old system of determining speed; therefore a technical defense would exist, bearing in mind that the motorist would not be expected to be continually making mathematical conversions in his mind as he is driving as to relating the speed in miles to kilometers.

I was wondering whether, in fact, that difficulty has surfaced to your knowledge. Of course, if it did arise it would create a monstrous problem as far as the courts successfully prosecuting cases of that nature. As I say, while it may be begging the issue, I think it is of sufficient importance and one that I know has raised some concern in speaking to some of my legal colleagues as to the potential technical defence that it does provide. For that reason I raise the question with you as to whether or not, to your knowledge, it has become a problem in the courts and as it relates to the day-to-day enforcement of speed limits on the provincial highways.

The second question, which I'll raise at this time before the first one is answered, so that staff could perhaps be preparing some of the information for you if it is not readily at hand, is with regard to that other aspect of enforcement of speed limits on provincial highways. I refer to that part of our program that relates to enforcement by air patrol, as contrasted to the more conventional use of surveillance by radar in parked police vehicles at different locations on our highways.

Could you indicate what resources in the provincial force are used in our air patrol program; what percentage would relate to our overall program of enforcement of speed limits on our provincial highways? What percentage of our highways are designated for air surveillance? Could you indicate how many of our police officers are trained to conduct air surveillance? How many aircraft do we have that comprise part of our equipment used for this purpose and how many aircraft are leased for this purpose to carry out the air surveillance work on our highways?

Could you indicate what overall cost would apply to the general enforcement of speed limits as it relates to the overall costs that are before us in the estimates; that is, what percentage of the overall costs applied towards the enforcement of speed limits on our highways could be associated with the cost of equipment and personnel in the air surveillance section of our law enforcement program to the overall program?

Could you indicate also whether those costs are proportionate to the revenues that are derived as they relate to the air surveillance program contrasted to the overall program—expenses versus revenues derived?

I am wondering whether you could give us some general indication as to how those programs tie in together, the general program and the air surveillance program?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: As you know, we've been dealing with a good number of general questions and I felt that I could deal with most of them here with the deputy and our financial advisers. The questions that the hon. member for Oriole just asked—that is, dealing with air surveillance and the general proportions of how much we are spending on air surveillance as regard to on-the-road surveillance, I am not able to answer at this time. They are all good questions, and we can certainly supply answers. I'll take notice of these questions and we will have answers when we are dealing with the actual traffic division of our OPP vote, which is a little way off. Since they are specific questions I would prefer to deal with them in that way, but we do have notice of them and can certainly have that information available.

In regard to the transfer to the metric system, as you know, that came into effect on September 6. For the first little while I think all the police forces were probably giving the kind of warnings that we were talking about, becoming familiar with the operation itself and waiting for the proper signing of the new metric speeds.

I don't know of any problems before the courts at the present time in the enforcement of the new metric limits. I assume there will be some problems—and maybe the Attorney General can give us an up-to-date report on it—but I have not heard of any complaints through the policemen that they are having trouble with it. I think we would have those complaints now if the police themselves could not understand or were having difficulty in the administration of it.

But of course the tickets that are paid willingly—I shouldn't say willingly, but if they go in and pay without contesting they will have been paid. I doubt if any of the ones that may be contested would have reached the courts yet, this still being the month of October. I'll ask the Attorney General for some information on it, but there have been no complaints from the police that I'm aware of and I suspect that the courts have dealt with very few contested cases, if any, to this date.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to go back for a moment, if the minister would allow, to some comments that were made by my colleague the member for Dovercourt (Mr. Lupusella) and the response. I certainly see a difference between the members of the police force having some good general presentation to the public, of being co-operative and so on, and a basic attitudinal difficulty. I'm wondering what the minister would have up his sleeve if he is confronted, first with a task force headed by Walter Pitman that was struck in Metro Toronto and which is to release its report in a couple of weeks—Inter-racial Violence in Metro Toronto—and if he's further confronted with evidence from perhaps the Ontario Human Rights Commission from the group that's headed by Dr. Wilson Head—the name escapes me for a moment—or from other quarters to indicate that part of the difficulties with race relations in Metro Toronto is with the police force. What if that report says the difficulty is an attitudinal one; obviously not among most of the community relations officers, of whom there are very few, but among the general force? I'm wondering if the minister is faced with that kind of information and that kind of impression coming from many different quarters, if he can respond in a positive way to it?

I realize part of the difficulty; I think it's something that I mentioned last week when we were dealing with it. Metro Toronto has identified a need for an extra 100 officers; many of those should be included as community relations officers, but the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) has decided that Metro Toronto can't have any additional officers. Okay, that's a problem. It's a problem you have to live with as well as us.

But I'm wondering what you do about the attitudinal problem, if it's identified; if you become convinced that it's there, that it exists among officers on the force. Is there some special way that you have of handling them? Does it make sense, for example—and here to be more concrete about it I'll mention the East Indians: Part of the East Indian community in Metro Toronto had made an offer to the Toronto police force of running some courses for them that would help them to better understand the culture and the background of the people who are coming here from East India. That, I understand, was rejected by the Metro Toronto police force.

I'm wondering if that kind of cultururation, that kind of education as to cultural practices and religious practices and so on, would be a very good type of thing for the police forces in Metro Toronto—and perhaps other urban centres, but particularly Metro Toronto—to be engaged in? I fully realize you may want to comment more fully when we get to the part of the vote that deals with the police college, because surely that's where much of the training time should be allotted, maybe that's where a lot of the problems perhaps stem from.

But given an existing problem, where do we go from here? What is it that you can do to provide some guidance and some leadership to overcome what I perceive to be a very real problem for many of our ethnic communities, in particular at this point in time the people from India and Pakistan, and other similarly placed countries? Sure, it's one in a series. There have always been racial problems in Toronto, stemming back, I guess, to the days around the turn of the century when the Irish Catholics were beset upon in this city, unable to get work and so on. This is the latest in a series, but it's more pronounced than perhaps what we've seen, save for the early 1950s when Italian people were under great pressure and great attacks by people in this city.

I want to know from the Solicitor General where we go from here. What is it that he can do to help overcome the problem? What is it that he can do when the Metro Toronto police force turns down an opportunity for their officers to learn more about the ethnic communities that reside in this city, because I think he well understands that when we put it into perspective we're talking about an extremely large population? We're not talking about a handful of people at all. The Italian community in our city probably numbers 400,000. As we start listing from there down—the Greek community, Indo-Pakistani community and so on—we're probably talking a balance of, I'd say, at least three-quarters of a million people in Metro Toronto. That's a pretty sizable number. We have a difficult problem and we don't seem to be getting answers.

Lastly, I'd ask, if the Solicitor General can respond would he also put in what happens after November 6, when there is to be a very large rally outside of Toronto city hall by people from the East Indian community with regard to the police force and what they see as inadequate service? Of what assistance can he be in responding to that very desperate cry you're going to hear on November 6? Where do we go from here?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: In response to the opening remarks of the critic of the NDP, I spent some time last Monday dealing with this subject. I mentioned that it was a sickness of all of our society that we allow prejudices of this nature to find expression in various ways, some of them with lettering on the sides of buildings and walls, others with verbal abuse, and still on occasion physical abuse.

With the police being a portion of society, regrettably sometimes it does turn up in the occasional policeman, but I would say that where it turns up in the police it is in a far less percentage than it is in the population as a whole. All I can say is that it is a matter of continual education. The police themselves—and I'm particularly thinking of Metropolitan Toronto now—have a very extensive educational program through community officer of work where they are trying to relate one group to another group and go in and take an active hand in that. Certainly they have courses throughout the force that try to bring about the kind of tolerance that we should have. It is an educational program and is ongoing.

I think our newspapers are doing a good service in this regard and so are the various media. Regrettably, of course, while they are preaching this kind of tolerance, sometimes they are the ones that give evidence to the intolerance that is there. So, while they are doing a good service on one hand, sometimes they do a bad service on the other.

However, I don't have any easy solution for it. I'm sure you don't either, other than continual education, which is going on. We have special courses at Alymer dealing with this kind of understanding, teaching the traditions of one ethnic group as opposed to another ethnic group. I've mentioned that Toronto has that; Toronto has a good community police program.

You suggested the Treasurer said they could not have any more policemen. I would suggest to you that is not correct. He may have said there is a limit to the amount of money that we, the province, are going to supply to them. But, as you know, they are entitled or have the freedom of employing all the people they wish if they wish to pay for them. Of course, there is always the "if," whether we at the provincial level wish to pay for it or the citizens at the municipal level wish to pay for it. There are, of course, some limits on that on both sides.

I have nothing more to add, other than what I said the other night. If you have any easy solutions for this great problem we'll be glad to pass them on to the police, but, as I said, continual education is, to my mind, the answer.

Mr. Stong: There's been an awful lot of territory covered since I last spoke of this issue here this afternoon, but I do have some specific questions dealing with the police training, public relations, methods of gathering evidence and giving evidence in court, but I prefer to leave those comments until a specific vote.

However, there is one thing that I would like to mention prior to passing this vote and that is the reported alleged layoff of 75 OPP officers. I endorse fully, Mr. Chairman, through you to the minister, what he has said and his attitude. I can't let it go past without referring to the subject matter of the article that appeared in the paper. Perhaps I'm suspicious by nature, but I do not impute any improper motivation to the minister, particularly the minister who holds the office of the Solicitor General.

I would say that the subject matter of this article at best is suspect, and at worst will probably show a great lack of communication between the office of the Solicitor General and the rest of cabinet, and perhaps Management Board. I'm not sure how this article got reported or how the information leaked out to the particular reporter but it would seem to indicate, from where I stand, that there is a lack of consideration. The fact that this type of information could be leaked to the public prior to cabinet considering what the Solicitor General has by way of input is inexcusable in my mind.

I might say it's tantamount to building a straw house and then blowing it down; a straw man argument as well. I might say, as well, that it borders on the irresponsible, this type of thing being leaked to the public, because it would indicate an attitude wherein certain people are playing with the lives of police officers.

I received two complaints from police officers on the weekend after this story had been made public. I impute, as I said, no motivation to this minister and I agree with what he said. I'm sure that he had nothing to do with this as far as its being leaked. The fact is that we don't consider only the police officers in this respect, that their lives and plans are being played with, but the safety and the peace of the public in the communities is being toyed with and the communities become upset as well.

I think that some level of criticism should be levelled at the government in allowing this type of article to be printed at a time when the estimates are being discussed. It seems to me that it's a premature article and ought not to have been published. I would hope that the Solicitor General would be angry at the type of leak that this created and the fact that it was let out to the public prior to his input to cabinet.

I do support the Solicitor General, Mr. Chairman, through you, with his attitude as reported and his determination to keep those police officers on the force at this time when crime is on the increase and at a time when obviously—and we're hoping to demonstrate this through the estimates—there can be cuts in other areas but not in police personnel.

Perhaps one of the considerations, as I said in my opening statement, would be to amalgamate some of the ministries that are in existence in the Justice policy field; perhaps, as has been demonstrated today, in the overlapping of legal services, but in that area and not in the cutting of personnel. I think it demonstrates a great concern, and the government ought to be concerned, that this type of thing can be printed at such a time and in such a way as it was and leaked to the public as it was.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I could not agree more with you when you say that it's a concern to you. It was certainly a concern to me. I am not surprised that the information got out. I don't know how you do it in an organization the size of our own when you are making a survey. I could not deny, nor did I want to deny to the press, that this was a request that had been made to our ministry to see how we could reduce our expenditures.

We looked at it; and when you are looking at it, you go across the whole province. It is not just a number of uniformed people who would be informed but a number of civilian people as well who were working on this to report back to me. It would have fairly wide circulation in the ministry in order to obtain the necessary information.

I don't know where the leak came from but, as I say, there would be people in various ministries involved. Management Board knew that we were doing this examination. My ministry knew that we were doing it. I haven't got a figure, but I suppose there would be more than 100 people who would need to know so that the report could be made, and somebody who would be naturally disgruntled by it could very well have released it.

I have not attempted to try to find where it went out, because I think there are so many places it could have got out that it would be like looking for a needle in a haystack. Maybe we should be trying to find where that particular leak occurred, particularly when there was truth that we were doing this examination. It was hard to take any steps to react in any positive way when the question was put to me.

Mr. Moon called me on Friday afternoon and said, "Is this right?" He had definite information that this was going on and that so and so was about to happen. Of course it was the phrase "about to happen" that bothered me, because I knew it was not about to happen. But that is the way they operate and I was concerned.

Some of my concern, of course, was with Mr. MacDonald, who is the president of the OPP Association. He was most upset because the reporter had naturally gone on to him to say: "What have you got to say about it?" He was hot on the wire to me, saying, "How come you make your announcements through the press rather than dealing with me and otherwise."

Yes, I was most concerned about it. I haven't since had an opportunity of discussing with the commission whether we can try to find where the leak occurred. Maybe I should give some thought to following that up; I will certainly discuss it with the commissioner. But it could have taken place through so many windows that I am not sure there's anything to be gained by it at this time.

I regret that this type of examination has to be done in a fish bowl but it is one of the difficulties you encounter when you are dealing with a government that is as wide open as ours.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister if he is not concerned about the proliferation of plant guards and special constables that we find throughout the province of Ontario.

We find that practically every store will have one, two, three or a half a dozen security guards who not only take care of security within the premises but quite often go out on the street. The various big auto industries have them. They direct traffic and they do practically everything that the regular police officer would do.

Is the minister not concerned that we may be developing large private armies, so to speak, with the proliferation of special constable status to some of these people?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Yes, I am. We do have a proliferation of them, which I suppose reflects once more the society in which we live, in that every plant seems to need a guard and a good number of stores need private detectives of some sort to guard against shoplifting and that type of breach of the Criminal Code.

I am not suggesting we should say there will not be any because they serve a purpose and they help, I suppose, to maintain the law at private expense as opposed to maintaining it at public expense. One of the bills that we have ready for legislation, when we can reach it, is an Act to regulate them more carefully, saying what kind of identification they can carry, what kind of training they may receive, and when and if they may carry any arms at all. They have to get special permission now to be armed and that is very rarely given.

I regret that society needs them, or appears to need them, and I am certainly in favour of this being done at private expense as opposed to public expense. But I am concerned that we don't have greater control over their activities than we presently do. Legislation will be forthcoming shortly.

Mr. B. Newman: I wanted to ask of the minister when he was going to introduce legislation because we really do need guidelines as to the responsibilities of the individuals so named. As well, I would think they should undergo some type of formal training so that they stay within the ambit of their responsibilities, rather than go beyond that.

Mr. Warner: I would like to pursue this point for a moment. The minister made a statement that it is at private cost. I am wondering if he could be a little more specific on that.

For example, in one instance I had to deal with in my riding, it involved one of these security guards who had taken the law into his own hands and severely beaten up a constituent. That security guard had been in the employ of the school board. I take that to be a public responsibility. The school board has seen fit to hire a security outfit in order to guard the schools. It was while on this duty that the particular security guard got involved in an altercation which was entirely his fault and later admitted by the security company to be entirely the fault of the guard. I believe they dismissed the person.

None the less, the point of it all is that when you make the statement about it being a private concern or private money, I wonder where the boundary line is. In this instance, it was a school board which is publicly funded and publicly operated. Should they not be able to draw on the police force, rather than having to subscribe to a security outfit? The standards, as we know, without your legislation, as they stand now, aren't the same. They are far more lax in terms of these security outfits.

There is some question as to how many of them have firearms. In addition to that, they seem to be able to carry other weapons—not firearms, but other types of weapons they can use. I am just wondering where you draw the line. What is your definition of private versus public funds in this? Where do you put the school boards in all this?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I haven't tried to draw any line particularly. You realize that we have special people in this building protecting the security of this building who are not police officers. I don't think that's a bad thing. Mind you, the ones in this building are under the control of this ministry and under the control of the OPP. But there are all sorts of degrees, from this building right down to the smallest factory or store, where they may want to have security guards. Years ago they were simply regarded as night watchmen. I am not comparing all security guards to night watchmen, but so often now instead of having a night watchman they will employ one of these security firms to do that kind of work.

I see nothing the matter with school boards employing private people. I remember when I was on the Etobicoke Hydro Commission we had a security person from private industry who was on guard there all night long, making sure that the building wasn't broken into in any way. They have no right or no authority to take the law into their own hands and certainly not to commit any breach of that law or to commit an assault. Some of them may have special police powers of arrest, but very few of them are licensed to carry arms of any kind. You say they carry other arms. Certainly we would take a dim view if they were carrying police billies or anything of that nature.

It's hard to have them under control all the time but they are inspected at the present time by the OPP and if there are complaints of that nature they should be made known to the OPP. As for saying who could employ them and who couldn't employ them, I think they should be available for everybody to employ. But again, if they commit a breach of the peace, as you indicated they did in the case you referred to, then that of course should be reported to the police and proper police action taken.

Generally, if it is a matter of a breach of the peace or some kind of physical force being used, the security people are the first to call in the police. That's what we tell them: If there's trouble brewing or you think that physical force might be either exercised against you or threatened against you, by all means call in the police. Primarily their job is not a strong-arm job at all.

Mr. McGuigan: I'd like to ask the Solicitor General if he's considered further the small towns which appreciate the efficiency and the professionalization of the Ontario Provincial Police and have over a number of years requested that the OPP take over local services.

I'm thinking particularly of the town of Dresden in the riding of Kent-Elgin, which has made this request a number of times, I think the most recent being August 16 when a delegation visited you. I think we can accept the restraints program in that we can realize the ministry perhaps doesn't have moneys to fund extra police work, but in the case of Dresden they estimate their present cost to be no greater under the municipal system than it would be paying for the services of the OPP.

You have given the answer that the problem is the government's system of funnelling all incoming money into consolidated revenue and therefore it cannot be used to offset the additional costs of the provincial police. I am wondering, sir, what approach you're making to your colleagues, or what approach the members of this House can make to your colleagues, to examine that principle and see if it can't be altered. I wonder if there is some overriding reason that compels them to adhere to that system.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The hon. member for Kent-Elgin has raised this point with me, as he knows, and has brought in a delegation to see me. We are most sympathetic with the request of the people from Dresden to take over policing and hope to do so as soon as financial abilities allow us to do it.

As for financial abilities allowing us to do it, you are right that we have a strict budget this year and although we might be repaid by the good people of Dresden for taking over their policing, that is not the way in which the budget operates. That money would go to the Treasurer and we would still be told to live within our budget.

That is one of the matters that I said I would discuss with the Treasurer and with Management Board. We had started to prepare our background material to present to the Treasurer in regard to Dresden and a number of other towns that are in this same position where the task force suggested we should be taking over policing. It's one of those places where we yet have to move as fully as we'd like to move.

During the time we were in the preparation of this paper, this other directive came out that we should be looking around for further cuts and so the first paper has been side-tracked while we battle with this other problem of reduced personnel. When I get the problem of reduced personnel straightened out I hope we'll be able to go back to the Treasurer and to the cabinet in saying, "All right. In compliance with the recommendations of the task force on policing and at the request of certain towns across the province here is where we can move and it will not cost us a net dollar of anything."

Mr. Makarchuk: I would like to get back to the matter of the security guards and the firm that controls them.

There are a couple of items that are of concern to me. One of them is that there is a considerable amount of foreign ownership of these firms. The firms originate in the United States or some other country—particularly the United States. They come in here and what you have in essence is a large force or an army that is controlled by an outside corporation. I would like to get the minister's opinion as to what his feelings are about this growing tendency on the part of this province to allow these foreign corporations to operate in this province and run these security services. I think we have enough expertise and enough people here in Ontario that we could restrict the trend towards these foreign-owned and foreign-controlled private armies.

A second item that is of concern to me flows from the first point. There is a rumour floating around about who really controls some of these foreign corporations that are involved in the security business. One of the things that seems to be coming out is that perhaps organized crime may be involved in the security business in the United States, and consequently you have that kind of a problem flowing over the border. If you have a corporation and the roots of the corporation are across the boundary lines, you have no control. You really do not know what is happening over there. I would hate to see that situation developing in Canada. I feel that if the minister at this time decides to take some action perhaps we can prevent something of this nature occurring in the future. I would like to hear his comments on these two matters.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: In reply to the member for Brantford, we will certainly take ownership into consideration before we complete our draft legislation. I don't think there is anything in there at the present time to say that they will not be majority controlled by a foreign company. I am not so sure whether we should or should not have such control. It is not a problem at the present time. Certainly if organized crime or the underworld were getting mixed up with them, it would be. They all are inspected by, and their licences are presently governed by, the Ontario Provincial Police who keep a pretty close eye on the situation. If they thought there were organized crime figures behind it, I am sure they would draw that to my attention, or on their own refuse to authorize them.

But there are a good number of large United States companies presently operating here, such as Brinks Express. I am not sure of that; I assume they are owned in the United States. Maybe they are Canadian-owned, so I should be careful in that regard. But I assume they are United States companies—Wells Fargo, I assume again, and Pinkertons. I don't know the ownership of those but I am assuming that they are all majority controlled in the United States.

We have had few complaints about how any of the larger firms conduct themselves. It is generally some of the smaller ones we are concerned with, when it comes to the ethics of their practice. But we will certainly take it under consideration and bear in mind what you have said.

Mr. Lupusella: If I may I would like to change my topic for a while, since in my opening statement, I raised the particular problem in relation to order paper 32, I guess, which is instructing each minister to send the briefing material before the estimates start. I raised this point in relation to that particular ministry that the briefing material was sent on October 7. I don't want to make any dispute about the date when I received this briefing material.

The point I raised in my opening statement was that it was fair for each critic to receive the briefing material a reasonable length of time in advance. This was my main concern. Even though to the minister it is just fine that the briefing material was sent on October 7 and the estimates started some time on October 17, for me it is not a reasonable length of time. I would like to hear the minister making a comment as to whether or not he will accept that reasonable time for me is going to be at least for one month, from the time when the brief of material is sent to the time when the estimates are going to start.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I would only be expressing a personal idea. I would think that one week to 10 days is quite ample if you have a day-to-day knowledge of the work of the ministry by the very fact you are in this House and you know when the estimates are coming up. You knew all summer that we were first on the list. I know that someone from your office was in touch with our office asking for certain information which we tried to supply them.

I think if the actual books were in your hands 10 days in advance, that should be ample. However, I am only expressing a personal opinion because these matters, as I understand it, are set out by the rules of the House. If you want those rules changed, then I suppose they can easily be changed for all ministries by consultation with the three government whips. They can put their heads together and, if they decide that 10 days or a week is unreasonable, they can try to lengthen it. From my point of view, I didn't get at them much before a week in advance myself. Maybe that shows in the way I am handling the estimates. In any event, I would think that for the actual study of these pages, which you can read over pretty quickly, 10 days should be ample.

Mr. Lupusella: With all due respect, as far as I know on the order paper there aren't provisions stating the time when each minister is supposed to send the brief of material. I think we can arrange this time in a very co-operative way. One month for me is a reasonable time to receive the brief of material from the start of the estimates.

As far as we knew about the estimates of the Solicitor General on October 17, we didn't know what was going on beyond that date.

It was in some ways a surprise for us. I think the Solicitor General concurs with me that 10 days is not a reasonable time to send the brief of material.

Mr. Cureatz: I noted previously, about a half hour ago, you commented on the regional municipality police force taking over the responsibilities in the regional municipality from the Ontario Provincial Police, and possibly this will be a little late in asking.

There are a number of constituents in my riding who are quite concerned about Mosport Park Limited. It's a large race-track. When they have large events, quite often the OPP have to bring in from across southern Ontario an extra amount of police force to man the road congestion that takes place, plus the problems that result in the park from the large influx of people.

I am wondering if your department has ever had occasion to consider whether that particular park should bear the expense that is incurred from this large influx of police population. Could you express an opinion as to whether the regional municipality of Durham police force should be thinking of sending a bill to this particular park with regard to the extra expense that will be taking place once they take over that jurisdiction?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The hon. member for Durham East will recall that we had a discussion in the House, I guess in July of this year, in regard to Mosport and the problem that was created there when it was alleged—it was probably correct—that one of our officers suggested they were afraid to go in there. My reply was that the OPP should not be afraid to go and visit any location in the province.

When I said that I was thinking of an area—that they should not as a general rule say, "I am afraid to go into a certain township, or a certain village, or a certain location." I am not suggesting that they should rush, foolhardy, into every situation across the province. Those words were misinterpreted at that time. In any event, generally speaking, the OPP should have no area of this province in which they are intimidated in any way from entering.

Since that time the OPP have had discussions with the management of Mosport and I think have worked out a better understanding with them as to when they can be summoned and when they can't be summoned. Certainly the OPP, in view of that incident, are doing closer patrol work on the perimeter and at Mosport when a big event takes place. Mosport is policed by these private security guards, and I suggested at that time that their internal security force was not fast enough to call upon the OPP if they saw some kind of problem developing. I think the experience showed that the people at Mosport, the internal police, were kind of winking their eye at a great many things that were going on that they shouldn't have been winking their eye at in the way of vandalism and that type of thing and that they should have been calling on the OPP sooner than they were.

That problem, as I say, I think has been worked out and I understand that at the more recent meetings they have not had that kind of trouble, that there has been more active OPP in view and that their own internal people have been working closer with us.

You ask, if and when the region of Durham takes this over, should they bill them? My answer is "no." If they are taking over the responsibility that the OPP had, I think they should give it the same kind of attention that the OPP is giving, and that should be done without specific charge. However, if they want them to do internal policing, that is a different matter. If the management at Mosport wants the Durham police to do some internal policing, then I see no reason why they can't enter into an agreement with them and do that. But I think the kind of policing the OPP has been doing and is currently doing there is a responsibility of the entire community rather than simply the management involved.

Mr. Williams: If I might just come back for a moment to the matter of the air patrol program, I realize the questions I posed earlier perhaps would be more appropriately put in estimates but I wonder if I could speak of the program or ask questions of the program in a more general way?

I'm not personally aware as to how long that aspect of the enforcement program has been in place, and I am just wondering when it did come on stream, what the experience has been as to the success of that program and whether it has been expanded substantially since its inception or it is pretty well maintaining a status quo as far as strength of personnel and equipment is concerned?

Secondly, I believe we also have some limited involvement in the provision of force and equipment with regard to the policing of some of the waterways within our province. I know that this does create some problem in that there is jurisdictional difficulty between what are federally controlled waters and in what areas the province has jurisdiction. I believe that, because of some problems that arose several years ago, the Ontario Provincial Police did establish a force that was particularly trained in the use of watercraft for conducting law enforcement programs on some of our waterways, and I was wondering what the status of that program was at this point in time.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: To take the first question first, again we'll take that as notice and get specific information. I'm guessing; I think they've been in the program about 10 years. I think it's a successful program—that's my understanding of it—and yet I don't think we've given any expansion to it in the last year or two. That's all subject to looking at it more specifically when we reach that vote. As I say, we'll take this as notice that you've asked those questions.

Waterways are a continuing problem for us. I mention particularly the St. Clair River, Detroit River and Lake St. Clair, where you have in some cases municipalities that are charged, such as Sarnia is, with policing right out to the middle of the river. You have the Sarnia police trying to deal with and enforce what are essentially Canada Shipping Act regulations when it comes to discharge of pollutants of one sort or another or even the speed of the vessels there.

It is one matter I want to take up with the federal Solicitor General to see if we can't establish what I would consider a more rational division of when the RCMP look after waterways and when we look after it. Generally speaking, our position is that we are charged with the administration of law of all sorts; yet, as you know, we have a federal force very actively operating here that is now not just limiting itself to certain federal Acts such as the Income and Excise Act, but is also looking at other Acts that customarily the provincial and municipal police have been enforcing.

Waterways are places where the federal police used to take a more active part. They seemed to be happy to get out of waterways and hand it back to us, whereas in some instances they are moving into other fields where I think we would like to have them a little less active. I want to speak with the federal Solicitor General to see whether or not we can't establish a more reasonable rationale for dealing with waterways.

In the meantime, the OPP does have a force which is equipped with very small craft, that is, they're too small really to deal with some of our larger waterways, but they are trying to keep control on certain of the rivers down that I mentioned before. For instance, they're helping the Sarnia police in certain parts of the St. Clair River and further down they're working on the Detroit River and the rivers that run into Lake St. Clair.

They're doing some work on the Thames River in enforcing speed limits. I'm not sure just how many craft they have. They're doing a lot of patrol work throughout the holiday resort countries where the RCMP used to do some of it. Up in the Kenora area they also do a great deal of patrolling in the Lake of the Woods. That is one place where the federal force could be acting more practically than our forces. In the meantime, we're trying to cover those places that the RCMP is not covering.

Mr. Samis: Mr. Chairman, how much time is remaining?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Today or in the total debate?

Mr. Samis: No, today.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Today, about two minutes.

Mr. Samis: I'd like to ask the minister if he can clarify this in the context of what he was just speaking about. We have that particular problem in our part of the province, except it's complicated. We have two added jurisdictions, the province of Quebec and the state of New York, plus we have a new dimension added: that is, the Indians on the St. Regis reserve have claimed jurisdiction over the entire waterway from Valleyfield, Quebec, to Gananoque.

I'd like to ask the minister if he can inform me what orders or what direction he has given to the OPP vis-à-vis that particular problem that has cropped up. I intended to bring it up in the question period today, but I'll probably bring it up tomorrow with your colleague, the Minister of Natural Resources. Can you tell us what instructions your force is under down in that area regarding the people from the Indian reserve who come on to waters marked by the Ministry of Natural Resources as Ontario waters? They are telling these people, "You either pay a $5 hunting fees per day or $50 per season, or else we will remove you from this area forcibly." They have an armed constabulary of approximately 50 people to back up the resolutions passed by the band council.

It does make a fairly difficult situation if you have hundreds who are obviously armed and these part-time constables who are armed. Nobody seems to know what the hell's happening in terms of jurisdiction. The feds completely washed their hands of it. Nobody really should be expected to have to challenge it in court and pay for it himself. I've talked to some of your local officials, and they said they just hope the problem goes away, in effect. I was wondering if you might be able to shed a little bit of light on this very murky situation in our area.

I might suggest that I'd be willing to give the minister two hours to research it and answer it adequately.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1977

The House resumed at 8:02 p.m.

On vote 1601:

Mr. Chairman: When the House rose at 6 p.m. the member for Cornwall had asked a question of the Solicitor General. Does the minister have a reply?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have some information. If the hon. member finds it not sufficient we can, perhaps, get further information for him if he will let us know. We can get it for him either on or off the record, whichever way he wishes it.

A fair number of Indians have been appointed by the St. Regis Band Council as game wardens, not special constables of the OPP. It is the first year they are enforcing a band bylaw. They are issuing a licence, $5 per day, $50 per season, to cover hunting in the waters, marshes and islands in the St. Lawrence River, from Gananoque east into the province of Quebec.

The Indians have a claim which is currently in the federal courts for all the waters east of Gananoque into Quebec. Most of the problems have been referred to Natural Resources. Hunters must buy two licences. There have been no threats of violence so far. There is nothing that the OPP believe they can do until they receive some complaint of a breach of the Criminal Code.

I don't have the answers of what they might do if they got that complaint, but I suppose until some actual circumstances are brought to their attention they are hesitant to deal with it in a theoretical way. However, it rises out of the Indian land claims that have not yet been resolved. Whether the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller) will have more information for you tomorrow or not, I don't know. I agree, there is confusion over the matter.

Mr. Samis: Can I just follow that up, Mr. Chairman? First of all, my understanding is, having talked to the federal ministry, that the matter is not in the federal courts. In fact no claim has been filed, which further complicates the matter.

I realize the whole question of the claims is essentially federal, for adjudication, and I realize the rights of fishermen and hunters comes more under the Ministry of Natural Resources. But there is a problem because a part of the river is clearly outlined in maps issued by this province as belonging to this province and hunters and fishermen use and purchase their fishing and hunting licences on that basis.

Can you give us any idea if any instructions have been given to the OPP regarding any claims made by the Indians on what are marked by provincial maps as Ontario waters? I might inform the minister that the province of Quebec have given very specific directions to the Sureté de Quebec to protect the rights of their waters which the Indians are challenging and claiming?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I know of no specific direction that we have given the OPP in regard to Indian land claims. I know there is a great deal of confusion in various parts of the province arising out of the claims they've made, including access roads, and now this one on the hunting rights as well. I suppose this is one of the difficulties the police find themselves in. Their position is to maintain the law and sometimes the law is confused. Until the courts clarify some of these points, the police have to do their best with enforcing it the way they see it, but perhaps that's not good enough under the circumstances.

This is a new problem to me and we will find out just what instructions, if any, have been given to the police, and take under advisement, if none have been given, what we should give them.

Mr. Samis: Could I just clarify it for the sake of my own constituents, Mr. Chairman? Would the procedure be that you would act upon the directives or the suggestions of the Minister of Natural Resources in this regard, if he were to make a request of your ministry that you were to ask the OPP to enforce the laws of Ontario to protect the rights of Ontario residents, would you act upon such a recommendation?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I don't know just where that recommendation would come from. I think we would want to take the Ministry of Attorney General into account as to advice concerning the Indian land claims rather than the Ministry of Natural Resources. I don't know, frankly, of any subject that is quite so confusing as the matter of Indian land claims. Depending where you seek your advice, you seem to get different answers. But certainly when it comes to a matter of law, our final answer would be the opinion of the Attorney General's ministry. We might consult with Natural Resources, but our final opinion would come from the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry).

Mr. Samis: Can I ask one final question, Mr. Chairman? Would the minister be willing to check into the matter as to exactly what orders have been issued this year to the Long Sault detachment of the OPP, regarding regulations and enforcement of those regulations on the St. Lawrence River from the Quebec border up to Gananoque?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I understand that no specific instructions have been given, but I will be ready to confirm that or otherwise by next Friday.

Mr. Chairman: I would just like to inform the committee that we are down to less than 14 hours for the complete discussion of these estimates. I wonder if the committee would be agreeable if we went back to item by item discussion. Would the committee be agreeable?

All right, we are on item 1 of this vote.

Mr. Breugh: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I would like to address some remarks to something that deals with policy in terms of policing. It also deals with legislation, which comes under this main office vote. Specifically, I wrote to the Solicitor General—I believe it was August—detailing some difficulties we were having with a strike situation that we find rather unique.

We are a heavily organized area of the province and we have had considerable experience in strike situations from the trade union point of view, from the public's point of view, from the municipality's point of view; and a little more specifically, and I want to deal with this in some depth, from the police point of view.

We have encountered some difficulties that we are not familiar with, quite frankly. It points out some areas where there is a need for legislation, some areas where there is a need, I think, for some further training of police officers in Ontario, and some clearly defined policy set down by local police commissions.

The instigation—I suppose you can use that word—of this particular series of thoughts in my own mind came from a strike that is at a small plant in Ajax called Sandra Instant Coffee. It's a strike situation that has been under way since the latter part of June, all during the course of the summer months and continuing until this morning. There has continued to be some great difficulty in the role played by the Durham regional police. We have discussed this with the chief and with the police commission and with several people involved directly in the strike situation.

It comes down to that irony that you can form a legal bargaining unit; you can run off and try to get yourself a first contract, which is sometimes a very elusive thing; you can have a legal picket line in front of a plant. The problem is, of course, what role does the police force play in that situation? The police are bound by other legislation to provide the company with access to the plant. It points out some rather serious things.

For example, I want to quote to you a headline from the Oshawa Times, not noted to be a newspaper that's particularly in favour of organized labour at all. This one comes from Tuesday, October 4. The headline is, "Police Corps Thwarts Pickets." Clearly one of our initial problems is that the police force in the Durham region, attempting to enforce existing legislation, is seen in the public eye to be taking sides.

I talked at some length with the chief and with several of his officers, and that is not their intention at all. Their intention is to maintain order on the picket line; but, of course, there is a basic conflict for anyone in a strike situation. Setting aside the merits of anybody's case in that particular labour dispute, I would like to try to focus on the role of the police force in that strike situation.

First of all, the picket line itself: Its legal definition is rather dicey. You can have a legal picket line, the purpose of which is to perform some kind of economic sanction against a company in the midst of a labour dispute, but, oddly enough, the police are bound by law to break the picket line. They are bound by law to provide access to the company at virtually all reasonable hours and under most circumstances.

Frankly though, it comes down to a rather ridiculous situation in modern-day society where the police chief, or whoever is in charge of the police operation, takes a look at the picket line, and if he has sufficient manpower to provide access to the company he then proceeds to do just that. On the other hand, if he takes a look at that picket line and it is his judgement that he cannot provide access, he doesn't.

So you get the kind of irony, in Ontario in 1977, when we think we're all very civilized and all that, where a police chief is looking at a picket line, which in this case was somewhere between 30 and 59 employees, mostly young and mostly female, and he is also looking at his police force, and he is saying, "Sure I can cross that picket line." He is, therefore, bound to provide access for the company—in this case to escort a bus taking people, who are in the colloquial deemed to be scabs and strikebreakers, across a legal picket line and thus ruining the value of the picket line itself.

On the other hand, I can't recall in recent memory any time when, for example in the case of the United Automobile Workers at Oshawa with a membership of 22,000, most of whom are not female and most of whom tend to be rather on the young and healthy side, the police even attempted to provide access to General Motors in that kind of a strike situation. It's simply a matter of somebody looking at a picket line and deciding, "Can my police officers provide access to the company by going through that picket line?" If they aren't very large in numbers and if they aren't very strong-looking people, he says "yes"; if he is looking at 22,000 auto workers parading up and down Park Road, he says "no". That strikes me as a particularly ridiculous situation to put anyone into, let alone a police officer or worse yet a police chief in this day and age.

I want to point out some other things that have happened, rather strangely connected to this labour dispute, all of which centre on the actions of the Durham regional police force. I want to make it very clear I am not criticizing, particularly, the work of those individuals; nor am I criticizing the very fine chief of police that we have, because I find him a most reasonable person; nor even the work that is done by the regional police commission, most of whom I know and several of whom I have talked with.

I am focusing on the legislation and the training of police officers, which are very much a part of your responsibility. I find that people on the picket line are charged with some misdemeanour, usually mischief or something of that nature. It usually turns out to be that somebody threw an egg at a truck. That's all well and good, but they are charged with mischief and taken to a police station. The justice of the peace in that particular jurisdiction has been releasing them on condition they don't go near the picket line and that they stay away from the strike-bound plant.

That seems to me to be a pretty tough price for somebody to pay. In fact, they are losing their legal rights to picket because they threw an egg at a truck. That is not an exaggeration, that has happened in about 15 or 20 cases. If your trade union local is small for starters and it dwindles as the strike goes on, which is a normal situation in a first contract, then you are looking at maybe 30 people left to form a picket line, of which 15 of them are facing a court order that says they cannot do so. That seems to me to be inequity.

Again, the police officer is charging somebody clearly with mischief, because he has seen it, for throwing an egg at a truck; which strikes me as being nonsensical in the first instance. The ramifications are not. They are put into a police cruiser, which is a threatening thing in itself; they are taken off to a station and given a release. They don't get out of jail unless they sign a release form which says that they cannot go back to that picket line. Surely that's a pretty substantial price to pay in legal terms for perhaps a rather thoughtless act but not a particularly dangerous one.

I find, too, that there are several complaints that police officers in that situation are identifying people before they're charging them. By that I mean very simply that they're going up to somebody and saying, "You're going to get it today," and subsequently they do get charged. A consequence of all that is that they lose another picket off the line. That's a difficult thing to substantiate, but I have heard enough evidence from people on the picket lines, some of whom are involved in picketing and some of whom are not, to indicate to me at least that there's a good deal of truth in that approach. Without using the old hackneyed term "harassment," I don't think that's a technique that a police officer should be using.

In areas where we've been able to substantiate a particular officer who was having some difficulty with the picketers, I must say that the chief has been good enough to reassign that individual. But it does point out that there are officers on the job in a strike situation who are not discharging their duties in the most neutral way possible, to put it politely—and one might even say there are officers who are taking sides.

I suppose that with a small group of people picketing and, most of the time anyway, a small group of officers just in general surveillance, it's natural that there will be some human byplay back and forth, that there will be some hard feelings, that there will be some bent egos in the process. But it points out a very difficult part of a police officer's training when he is expected to respond in a strike situation, which is certainly far different from most of the things that an officer would be expected to do.

While I spent some time on that picket line, I found some other things happening. What brought this home to me is that I've always been a great supporter of that particular police force and I'm a great admirer of the chief of that force. So I'm not dealing with somebody that I think is an enemy at all. In fact, I think of all of those men and women who work on that force as my friends, because I happen to know a large number of them. It's not some vague, mysterious police officer that I don't know. These are human beings that I live and work with and do know.

I looked at surveillance techniques—and "surveillance" has always struck me as being kind of a very difficult word for me to accept, for one thing, although it seems relatively harmless. However, it has occurred to me as I watch these police officers doing their jobs, filming the picket line and taking still pictures at random, what do they do with all of that information? Where do all those pictures go? In most instances there are no charges laid—absolutely none—so what is the argument for saying that that the officer ought to be doing that?

I had a little discussion with the chief about this, and he said, "Well, they need to use surveillance techniques"—that's true—"and they need to use all the modern gadgets that are available to police forces these days." I don't really argue with that when they're chasing criminals or what not. But in a labour situation what is the purpose of taking pictures of people on the picket line? No one is suggesting that they're all going to be charged. No one is suggesting that they're doing anything illegal. Why, therefore, do we have police officers doing this kind of work? It strikes me as being particularly inappropriate in that particular thing.

The basic conflict there is the duty of the police officers to provide access to the plant. When that access is going through a line of probably less than 30 people, and a number of them tend to be on the young side and a number of them tend to be female, there's not a very threatening situation for any police officer to face. Most of them think they can get through that line without any real problem.

There has been a reasonable co-operation. It seems to break down on the line itself. There is some problem in that instance, and in others that I know of, with the role that security guards play. I understand the Solicitor General is prepared to bring in some legislation in Ontario which says that a security guard can't carry a shotgun and shoot people. That's all well and good, except I don't see that as being an immediate problem in Ontario. I have yet to see a security guard carrying a shotgun—most of the ones that I've seen aren't big enough to carry one anyway—but I don't think they would know what to do with it. I would hope that there wouldn't be much in Ontario along the lines of what we have seen in the province of Quebec.

I appreciate the effort, and I certainly agree that we don't want armed security guards who are not police officers on the job. But I do say that a number of instances I have seen on that line and in other labour situations point out a need to review substantially what a security guard is.

I see a number of very aggressive young people employed by security firms who are doing some rather strange things. They are participating with the pickets. They are going well beyond guarding the company property and seeing that it is secure. They are going well beyond that into having little discussions with people on the picket line. A little baiting goes on back and forth. A good deal of hard feeling ensues.

We had a rather unique rally in that particular plant some two weeks ago when one of the security guards saw fit to attend the rally. The feeling is rather high among those people who were strikers and supporters that that was an inappropriate thing for that young gentleman to do. He ran down and jumped on to a police cruiser. The officer in charge did not recognize who he was and couldn't figure out what all the commotion was about.

I think it points up that in addition to some kind of legislation dealing with whether or not they can be armed, you might give some thought to somewhat more stringent regulations about what a security officer can or cannot do and in particular what his role is when the company is in a strike situation. Because a security guard is not there to keep the peace; he is there to keep the property secure, which in large measure means that he has no sensible reason ever to go near the picket line, given that a legal picket line at least does not go anywhere near his company's property.

I think if you are going to review the legislation under which these security guards function, one thing you ought to do is clarify that in a strike situation they really don't have any call to be anywhere near the picket line. They certainly do have an obligation to, and they are hired to, keep the property secure. But I think we have to be rather definitive on exactly what they are to do.

The end result in this situation is that a police force that I support wholeheartedly; that I think has done a fine job, that I am aware has good supervision; that works very hard at having officers well educated and well trained; that, if there is an occasional breakdown or problem with its officers, tends to deal with them expeditiously—that kind of a police force which works very hard at its public image has now got a very bad image. I think in large measure it is not its fault at all; it is the fault of this government and the kind of legislation that they have.

A week ago I introduced some legislation; a private member's bill—founded basically on some legislation that is at work in Quebec and a couple of other jurisdictions, toughened up a little bit—which simply says that a police officer in a strike situation is there to keep the peace. That is his job, nothing more.

In fact he does not have to provide access to the company property, except under conditions that most of us would readily agree to—that management can go in, that non-union personnel can go in, that you can go in for emergency purposes; a number of extremely valid things. But he does not escort, nor does he have any legal obligation to escort scabs and strike breakers across the legal picket line—in fact, I simply put in one clause which indicates that a police officer is there and when that happens he would be empowered under the law to charge them with petty trespass.

I think you are going to have to look at that kind of legislation. Whether you choose to support that particular private member's bill or design one of your own, you are going to have to look at that situation, because as economic conditions get worse in the province of Ontario you are going to find more and more situations like that.

If you open your eyes and look around one of these days, you will see a large number of small companies being organized for the first time, having great difficulty getting a first contract. Long and bitter labour disputes are going to be the order of the day there, because there are severe problems, and police forces, if they are still required to provide access under the laws of the province of Ontario, are going to find themselves right in the middle of a labour dispute where they don't want to be and frankly where they have no business being.

I think you are going to have to look very seriously at that imbalance. For one thing, at a time when you among others, and the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) in particular, are preaching a good deal of restraint for municipal and provincial police forces, saying that you can't spend any more money, how sensible is it to have, as they had on this particular morning, "seven cruisers, three paddy wagons and four unmarked cars at the scene"? And the number of police officers, some brought in at time and a half and double time to escort the bus through, was something like 40.

So you have 40 police officers, a large number of cruisers—seven of them—three paddy wagons and four unmarked cars at one particular labour strike where the picket line numbers 30 people. That is ridiculous. It is not only ridiculous, it is awfully expensive. That has happened repeatedly at that particular labour situation.

For somebody who is preaching restraint and for somebody who is very concerned about the cost of municipal police operations and policing in general in the province of Ontario, if you want to save a lot of money, there is a simple piece of legislation which would do a number of things. It would get the police officers out of an extremely awkward situation that they don't even want to be into; secondly, it would save you a good deal of money.

There are a couple of other points I want to bring out in wrapping up this particular discussion. I sense that in this particular situation, under these laws, with police officers doing things they don't want to do, everybody is unhappy. I can tell you for sure those people who are on that legal picket line are very unhappy. They are seeing their own tax money being paid to assist the company. That's precisely the way they see it. That might not be totally true, but that certainly is the public perception of it.

I see a police force operating in a strongly organized trade union community where the bulk of the community belongs to some local; and they don't like it either, the public at large is pretty upset about that. I have talked to the police officers who worked the picket line. Let me tell you they are most unhappy to be put in that situation, because when they leave that line and go back into their own community, they are dealing in large measure with organized labour.

In fact, as a little side note, their police association has used a lot of information a lot of technique and a lot of bargaining procedures it has picked up from organized locals in the area. They have a good relationship. They are an unhappy group of people just now, enforcing a law they don't believe in, frankly.

If you look at the company, it's unhappy because it would like to see more officers there every day. Of course the company is not paying for it. If you wanted to take a half-measure, you might try billing the company for the police services provided.

The last group that most people probably wouldn't think about, but I did, is that little group of people inside the bus. I wonder if anybody is doing anything for them. Here they are in tough economic times attempting to survive; some of them—curses to Canada Manpower—being sent to that strike situation by Canada Manpower under the ridiculous set of rules and regulations by which that particular organization functions.

They are being sent to a strike-bound plant. They are being threatened by their fellow workers, in some instances. They are being escorted by the police force. They are being crammed into a little bus, which currently is varying their hours. Sometimes they go to work at 6 o'clock in the morning; sometimes they go to work at 10 o'clock. Sometimes they come out at 3 o'clock; sometimes they come out at 5 o'clock. They always come out under a situation of considerable emotional stress and strain. They are not exactly being paid large amounts of money, but oddly enough, in that situation people breaking the strike are being paid more than the local was asking for in its set of negotiations.

It strikes me you have a situation where absolutely no one is satisfied with the status quo; not the officers, not the picketers, not the strikers, not the community, not even the people working inside—and I am told, though I don't really have this on first-hand knowledge, not even the company is happy with the given situation.

Wouldn't it be better if we said, "Yes, you have a right to organize"? We do that in Ontario. We make it very difficult for people to organize into a bargaining unit, but we at least acknowledge they have a legal right to do that. We also acknowledge that in most situations they have a legal right to strike.

Wouldn't it also be a sensible thing to do to say that that picket line has a legal definition, which ensures the police officers functioning in carrying out their duty will not be seen to be taking sides? Set aside whether they actually are or not but they won't be seen to be, because that is the concern in that particular community. Wouldn't it give to all concerned a sense of fairness that they are operating under a clearly set out set of rules and that everyone understands the circumstances? I think they do now, but they can function without animosity back and forth.

Let me put it as bluntly as I can. You have taken a police force that had immense respect in its community and tossed them into a situation that is intolerable for all concerned. It is going to be a long time before people in that area, in that community, have regained the kind of respect they had for their own police force some months ago.

Maybe I am a little more concerned than some other people might be. But in my community, where there is a strong trade union influence throughout the community in everything we do, the right to organize is a clearly recognized right. It galls us no end that our tax money and our laws in the province of Ontario are doing things which threaten the livelihood of those people, who had a legal right to organize into a bargaining unit in the first instance. It galls us even more when our own police officers, who are our friends and who have worked long and hard for us, are doing things they don't want to do because the law requires they do it.

I suggest, Mr. Minister, whether you choose to adapt, rearrange—whatever, the private bill that I put before this House that its high time that you look very closely at that kind of legislation for the province of Ontario. It is my guess that you are going to see more and more of that same situation. We have seen it before in Ontario and it has not been healthy for anybody involved.

I suggest that we need substantial changes in that legislation and that we need substantial changes in the training of police officers who are expected to function in a strike situation. I sense there is a great deal of urgency about it. There certainly is in that one Ajax situation, and I would put the case to you that in tough economic times, you're going to see more and more of that across Ontario. It's going to be a matter that deserves your utmost priority.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Oshawa has opened up a wide field for discussion and I'm sure we could all get into it and carry it on for some length of time. Let me, however, read in part from my letter to the hon. member, dated August 30, 1977, in reply to his letter raising some of the questions he has discussed tonight.

I'm quoting: "The role of the police in strike situations is a very difficult one indeed.

Police attend at the scene of a strike only if there are reasonable grounds to believe there will be breaches of the law. Police in such situations are there to protect property as well as the rights of citizens, including demonstrators, management and customers.

"One of the most difficult areas police officers find themselves concerned with is the right of those who are not on strike to enter company premises unimpeded. Wherever possible, persons desiring to enter their place of employment are safely permitted to do so. No person can compel another to abstain from doing anything that he has a lawful right to do, or to do anything that he has a lawful right to abstain from doing."

Then just carrying on a little further: "I cannot emphasize too much that the police are under a statutory duty to protect persons and property, prevent breaches of the peace and to ensure that the owner and his invitees are not lawfully denied access to the premises."

As the hon. member knows, the subject he entered into tonight is really a matter of labour law. Police don't make these laws; it is their duty to enforce the law. I too have spoken to Chief John Jenkins in regard to the matter. He may not be happy with having to do this, but he didn't express that to me; he certainly didn't express any difficulty or any lack of understanding what his responsibility was, when he runs into this unhappy situation of a strike.

It would be very easy to take the majority position, and certainly in the strike position the majority of people, certainly those on the scene, would like the picket line protected. That, of course, is the very time when police are in difficulties, when they have to protect the rights of minorities. I think that is a position that my hon. friend is overlooking: that under the present law, minorities have the right to enter that plant and management has the right of access to it.

You speak about the police being bound by law to break the picket line. It's not a case of breaking the picket line. The picket has no right to try and keep people out who have a lawful right to get in there, and whom the management want to have into that plant. So that is all the police are doing. They are not setting out to break a picket line; they're trying to protect the rights—even though they may be minority rights—of the people who want to enter that plant.

As to whether a plant should be closed or not is an entirely different matter. You mentioned General Motors. My understanding of General Motors and plants of that size is that they just don't try to operate. They've learned long ago that they can expect a few strikes in their lifetime. They are financially geared for them, and as long as the strikes don't last too long it's part of doing business these days. The large plants like General Motors, or Ford or Stelco, they just don't try to operate during a strike situation.

It's the little plant that tries to operate. It's a financial war, as you know. There's no question about it. A strike situation is economic warfare. You say: "Honour that picket line and don't let anybody through it. Don't charge the police with the responsibility to let people through it." Whose side are the police on in that case? You're asking them to take the side of the picketers at a time when the picketers have no right to restrain people who have a lawful right to get in there from entering that plant. So you were the one who was asking the police to be partial; that is, to take sides.

When we come to this matter of economic warfare, you're saying to cut the plant off from operating but continue to let those on the picket line take whatever economic means they want, whether it's taking some other job or doing work at other times. You're not ready, as I understand it, to say that the picketers will not take up other employment, but you're ready to say to the business that they must cease operations. I ask you, just how fair is that? However, when I talk that way I know that I'm getting into the field of labour law and that type of question had best be discussed with the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) or when your bill comes forward.

As I say, when there is a strike, the majority of people out there are against the company; and when the police are called upon to protect the rights of the company, the owners of the company or those who want to gain access, it is not an easy situation—and no one claims that the lot of the policeman is easy. But until the law is changed, the police are duty-bound to try to support anybody who wants access to that plant lawfully. I think it is unreasonable for you to suggest that in carrying out that duty they are acting partially in some way under the present law.

Mr. Breagh: I would like to respond briefly to some of the things you have said.

I have here a picture, which will not go into Hansard, but it shows our own police officers escorting a bus through a picket line. I have been there when it has happened. You say they don't break the picket line. I'm telling you that the very purpose of having all those police officers there every morning is to break that picket line. That's precisely what you see them doing. They're providing an escort service for a company to physically break a legal picket line.

I might add that, when you're dealing with workers who are particularly young and female, the threat of police officers who are particularly large and male can be a very threatening experience. That is exactly what is happening. It would be fine if we could stay inside this House and not deal with the real world. The real world is that some time tomorrow morning there will be some police officers from the Durham regional force leaning on some very young female workers.

It's an unpleasant task for the officer to do, that's true, but take a look at somebody who is on the receiving end of that. It becomes a little more than an unpleasant task. Those officers are well trained; they are physical. Those officers are a threatening sight for someone who weighs 90 pounds. And, unfortunately, they use that particular phenomenon all too well.

You said the companies don't try to operate. I'm here to tell you that there were occasions in Oshawa when members of local 222 were dealing with a company that was trying to operate and where a police force attempted to cross the picket line and escort scabs and strikebreakers through the line. It doesn't happen any more, because the last time I recall that, I think, was a strike in the late 1960s at a factory called Duplate—also a UAW plant—where something like 200 police officers attempted to drive what is known in the trade as a flying wedge through about 800 auto workers. The wedge went in part way, but did not go all the way through that picket line. Since that occasion, I don't remember one other instance when the police attempted to escort anybody through a legal picket line in that community. It just does not happen.

You're saying that perhaps I would put a measure of unfairness against the company. I'm quite prepared to admit my bias about that, but I am making the point specifically, as I did in the bill, that I want police officers—whether you're calling it labour legislation or something else, it is the police officer on the street who has to do his duty—and I am saying I want that police officer, in the eyes of the law and in every respect of the law, strictly neutral so that he does not have to provide access, except under those circumstances where we all agree it is a reasonable thing for him to do.

I think that's a very serious problem and I want to re-emphasize that it is not an academic argument. I know that tomorrow morning the same thing will happen again that happened this morning. I had people in my office before I left for Queen's Park today, who again gave me a rather substantial tirade against our police officers.

I attempted to point out that it was not the officers' fault, that they were simply enforcing the law as they had to. But it did not sit very well with those people to see police officers providing an escort through a picket line. I think you are going to have to address yourself to it in a way somewhat more substantial than you have up until this particular moment.

Mr. Lawlor: It is pure delusion to think you are impartial. You have to choose one way or the other on the issue.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I can only reiterate what I have said. My friend seems to say he wants them strictly neutral. In favour of the picketers is the way I interpret that. They are neutral as far as the enforcement of the law is concerned.

Mr. Lawlor: You want them in favour of the company.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: If the picketers are permitting, as the law provides they do, access to that plant by those people who want to get in and out of that plant, then there will be no need for the police to be there. But when the picketers start interfering with the rights of people to enter that plant, that is when the police are called and that is when the confrontations take place. Maybe you should speak to some of your union people who are the ones that established that confrontation, who say, "We are going to keep out those who have a legal right to enter there." If you want the law changed, you can bring your bill up.

Mr. Lawlor: That is a regular 19th century, archaic interpretation of property rights.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That may or may not be, but the police are there to enforce the laws that exist.

Mr. Lawlor: It is a benighted law.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Don't criticize the police for that.

Mr. Breaugh: We are criticizing you.

Mr. Lawlor: We are criticizing you.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: What are you criticizing me for; because of the law that exists in that regard? Is that it?

Mr. Breaugh: Yes.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: All right then, criticize me all you want for the state of the labour law of this province, but don't reflect on the police who are doing their best to remain impartial and enforce the laws that exist. You can put the blame on my shoulders if you want.

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, come off it now.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The hon. member for Lakeshore is sufficiently knowledgeable of the law—

Hon. W. Newman: I doubt it.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: —to know that for those who have a right to get into that plant that right exists whether the plant is picketed or not.

Mr. Haggerty: I want to ask the minister a few questions. On a number of occasions I have asked the minister in the past about the proposed agreement between the federal government and the province of Ontario on sharing of the police cost. How far has that advanced now for final agreement with the federal government to share the cost? I understand a study was supposed to be continuing for the last three or four years.

The other point I would like to ask the minister about is the matter concerning the amendment to the Municipal Act that will provide some type of control over the matter of questionable entertainment along certain streets; for example Yonge Street, and perhaps in other communities in the province of Ontario. Does he feel that the amendment to the Municipal Act will bring some control over this type of entertainment?

The reason I ask the question is that I think it should be a mandatory law across the province of Ontario. I suggest that perhaps it should come under some sections of the Criminal Code or some provincial legislation without trying to get the municipality involved in cleaning up such a nuisance in any municipality.

I know it wasn't too long ago there was public interest here, particularly related to Yonge Street. The law enforcement officers gradually got off their good intentions and started to crack the whip and clean up the mess along Yonge Street. I am afraid if it comes under a municipal bylaw, that means that they will have to go out and hire a law officer to enforce it. There are not too many municipal bylaws today that are being enforced by local law enforcement officers. [8:45]

The third point I want to raise with the minister is the matter concerning the removal of judges from the police commission. I am sure that the minister is well aware of the backlog of court cases waiting to be heard today and I think this is one area where you can put a judge back on the bench to do a job that he was appointed to in the first place.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: In regard to the first question that the hon. member for Erie asked, on sharing costs: I assume that you mean by that the request that Ontario and Quebec have made—and have repeated a number of times—to the federal government to recompense us for the similar duties that the RCMP do in the other provinces.

We are getting nowhere with that request. I made it again to them at a meeting of the Solicitors General and the Attorneys General at the end of June. They listened to it very politely but there was certainly no suggestion that they would react favourably to it. Their reply to it is that they are collecting from the other provinces for the duties that the other provinces might be doing if they were in the same position as Ontario and Quebec.

We disagree with them on that. They are upping their charges, or they propose to increase their charges, to the other provinces for that type of police administration.

Quebec was the most vocal in making this demand at our last meeting in June. I supported Quebec at that time in the position they were taking, but I would not want to indicate to this House that I thought that we were going to recover that amount or any part of it.

I wasn't sure of your second question, unless it had to do with bylaw enforcement officers and the fact that the OPP are hesitant to act as bylaw enforcement officers. Where we have a contract with a municipality to do their municipal policing for them, then they will act as bylaw enforcement officers. If they are just doing general policing of that municipality as they do in wide areas of the province, then they will not undertake to enforce the municipal bylaws, feeling that that municipality can do that for themselves by employing their own officer. I think that would be the least expensive way for that municipality to handle it.

Of course, if the OPP undertook to do it for the municipalities where they are not being paid to police, then it would increase the need for high-priced personnel—and generally bylaw enforcement is not that difficult and does not require the expertise of a police officer.

I'm not sure that was your question, but if it is not, you can enlarge upon it.

Judges on police commissions: the bill that I expect to be introducing shortly for the three-man commissions across the province proposes that the appointment of a judge be optional; in other words, if the judge is happy—and many of them are—to carry on as one of the persons on that commission the Lieutenant Governor in Council may appoint that judge. On the other hand, if it is a municipality where the judge does not want to assume that responsibility without extra remuneration then the Lieutenant Governor in Council may appoint somebody else in lieu of the judge.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Without trying to limit the debate, we seem to be doing a lot of questioning and discussion on matters other than vote 1601. It seemed to have been agreed a few minutes ago when the Deputy Speaker was in the chair that we would try to confine our remarks to 1601 until we clear that vote. We haven't been ruling people out of order who may be on other items and that will continue, but I would ask those who can have their remarks attached to a vote later on in these estimates to hold them until we get to that vote, rather than continue raising these matters on vote 1601, if you so desire.

Does the hon. member for Erie have any further questions?

Mr. Haggerty: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The point I wanted to clarify is that I am concerned about this Municipal Act that would provide some control over exotic dancers, perhaps—questionable entertainment in municipalities. I feel that saddling the municipality with the responsibility for policing just adds a further cost which I believe should be borne by the police association or the police department or the regional police department, whatever it may be—regional police commission.

The other matter, dealing with the agreement with the federal and the provincial governments; the reason I raise this matter with the minister is that in the Niagara region, for example, the cost of policing in that municipality is perhaps one of the highest items that there is to raise taxes at a local level. I suggest that I think it's time that we should be changing this. Local taxation shouldn't be provided to pay for the cost of policing federal legislation as it relates to the Criminal Code. That's the point I wanted to make to the minister.

The other matter is: the regional municipality of Niagara in 1978 will continue policing all municipalities. I believe there will be a loss of some 40 OPP officers in the community and to replace them I think some reporter has suggested that it would take 60 local police officers. The question is, where are those 40 OPP's going? Are we establishing another kingdom here some-place along the line, that we're going to have more civil servants along the line, an overlapping of men throughout the province of Ontario? Where are these men going to be located?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member raises three or four new points. I'm not an expert on exotic dancers, but I have seen a few from time to time—

Mr. Lawlor: Have you ever seen yourself dance?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Yes, I'm dancing right now, I don't think very exotically.

Mr. Samis: Not aesthetically pleasing either.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: But I do believe that they are—

Mr. Eakins: Honest John MacBeth.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: —probably not breaking any laws at the present time, as they are interpreted, if they stick to dancing. If they get into other fields, then I think the ones that my friend is concerned about may be breaches of the Criminal Code. If they are breaches of the Criminal Code, then of course it is more than we want the bylaw enforcement officers to be looking after. That is a matter for the police.

So if it's strictly a job of—

Mr. Haggerty: Surveillance.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: —supervising these so-called body rub places, then I think that is a matter for the—

Mr. Eakins: No, it's harassment.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: —local bylaw enforcement officers. I doubt if there are very many communities that don't have their own police forces or who pay the province to do their policing for them, that would have that kind of bylaw permitting these body rub shops—or outlawing them, either one—without a licence. But if there are, I'm unaware of them—and that's a poor way of putting it. All I am saying is that if it gets into the kind of offence that I think you're concerned with, then it is a police matter and the OPP are concerned with any breaches of the Criminal Code.

Getting onto federal legislation, and having the RCMP pay for it completely, that's certainly a concept of law that we haven't bought over the years under our provincial rights under the BNA Act. The administration of justice has been the responsibility of the provinces. I know we don't want to pass that responsibility on to the federal authorities. The enforcement of the Criminal Code has always been regarded as a provincial matter.

As I was speaking this afternoon, I said I think there are some fields where I would like to see the RCMP retreat a little and somewhere I would like to see them advance. Theoretically, I think the enforcement of all laws, whether federal, provincial or municipal, are a matter of the province's jurisdiction. But traditionally, the RCMP have taken over the administration of certain laws, for example, the Narcotics Act; and they have taken over in the excise and the income tax fields. They are concerned very much with certain kinds of white-collar crime and are taking a more active part there.

As I mentioned this afternoon, they seem to be vacating some of the fields that they used to occupy, such as those under the Navigable Waters Protection Act and the Canada Shipping Act. There is a great deal of confusion about it, but I am not about to suggest that the province should abdicate or hand over to the federal government its long-accepted duty of administering justice, including that of the Criminal Code, even though it is a federal statute.

You asked about some 40 people who, you gave me to believe, would be leaving the OPP in the Niagara Regional Police takeover. I am not sure of that figure. I don't know whether you got it from me or from the ministry. But presuming it is right, I imagine some of them will be retiring and some of them may be going to the regional force. But many of the complement will be moving into other detachments across the province which are short or understaffed at the present time, and some of the complement will be used for detachments in northern Ontario where we are short. If you want a specific breakdown of where those people are going, I have seen it and I can get a copy of it to you; that is, officer's name and what is happening to him. But even though the officer may be retiring, the complement will be used elsewhere in the force.

Mr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should ask you for a ruling. You were mentioning earlier about staying on the vote. Would I be in order to proceed a little further with what the member for Oshawa had to say? Was he in order on his speech?

Mr. Lawlor: Never ask that question.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I would point out to the hon. member that we have used up seven hours of our time. If you wish to pursue the matter, I will allow you to. If you could hold the item until we get to the proper vote and item in the estimates, it would be preferable.

Mr. Davidson: I will be very brief, Mr. Chairman.

I think perhaps the minister has missed the point that the member for Oshawa was trying to make. I don't think that he or the minister is in disagreement with the existing law relating to the right of access. What I think he was trying to ask the minister was, do the police forces in this province have the right to act as an escort committee for people who are trying to gain entrance to a plant?

I can give you specific examples, because I worked in the labour movement for 10½ years prior to being elected to this House. I can cite occasions where people who were trying to gain access to the plant met a mile outside of town, and the company phoned the local police department, which lined cars up both in front and in back of the people who were going in and drove with them through that one mile to get into the plant. I think this is what the member for Oshawa was trying to say.

Mr. Samis: Tell them where it was.

Mr. Davidson: Yes, if you'd like to know where it was, it was in Alexandria. It was the Square C Textiles plant, and the dispute was between that company and the Textile Workers' Union of America. I was in charge of the strike up there at that time and we bitterly disputed with the chief of police what they were doing—not that we wouldn't have allowed them through had they come in on their own, because there was no dispute and no picket line friction there. In fact, what had happened was that the company, not wanting that friction to develop, had asked the police if they would mind setting up this kind of an escort system. What I think the member for Oshawa would like to know, and what I would like to know, is, are the taxpayers of the province of Ontario paying money to the police commissions and the police boards of this province for that kind of an escort service? And if so, why are they?

[9:00]

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I would return to my previous answer: Police attend at the scene of a strike only if there are reasonable grounds to believe there will be breaches of the law. I assume that they would not have organized such a band to cross a picket line if they hadn't experienced some refusal of access or learned that there was some scheme afoot to refuse access. I don't think they should do that until they have some reasonable ground to suspect that access will be refused. I don't know whether in your case they had reasonable ground to expect that.

Mr. Davidson: What you are saying, in effect then, I suspect is that they can act on speculation only and not on fact?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I said reasonable ground.

Mr. Kerrio: I just have one question I would pose to the Solicitor General; it concerns the long-term plan for the OPP office at Niagara Falls, which is just about the end of the jurisdiction for the OPP in Ontario. I had heard some discussion about closing that facility. I am wondering about the facility, which seems to be quite a commitment as far as fiscal plant is concerned. I wondered if the Solicitor General could bring us up to date on the future of the officers that are working out of that area and of the plant itself.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That again is a rather specific question. I don't have the answer here with me now. This is a problem in dealing with things a general way. When we come to the OPP vote, there will be officers here who should be able to give me that information. I have made a note of it now and hope to reply to it at that time. There are, as you know, a good number of provincial highways in the Niagara region where it will be necessary to continue patrols, and whether they plan to do that out of the Niagara office or some other office I am not sure.

Mr. Lupusella: I followed with great interest the comment which was carried out by my colleagues in relation to strike-breakers. I don't want to prolong the discussion. One thing which I would like to bring to the attention of the Solicitor General is that a comprehensive and reasonable bill can be introduced in the Legislature, given the fact that our Solicitor General is also a former Minister of Labour as well.

A point which I want to raise is something which I am completely concerned about. I didn't touch on this particular problem in my opening statement because I wanted to deal with this particular topic completely away from my opening statement. There was no reference to the native police in my opening statement because I wanted to deal with the topic alone, because different issues are involved and because this is a major topic in itself.

In his opening statement, the Solicitor General did not address himself to the police problems affecting native people. The only comment which he made was a very simplistic one. I am surprised that the Solicitor General in a situation as important as the renewal of the federal-provincial policing agreement, which will expire in five months, on March 31, 1978, made only one comment. I quote from page 14 of his official opening statement: "The Indian policing services of the Ontario Provincial Police continue to expand and to be improved."

The first question I would like to ask is how can the expansion of those programs be accomplished while in the fiscal year 1977-78 the budgets for native police services is to be reduced by $155,000. If I am wrong in the figure, I invite the Solicitor General to correct me. That is a 20 per cent cut from 1976-77. As the minister must know, and I am sure he does, at the moment we have about 70 native constables. At the end of this year, the target of the Solicitor General's office is 100; but there will be, in fact, only about 80. The existing agreement provides for benefits to bring constables to the equivalent of that given to the OPP officers; for example, benefits relating to the Ontario Health Insurance Plan, vacation credits and attendance credits. However, it makes no provision for a pension plan or overtime pay. I hope that the minister will insist that a new agreement will include such provisions.

I question the fact that under existing policy the OPP sets aside approximately 6.5 per cent of the salary budget for overtime pay, but at this time they are instead given time off in exchange for overtime work. That's the present rule. I don't think you want to continue to follow this routine or that the band constables want it. It is a serious problem.

Rather than cutting the budget by 20 per cent, it's time that the Solicitor General set aside a certain amount of money for overtime pay, or else he should negotiate with the federal government to include such provisions, and make provision for a pension plan when the present agreement is renewed. I'm really shocked at the fact that this agreement is going to expire on March 31, and the Solicitor General didn't address himself to this particular problem, because it is really important for the native people and for the agreement itself.

I'm also requesting that a summary of the native people's policing situation be released by the Solicitor General, in order that each member of the House may have an overall view of the needs of the native people in this regard. I don't see the reason why we should have secrecy about the overall situation. I don't see the reason why the Solicitor General shouldn't speak about it. It's a particular problem which is affecting the constables who are supposed to look after native people, especially in northern Ontario.

I'm wondering, also, at what stage are the discussions the Solicitor General has undertaken to renew this agreement, and whether or not the minister will try to have included the revisions suggested by the Indian chiefs who are affected by Treaty No. 3. With all respect, I need an answer and I hope the Solicitor General will pay attention to my statement.

This particular problem is also related to what I said in my opening statement. The Solicitor General should take a more active role on releasing that information and those policies which have taken place in his office, in order that we can follow his undertakings. I never heard about his Treaty No. 3. I had an opportunity to talk with some chiefs representing native people, and that's how I became aware of the situation.

As I stated previously, it is a very important step which the Solicitor General is going to undertake pretty soon—in five months, at the end of March 1978. I really don't see the reason the Solicitor General didn't make any particular comment in his official opening statement on October 17 when we started the estimates. I would say, as other members have expressed in the past, that the hiring of band constables initiated by the province of Ontario has been very acceptable because of the close relationship between the constables and the native people. I am sure they will continue to gain the trust and the respect of the native community.

The principle has been already established, but there is room for improvement in morale among the band constables and the OPP. I fear that if the Solicitor General will not consider the band constables' request for the same salary scale, fringe benefits and authority as the regular OPP, then the native police may feel that they are being treated as second-class citizens. In the final analysis, this feeling will reflect on their level of performance, which in turn will affect their communities.

Contrary to the Solicitor General's official presentation, and I quote, "They carry out all law enforcement duties on their reserves," in fact, band constables are prevented from exercising certain of the powers of regular OPP officers. I would like to have an explanation from the Solicitor General why, when those constables are receiving the same training as the OPP, they don't have the same right to enforce the law. I would like to have a clear explanation of why they do not exercise their power just by becoming constables.

For example, the OPP wish to exercise all enforcement under the Highway Traffic Act on reserve property. The band constables, however, are more attuned to the concerns of their communities about enforcing safety standards and speed limits on their reserves. It has come to my attention that in particular cases the OPP has issued statements to band constables that they should cease to enforce the Highway Traffic Act and that the OPP regular officers should take over this work.

I really don't see the difference. If they represent their people and if there is a highway passing through their property, I don't see the reason why constables representing native people should not enforce the law on their property. The statement which was made by the OPP is unjustified and, as I stated before, I think that the constables should have the same right in relation to enforcement of the law as the regular OPP officers because they are receiving the same training.

On asking some chiefs the reason for this, they expressed to me their opinion that the OPP has taken this position because they are afraid that the band constables would be more effective and thus demonstrate the OPP's previous ineffectiveness. If that's the case, there is something seriously wrong with the OPP's attitude about efficiency and effectiveness of the band constables' ability to perform their duty. If it's true that the band constables are receiving the same training as the regular OPP officers, then I have to question the effectiveness of the training courses. Again, I emphasize I would like to have a clear explanation from the Solicitor General why there is this difference between the band constables and the OPP officers.

A final problem is that the native police see the regular police as acting only for non-Indian people, while all of the band constables work for the native community. This feeling is reinforced by actions of certain OPP officers.

For example, it was said to me that last summer the Nestor Falls OPP, with a local non-Indian, visited the chief's house at Sabaskong at 7 o'clock in the morning to ask about an alleged theft of a non-Indian's property. This intrusion was followed by necessary visits to other homes in Sabaskong and Big Grassy reserves. On the other hand, the band of constables was given strict instructions that no band member was to ride in the OPP vehicle used by the constable, not even a band councillor or the chief when attending a meeting with the constable. This sort of double standard served solely to perpetrate the feeling of the native people that there is one rule for the whites and another for Indians.

The reasons for this attitude should be investigated immediately by the Solicitor General and the remedies should be found to reform existing practices. I urge the Solicitor General before this problem grows to ensure that the native organizations meet with him, the Attorney General and the Ministry of Justice officials in order to work out these and other issues and immediately begin to revise the federal-provincial agreement.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Again, we're departing a long way from this general vote. We're into policing and band constables. I think I have most of the information my hon. friend was asking for.

We have recently completed an evaluation of the effectiveness of the band constable program, the evaluation being done in co-operation with the federal authorities. It has been regarded as highly successful. Certainly the OPP, myself as Solicitor General, and the ministry as a whole regard the program as very successful. I know how successful it is because the various chiefs write to me from time to time. When I've been doing a little touring of the north and have gone on to some of the reserves, the chief has spoken to me and has asked for increased constables. In other words, they want more of these band constables. We have had a few disappointments but for the most part it has been successful. If it continues in this way, the kind of responsibility that we will be asking them to shoulder will be increased as the program matures.

In so far as payment is concerned, at the present time the federal government is paying 60 per cent of that program and the provincial government is paying 40 per cent. The federal government hopes to work towards less payment on its part and more payment on our part. We are presently in the process of negotiating with them. Their proposal is that next year they will pay 52 per cent and that we will pay 48 per cent. They're asking for a considerably larger proportion of payment from us in the next year. The agreement hasn't been reached yet and we're dealing with the current year's budget rather than next year's budget. When next year's budget comes along, I'm sure you will see a greater amount in it for the native policing program. As I say, we're presently negotiating with them and they want us to assume more of this responsibility.

The native constables will shortly be receiving overtime pay. That will be retroactive to April 1, and they have been notified of that. Next year we expect that they will be receiving, in addition, pensions, life insurance and some salary increases. As the program progresses, they are coming more in line with what we are doing for the regular OPP constable.

There is, however, this matter of a salary difference. As most of you realize, the native constables are not subject to income tax. Income tax takes a sizable proportion of the pay of our regular constables. You're all concerned with goodwill in the force and equality. It just doesn't seem to be just, although we talk about equal pay for equal work, but I think we've also got to look at the possibility of equal deductions for equal work. When we look at the amount that is being taken off the ordinary OPP salary and look at the fact that the natives are not having that same kind of reduction for income tax, then we have a real problem on our hands. If you are looking at fairness and net return, as so many of you do, when you look at the net take home pay, the net take home pay of the band constable is not all that bad when you compare it with the OPP. That is a continuing problem, one that we have under the review and I don't know what the equitable answer for it may be.

Mr. Lupusella: I am glad that some of the loopholes are going to be covered, but I made the specific request that before renewal of the agreement, which will expire at the end of March, 1978, there is an assurance that the minister will get in touch with all the chiefs around the province of Ontario, representing the native communities—not just once; two or three times—until he has heard the problems, the comments and the concerns which are affecting the native communities. At least they then will have an impact on relations with the Solicitor General and on the representatives of the federal government, who are going to engage themselves on the new contract after March 31, 1978.

I thought some of those announcements were going to be made when the estimates started, that's why it was quite critical when I made my first comments about all the activities concerning the Solicitor General in the province of Ontario. I would like to know what is going on and what kind of approaches are coming up—approaches which fall under his jurisdiction—instead of waiting. I am sure the Solicitor General was going to comment on that particular item, on the budget which will be introduced next year, 1978-79, and talk about the agreement between Treaty No. 3 and the federal government.

That's the kind of line which we would like to see—that the Solicitor General informs us about the steps which he is taking to solve certain problems, certain loopholes, presently existing around the province, especially when certain problems are affecting the native community. I am sure we, as members, are really concerned about the problems affecting the native community.

We should give them an opportunity for a hearing. I am sure they are unhappy about the agreement for Treaty No. 3. I am sure that there are loopholes like the one which I just emphasized. Maybe some of those problems are going to be corrected and they will be advised when the new agreement is going to be signed between the province of Ontario and the federal government.

Again, if we represent certain groups in the province of Ontario like the native people, I think that the Solicitor General, together with the Attorney General and the Department of Justice, should get together with all the chiefs representing the native community around the province of Ontario just to find out what the problems are, what their concerns are. They should be given such an opportunity. We should call them, not just once. I want to emphasize that before criticism arises when the Solicitor General signs the agreement with the federal government in relation to the clauses combined in Treaty No. 3.

I am suggesting to the Solicitor General in a friendly way that he initiates this kind of action immediately. We don't have to wait until March 31 to hear what the problems affecting the native communities are. I think that we should start now; we should call several meetings in order that we meet the problems affecting them and in order that the Solicitor General can revise the present agreement, because surely there are loopholes involved, loopholes we don't want to see in that agreement, so that we can really represent and solve and improve the situation between the constables and the native community, and also the good relationship between the province of Ontario and the federal government.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: To hear my hon. friend from Dovercourt talk about solving the problems you would think that the scheme was an unsuccessful scheme. I want to emphasize that the scheme is a very successful scheme and we are getting great support from the band chiefs across the province. He speaks as though there was no representative of the chiefs. Actually, the chiefs' association is represented on the tripartite committee. We do hear from them and we work in close co-operation with them.

He is suggesting, I think, that we have rather formal meetings across the province with them. I would like to do that. Time is always an element in the other demands made upon our time. The Justice policy field does have a committee that meets regularly with them. They have attended and spoken to our Justice policy field people. We are spending considerable time on this matter of band constable policing and listening to them and working with them.

I wouldn't like the opinion to be, or the thought left, that we are not listening to the chiefs. I will take the advice of the hon. member for Dovercourt that we should be doing more of this. Perhaps it is possible that I myself can enter at some time into a powwow with the chiefs and listen to some of their suggestions for improvement.

Mr. Lupusella: Just a short comment, and again I ask your indulgence to justify me; I am really concerned about this particular issue because I received a lot of phone calls from chiefs around the province of Ontario in relation to this issue, affecting particularly the constables and the Treaty No. 3, agreement which eventually will be signed between this province and the federal government.

Actually, I didn't suggest that the Solicitor General should be going around the province of Ontario. It would be a good approach, but before taking positions and decisions I think that the Solicitor General, in co-operation with the Attorney General and the Ministry of Justice, should invite, several times, the chiefs that represent the native people to Toronto in order that they may discuss clause by clause what is going to be involved in the new agreement; so that at least they have an opportunity to review the position which is going to be taken by the province of Ontario in order that they may have time to go back to their community and can announce to their community what the agreement will be and what kinds of changes have been taken.

Item 1 agreed to.

On item 2, financial services:

Mr. Stong: On this particular item I just wanted to draw the attention of the Solicitor General to the preamble to this vote. Speaking in terms of overlapping and perhaps duplication of services, I know in the preamble to the book that we were supplied with—I think it is more colloquially called the opposition book—financial services deals with about four or five items as set out. When we read them, financial services are, “designed to assist agency and program management in strategic planning, decision-making, budgeting and cost analysis, the allocation and efficient use of resources and maintaining internal controls.”

If you look back at the preamble to vote 1601, item 1, main office, you will note that the points set out there are covered in almost exactly the same way. For instance, item 1, the main office support, is to, "assist the development of policy initiatives and alternatives and then necessary legislative requirements to implement the policy." I don't understand, but it seems to me that strategic planning would be about the same thing as that.

Then under item 2 you have "decision making"; while under item 1, we have the "development and maintenance of the planning process, management information systems for monitoring performance, and evaluation processes for measuring performance against objectives."

Then in item 2 we have another job description—a description of this particular service—"the allocation and efficient use of resources." I don't find too much difference between that and the job description under item 1 for the main office support. It says that part of its function is the "application of modern management and organization development techniques to produce the optimum organization structure for translating policy into program and most effectively meeting objectives."

It seems to me that the job descriptions in both these items are almost exactly the same, and yet we have two areas that we're voting on, both very substantial areas in the estimates—the main office requiring an estimate of $650,000; financial services an estimate of $786,400. Yet to me, from the job descriptions at any rate, it would seem that there is a duplication of services, if not an overlapping. I wonder if the minister could explain that in terms of personnel, in terms of assisting one another, and in terms of cost of services performed.

As well, I'm interested in the financial services area, this is item 2. I notice we're speaking here of an estimate of $651,300 for salaries and wages. I wonder if the minister can tell me, in this particular area, how many people are employed and what their job descriptions are.

I also noticed in the 1977 public accounts committee report that the employment benefits listed here and paid out last year were $241,000, and yet we're budgeting in these estimates for $85,100. I'm just wondering what the discrepancy is there. Why is there such a small amount?

As I read the public accounts committee report, the estimates from last year were $735,000. Management Board had to approve almost another $300,000, making a total of $1,033,000. I wonder why the financial services were so underestimated in the last session and whether the estimate for this session is realistic.

I notice as well that $88,000 has been taken from the services, reducing the estimate to $40,000 because temporary help and photocopy rental services were transferred. I wonder if you could give me some idea of what the need for temporary help is in this particular area? How many people are on temporary help? Are they on a contractual basis or are they regular employees of the ministry? What is the actual cost of the photocopy rental services that are referred to here, as a beginning?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: A lot of questions have been asked in regard to vote 1601, item 2. First of all, there is the question of overlapping. Under vote 1601, item 1, it is the general ministry secretariat. An example of that is Mr. Gow, whom you see directly opposite me here; he comes under the secretariat and his salary is shown there. But when we go on to item 2, financial services, the people who are under his direction are picked up at that point.

Under main office you will find a duplication of all the things that are carried on individually. In other words, the salaries of the persons responsible to me for those branches are shown under vote 1601, item 1. Then the people who actually carry things out are shown in the items that follow—item 2, item 3 and so on. That is why you are going to find a great deal of overlapping in the wording.

As far as the various items in vote 1601, item 2, are concerned, I can give you the salaries. You asked for the number of people involved. There was a complement of 49 in 1976-77, and this year there is a complement of 44. I can give you the names of the people involved if you wish, but I don't think that they concern you. If you do wish them, we have their names. There is a reduction of five, and the five positions have been transferred to supply and office services; you will see them picked up later on.

Dealing with them individually, under regular salaries—and that includes the 44 permanent personnel—you will find that the estimate last year, 1976-77, was 509,000; this year it is $648,300. You have the actual figures for last year, I think, and you will find them in the figures you have in front of you.

It is sometimes a little bit difficult when comparing estimates with actuals, but you will have the figures there.

We come to overtime: Last year we estimated $2,000 for that; this year we estimate $3,000.

Thus total salaries and wages were estimated last year at $511,000 and this year at $651,300, which is an increase of some $140,000 as far as estimates are concerned.

I made a general statement when consideration of these estimates began that we had made a mistake last year which not only affected vote 1601 but carried all across the ministry. That accounts for some of the increase—and you will find that difference picked up in all of the salaries—but also the salary increases from last year now are in the basic figure for the estimates for this year.

Any increases that may be given in 1977-78, of course, will be in addition to this figure. They are not shown in the estimates but once those increases have been given, that base figure will increase. So although you have five personnel less, you have an increase here of $140,000, but that deals with the basic mistake that we made, plus the salary increases of last year.

The benefits are calculated at the rate of 13.2 per cent of salaries, and, since salaries are based on actual requirements, benefits are shown as actual requirements. In other words, when you carry them forward to this year, we take in the salary increases from last year. So much for salaries.

There are employee benefits that I just mentioned. They are up $17,000. You wanted to know the amount for Xerox. In last year's estimates it was $28,000 and that has been transferred to office supplies for this coming year.

For computer and electronic data processing, last year we had a figure in there of $22,000. Experience has shown that that figure should be $40,000. We are up $18,000 in our estimates there. We have taken all the temporary help out this year and transferred them to personnel services. You will find them under personnel services. As far as comparing last year with this year, we show a reduction of $70,000. Office machine contracts have also been transferred to office supply. That has a reduction of $8,000. When you take all of the additions and reductions in, you will find that the 1977-78 estimates are $786,400 as opposed to our estimates last year of $735,000. Most of that is caused by the increased salaries, the increases that were awarded to everybody last year and the mistake that you will find carried all the way through our estimates.

I am sure you are not able to follow that from me telling it to you in this way, and it is not too satisfactory. I don't know how we can do it. Earlier in the afternoon you asked another question in regard to the first vote. I understand that Mr. Edwards gave you an answer for that. All I can say is that we have all these figures here. It's hard for me to get them from the desk and present them to you in a satisfactory way because there are transfers. There is not the consistency of the estimates this year against last year, because of the additions of some accounts and the omission of others. I think if you have specific questions like that it might be better to let me have them to be sure that you get the answers; as I understand, Mr. Edwards gave you the answer earlier this afternoon.

Mr. Stong: Just briefly; Mr. Edwards indicated to me that he would supply me with figures for item 1 and I appreciate that. I would appreciate receiving those.

Is it my understanding, then, under item 1, and generally speaking comparing item 1 to item 2, those who were drawing a wage or a salary under item 1 probably fall into a managerial capacity, but those under item 2 are perhaps in an employee-employer relationship? In other words, they are the types of individual who are probably one rung lower than the ones in item 1.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That is correct.

Mr. Stong: Just so I understand, as I am having difficulty correlating these figures from what you did say, perhaps in a general sense as I read the public accounts reports of March 31, 1977, it would indicate that the estimates were $235,000 for that year, which is consistent with what you have in your opposition material here; but there was a Management Board approval of $300,000, did that represent increase in salary alone?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Salaries and benefits.

Mr. Stong: Does that represent an increase in staff over that time or is that an increase in the amounts paid?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: My information is that it is caused by the salary revisions. In other words, it is the increase, that is across the board for the past year, plus the error that is carried all the way through. I am embarrassed by having to repeat this error so often. The percentage of that error was a little over three per cent across the board.

Mr. Stong: In your employees' benefits you indicated that there was an increase of $17,100 in your estimate over last year. But it seems to me that, unless I read it incorrectly—how did the public accounts committee get the figure of $241,487 that shows in the report, because it does not show in the material that you supplied to us in preparing for these estimates? I can't correlate those two figures.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I understand that was the one per cent escalation that was put through for the entire ministry; it was charged in that place. The 1976-77 employees' benefit account totals $241,487, since the entire ministry's share of the employers' portion of the pension escalation fund was charged to this activity. These payments were required retroactive to January 1, 1976.

Mr. Stong: That basically represents a retroactive amount, because I notice that the estimates for 1976-77 were $86,000; the actual was $241,000 and that represents a retroactive amount, plus an increase of one per cent?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Yes, but that is, as I understand it, for the whole ministry charged to that account.

Mr. Stong: Okay, that kind of clears that up for me. I wasn't sure how you related these things. It's pretty hard. I must admit I did have this material in ample time and I thank you for that. Unlike my NDP counterpart I did get this material on October 7. I thought I understood it, but when I get in here it's plain to see we don't understand it.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I've gone over this twice and still I'm not so sure that I understand it. It is very confusing and I admire the fact that my friend's got it in such good order as he has. I have had these explanations once or twice and then you ask me the question in just a little different wording than they've put the answer to me and I'm at a bit of a loss too.

But I repeat, it is very confusing to try to explain the accounts as you have them with the estimates and the actual figures, when you have to take into account the various adjustments that are made from time to time during the year.

Mr. Samis: You only knew this from the outside, too.

Mr. Lupusella: Just a short comment—

Mr. Stong: If I may just finish; the only problem is that the minister's job is different to mine. I'm trying to demonstrate how he can cut down on some of his staff and some of the ministries, but it's making the job pretty difficult. I wonder if you would give me a description of what's included in services in the amount of $40,000? That's the last question I have on this item.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Last year under services we had a good number of items. Last year we had Xerox rentals; we had computer electronic data processing; we had temporary help; and we had the office machine contracts. The only item that is left in there is the electronic data processing, which is the figure of $40,000. Last year we had amounts totalling $128,000 in that account; I don't say they have been removed from our budget, they have been placed elsewhere. So the only other item you have left in there is the sum of $40,000, dealing with electronic processing.

Mr. Stong: Did that electronic processing serve more than just your ministry? Does it also include Correctional Services, as well as Attorney General? Does the same machinery and apparatus serve all the ministries; and if so, how do you allocate the exact amount of money that it costs each ministry?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, it covers our financial system and our payroll system. It does our accounting for us; actually it is operated by Government Services. Some of the equipment is in the top floor of the George Drew Building. It is, as I say, operated by Government Services. It is a charge that they make to us. I trust it is fairly apportioned throughout the various ministries and I assume it is done on the basis of time and the amount of input that we give it; but it is at the discretion of Government Services. It is an arbitrary figure. If we felt it was too high, I'm sure we'd have the right to object to it; but I assume that we feel that it's a fair charge.

Mr. Stong: I would be satisfied, Mr. Chairman, if the minister would supply me with figures to back these up, as you indicated earlier.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I would be glad to do that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, mine was not a comment, it was an interjection. Given the fact the Liberal critic is agreeing with me that no reasonable time was given on sending us the briefing material, I hope the Solicitor General finally is going to agree that one month is going to be a reasonable time to send us the briefing material.

Item 2 agreed to.

Items 3 and 4 agreed to.

On item 5, analysis, research and planning:

Mr. Lawlor: A couple of things. I don't know how extensive this is. The notes that you have in the Solicitor General's annual report, 1976, are identical to that you supplied my friends with. When you read them, it talks about input and output and who got what, when, where—that kind of thing. What I'm interested in, in this kind of research, is do you ever make any studies, in this area, for instance as to the division of police responsibility? I think it's an awfully interesting thing to know to what extent actual criminal investigations and police work in the specifically criminal field occupy in the overall police time. This is apart from bylaws, apart from quasi-criminal, the provincial offences; just the Criminal Code offences. I'd like to see that compared, for instance, to surveillance of traffic conditions, to the wide range of domestic and public service that the police do in any community, quite apart from the—I would like, some day, and I suppose the sooner the better because we all die, to see an allocation made there.

Have you ever made such a study and would you be amenable?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I'm sure various municipal forces do just that. The OPP have estimates of that nature. I'm not so sure they have it as detailed as my hon. friend might like to see it, but when we come to their vote you'll see how they've got on traffic and how much they have for other types of policing; that is traffic as opposed to regular daily policing.

I'm not so sure they have a breakdown when a policeman goes to a call whether it's on a criminal matter or, as you say, a household matter. To get that kind of information back from the police would require a great deal more bookkeeping than we like to put the constables to. Certainly they make reports that call X was in regard to a domestic matter, that call C was a break and enter, or whatever else is done. But the OPP do have a productivity study; it's being implemented and it will be dealing with some of the detail you are asking for.

That, however, is not the main work of the vote that we're presently studying. We are looking at it from the point of the police statistics you were talking about earlier and your dissatisfaction with them. They keep track of how we are living up to our budget; how much we are spending of that budget and the value that we're getting for it. We have what they call management by results and they keep an eye on that sort of thing.

They also have spent some time in this past year dealing with metric conversion. We don't have a great many people in that department. There was a complement of four last year and a continuing proposed complement of four. It is an internal analysis that they do. They do keep track of the money we're spending on various programs and how we might get more value through it and plan accordingly.

Mr. Lawlor: I take it, then, you are saying that vote 1604, research and planning, would be directly in point as to what I'm after here, as to all areas of study and research that the police do as to upgrading techniques, and studying other police forces around the world in order to maximize their productivity?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: You are correct. Vote 1604, under the OPP budget, would be the place where it would be done. The Ontario Police Commission may have some information for us on it as well.

Mr. Ziembra: I'd like to ask the Solicitor General why it is that police take pictures, both still and film, of picket lines; and what they do with them once they do take them. I'd like to take the Solicitor General back four years when he was the Minister of Labour and Toronto saw one of the most bitter and violent picket lines. The Artistic Woodwork picket line saw over 100 picketers charged. I think about half of them were convicted for various minor offences. Almost all of them appealed their convictions.

The government did nothing for four years, they just let the matter sit. Now, when witnesses' memories are hazy and many witnesses have moved away, the government has started to move in and these appeals are being heard. I suggest to the Solicitor General that the time for justice has long passed. These picketers aren't seeing justice done because of the long delay in their appeal. I'd like the answer to the first question. On this picket line, a number of the picketers had their pictures on films that were on file, and their fingerprints on file. What was the purpose of that?

Second, would you consider a meeting with the Attorney General and allow the appeals to go through uncontested in view of the fact that four years have gone by?

Mr. Chairman: It was just drawn to my attention that that type of question should be asked and answered under vote 1604. Would the minister hold that answer in abeyance until vote 1604?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Yes.

Mr. Stong: With respect to vote 1601, item 5, I wonder if you could give me some idea of whether, in fact, the actual police officer who has experience out on the beat is involved in this research and planning, particularly the planning aspect? How many of the actual police officers, who have undergone training as constables and subsequently followed through ranks and got promotions, are involved in the planning as referred to in vote 1601, item 5?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: My information is that in that complement of four there are no police officers. These people are civilians. They consult and talk to the police, but they are not themselves police officers.

Mr. Stong: Could you give me any idea of their number of years of experience in this type of planning? How do they make use of police experience in assisting the forces?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: As to their association with the ministry, I understand the director himself has only been with us six years. That doesn't show a great deal of police background or experience, but in this function they are performing it's more of a statistical background that they are required to have rather than a police background. The information they get that requires, say, police background, can be assimilated by them very quickly; so it is not a case of having a great deal of background in police work but more in case of having background in the gathering and interpretation of statistics.

Mr. Stong: I don't want to take anything away from the ministry, but I have always been of the opinion that if you want to know where problems lie, you speak to the people who are suffering those problems. Likewise, if you want to assist yourself in arriving at solutions to a problem, you go to the person who is suffering that problem as well. Those people usually are able to give you assistance with ascertaining and defining a problem and then offering a solution.

I am wondering whether it would not be advisable for the ministry actually to have a person who has been trained on the beat in that area of planning rather than to draw solely on civilians, particularly in planning and research when we are talking about apprehension of criminals and crime detection as well as subsequently dealing with crime in the courts and community protection.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Again, I say, if you are talking about that kind of planning, you will find under vote 1604 that the OPP actually do the research and planning that is directed specifically to police work. What we are looking at here is not just for the police; it has to do with the gathering by the ministry of, say, fire statistics and coroners' statistics—it covers the whole gamut. I get a report on a quarterly basis from them as to how many dollars have been spent by the ministry under such and such field of operation and how many dollars are left.

I do get some police statistics along the line as to the number of charges and the increase or decrease of certain kinds. It is those kinds of statistics, the kinds of statistics that Ottawa might deal with from Statistics Canada, and planning within the ministry—not police planning as such, but planning from our administration end—that these people deal with.

Again, I think the kind of question you are asking as far as police planning is concerned would come under vote 1604, which is where you will actually get police personnel involved with it.

Mr. Stong: It was probably a result of my misunderstanding of the scope of this particular item, but am I to understand that this is the item wherein we discuss statistics and the compiling of statistics from the crime rate as to whether there's an increase or decrease? Is this where the four people are involved? Is this the division that decides those types of statistics and makes them public?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: They are on the receiving end of these statistics that come from the police, but I think the question we got into the last time we dealt with estimates a week ago today was the basis of how these statistics are compiled; in other words, the possible duplication of charges and whether they only showed the ones that they were convicted on and that sort of thing. That would be more properly dealt with under one of the vote for the Ontario Police Commission or the OPP vote.

Mr. Lupusella: Under vote 1601, item 4, in relation to transportation and communication, the actual cost in 1975-76 was only $657. There was a jump to $15,000 in 1976-77 and a reduction to $10,000 in 1977-78. Can I have some explanation about this amount, even though there was this kind of reduction of $5,000—

Mr. Chairman: Can I call the member to order for a moment? I believe we have carried item 4 and we are now into item 5.

Mr. Lupusella: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. It's just a simple question to the minister.

Mr. Chairman: We gave ample time for general questions on item 1. I think now that we are going to try to stick to the item we are on. We are now on item 5.

Mr. Lupusella: With the permission of the members of this committee, will they allow me? The minister can answer.

Mr. Chairman: Will you make it a very short question, because you are out of order.

Mr. Lupusella: It is just a short question, and I would like to have a short answer as well, as to how this money is spent in relation to transportation and communication. Who is using this money and how is it spent? There seems to be a great difference from 1975-76 from $657 to $15,000 and now to $10,000. Can I have just an explanation for that?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Just briefly, we have movement of personnel across the province, transferring them from one location to the other. We bear certain of those costs and it reflects a reduction in the anticipated cost of those moves.

Item 5 agreed to.

On item 6, legal services:

Mr. Stong: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just briefly, I was given to understand during the recess that those legal services included the salaries of two lawyers and a secretary on hire from the Attorney General's ministry. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The three people involved are John Ritchie, who is attached to the Attorney General's office; David Spring, another lawyer attached to the Attorney General's office; and one secretary who is also attached to the Attorney General's office.

Mr. Stong: Are these people full-time employees of the Ministry of the Attorney General, or do they divide their time and talents between the two ministries?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: They are full time with us, sir.

Mr. Stong: I don't think you pay the lawyers enough.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: They don't think so, either.

Item 6 agreed to.

On item 7, audit services:

Mr. Lupusella: Again I speak in relation to transportation and communication. My attention is drawn to the point that from $2,865 we are jumping to $8,000 for 1976-77 and back to $4,000 for 1977-78. My particular question is how come there is this overspending in 1976-77 and a further reduction in 1977-78? Has the service changed? I would like that kind of information.

You gave previous information that those people need transportation and communication expenses to travel around the province of Ontario. What are they doing around the province? What kind of service are they carrying out? Give me those answers, please.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I am trying to get the answer as to why the amounts vary.

We have three people involved in this sub-vote and they not only audit the various accounts any place the OPP may have accounts, but they check up on coroners' accounts and they check the accounts of the various ministry offices across the province. It requires some travelling to do it. The actual figure in 1976-77 was $2,491, so that on the basis of last year's actual they have reduced the amount this year to $2,200 on the basis of the experience. You may find that they will overspend that a little bit. But it is to travel around the province and do the auditing that is required.

Item 7 agreed to.

Vote 1601 agreed to.

On vote 1602, public safety program; item 1, program management:

Mr. Lupusella: On this item I'd like to talk a little bit about the George Drew building. I think that I am on the correct item, am I? The George Drew building—the forensic centre?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: That would be on item 2. Item 1 is program management. Do you want to hold the forensic centre till we get to item 2?

Mr. Lupusella: Okay.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any comment on item 1?

Item 1 agreed to.

On item 2, Centre of Forensic Sciences.

Mr. Lupusella: I think that in my opening statement I made particular reference to the coroners' investigations and inquests. I think that is a very important sector of investigations which is valuable to the province of Ontario and in which each branch of each ministry can use the expertise of those coroners' investigations and inquests.

I made a particular reference in my opening statement and, with all respect, I didn't get any answer from the Solicitor General. I made particular reference to those three people who died in police cells. I read just a portion of the verdict of the coroner's jury, so I didn't emphasize my point that mechanical or electrical surveillance was going to be required. This is just to keep the record straight.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: If I might just interrupt, this is where it gets somewhat difficult. Actually you are talking about coroners—

Mr. Lupusella: Coroners.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: —and that is a later vote. Under forensic science we are dealing with the scientific analysis of various pieces of evidence that may be used either in Crown cases or defence cases, generally of a criminal nature.

Mr. Lupusella: Okay, maybe I can postpone my comments until the right item comes up.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: If you are on coroners' inquests it will be on item 4 in this vote.

Mr. Lupusella: Thank you.

Mr. Lawlor: Just one question on forensic sciences. It is the policy of Mr. Lucas and others to permit outside counsel to come in and have analysis of weapons and poisons and any number of things—fingerprints, shoe prints. Can you give us any indication of how much that service was used—not by Crown attorneys, et cetera, but by outside solicitors—this year up to the date of the end of the fiscal year over against the previous fiscal year?

I want to find out if it's extensively used.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Yes, I know I had that information and I think if you just wait for a minute I can probably get a note from the side giving me the exact figures, or certainly the percentage of how often it was used.

I have it here. Civil cases. Civil cases are undertaken by the centre when the director has been satisfied that no other agency or laboratory exists in the province which can adequately handle the request. A schedule of fees has been established for these cases, with the fees being paid to the Treasurer of Ontario.

In 1976 the centre undertook the examination of material in 57 civil cases, for a total revenue of $6,000. But I think you were asking about criminal cases, were you not?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Criminal cases in 1976 where they helped with the defence. The number is not large—nine. Civil cases in 1976, 57.

But let me just speak and enlarge upon what I have said. Those services in criminal cases are available and I mentioned this the other day. They are available, as I understand it, free of charge. Of course, Mr. Lucas wants to make certain that there is some reason for the examination because these examinations do take time, but I don't think he's in the habit of denying the defence this kind of service.

I mentioned when I was dealing with it last Monday that the report of the forensic laboratory was made available to the Crown attorney even when it was prepared for the defence. I understand in talking to Mr. Lucas since that time that that report goes to the defence counsel. It is up to the defence counsel to send it over to the Crown on the same basis that the Crown may send reports to defence counsel that Crown counsel has obtained from the forensic laboratory. The member for York Centre indicated the procedure was a little unfair in that automatically the Crown got defence reports but the defendant did not automatically get Crown requested reports.

My information that I have since received is that the system works the same in both cases, that the report is given to the counsel requesting it and the responsibility for passing it to the opposition is in the hands of the counsel who requested it.

Mr. Lawlor: Just one question. Would the Solicitor General be inclined to agree with me that he is perhaps a little surprised at only nine? Considering the volume of criminal cases going through in just the county of York alone, the defence counsel obviously doesn't revert on many occasions to the forensic sciences people. My impression would be that it is because they probably don't know about it. Is the criminal bar not particularly aware of it? Or do they prefer their own ballistic experts? There are any number of fields. Is it your impression, in short, that the criminal bar generally is thoroughly aware of this service?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Let me read a paragraph that has just been handed to me. Defence counsel in criminal cases on occasion submit material for analysis. This work is undertaken upon the understanding that a copy of the findings will be forwarded to the Crown attorney concerned. Any other agency with a legitimate demand upon the services of the centre is treated in like manner with complete impartiality being maintained. Although this service to defence counsel is not advertised, the policy is mentioned in all lectures to lawyers, including an annual lecture to the bar admission course at Osgoode Hall. During the course of the year, defence counsel submitted nine cases.

I was surprised when I got the slip handed to me that had the figure nine on it. I thought it would be more than that. I suspect it is a combination of things. First of all, the availability of this may be mentioned in bar admission courses, but probably not advertised subsequently as much as it should or could be. So probably some defence counsel don't know it is available.

Secondly, I suppose some defence counsel would rather obtain their own advice or their own experts. I am smiling when I say this, but maybe they would like a little partial advice when they put their experts forward. Thirdly, I suppose that defence counsel would not have the same need for this kind of analysis that a prosecuting Crown attorney might have.

I would suggest it is a combination of those three. I would agree that we should probably do more to advertise that this service is available.

Mr. Lawlor: I have just one final thing because the minister seems to contradict himself. I am now confused. He said that the report, if it was adverted to by a defence counsel or sent to him, was also automatically sent to the Crown. Then another time he said no, it would be up to the defence counsel in his discretion as to whether or not it was sent. Which one is it? The last statement is that it was automatically sent.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: My information, as late as this evening at the supper hour, was that both reports are given to the counsels concerned, the counsels who request them, on the understanding that they are to be made available to the opposing counsel.

Mr. Stong: On that point first, I indicated last week that I had had occasion to use the forensic centre. I sing very high the praises of that centre because of its impartiality, to which the minister has referred, but I was given the clear understanding that before I could avail myself of those services I had to—it was required of me—provide the Crown with the result. It's true I got the copies to send to the Crown, but I was only able to avail myself of those services on the understanding and the undertaking that I would provide the Crown with the result. It doesn't work the other way.

I liked your solution last week better, Mr. Minister. That is a requirement that the Crown provide the defence with the result of whatever examination it does—and the contrary as well, that the defence provide the Crown with the results.

My understanding when I asked for assistance was that I had to supply the Crown with the result of the examination, otherwise I could not avail myself of those services. That was the clear understanding that I received from the forensic centre. As I indicated, I prefer your approach to it as you indicated last week, that both sides be required to provide the results.

Another thing that I wanted to mention while I was on my feet was a new science, the science of applying dentistry and related knowledge to the detection of crime—better known as odontology. I became interested in this in dealing with the forensic centre on a case some four years ago, prior to my entering the political arena. It involved a situation where I knew that the police were looking for a person—they didn't have a name but it was a person who was charged with the kidnapping and killing of one of the young girls. I don't believe it was the Hanson case;

I just forget now, but it was four years ago anyway.

I happened to be in a courtroom one day and I noticed a picture on a wanted poster. The picture that I saw on the poster was such a clear facsimile of a person that I was representing on an impaired driving charge that it almost shocked me when I first looked at it. Your imagination kind of runs away and everybody likes to play detective naturally, and I allowed my imagination to run away with me and I began to imagine that my client was the one who was being sought by the police for the commission of this kidnapping and subsequent murder. I phoned one of the detectives of the York regional police and I apprised him of the situation and I told him that I had a client who looked exactly like a poster of a man they wanted. I gave him the name and address of my client and I told him what date we would be going back to court.

In the interim the detective sergeant set up a stake outside my client's house and watched him as he got up in the morning and left for work and came back. He was sufficiently convinced that this person was worth investigating that he solicited my support. I didn't know whether I was breaching a client-solicitor relationship, but I did the best I could not to.

Of course, I didn't divulge anything about the charge I was up on except what the charge was and anyone can find that out, but he said he wanted me to help him get evidence that was required. Apparently they had a specimen of a saliva of the suspect. It was my job to try to obtain a saliva specimen for the detective sergeant and one of the ways they could obtain it was off a cigarette butt. I didn't even know whether my client smoked or not. And so the next consideration was whether in fact I could obtain the saliva short of having him spit on the floor in the courtroom.

I trundled off to court with a package of cigarettes in my pocket. I didn't know if he could smoke and I was hoping if I could make him nervous enough he would ask for a cigarette. I suppose it was easy to do knowing that I was the one who was defending him; you could get really nervous. But at any rate, it turned out—

Mr. Cureatz: Did they charge him?

Mr. Stong: But at any rate, it turned out that the client did smoke. This I suppose was the first time I became really associated with the forensic centre, because I learned at that time that they did tests down there on saliva—not on teeth but on saliva. I had an opportunity to speak to the officials at the forensic centre and at that time they were aware of odontology, which is the study of teeth. Teeth are almost as good as fingerprints, almost better than fingerprints because teeth do not deteriorate under severe and intense heat.

Mr. B. Newman: You can take them out and send them to them.

Mr. Stong: You can take them out, as my colleague says, and send them to them.

As it turned out this client was not the person. They did a test and they subsequently found the suspect in one of the insane institutions north of here.

I was concerned at that time and expression was made of the fact that it would have been better, in the case of apprehension and detection of crime, if facilities were provided and expertise was provided in the institute for the use of teeth and the study of teeth in investigating the crime. I'm wondering, now that this science is becoming more expert and more complete, whether any steps have been made by your ministry to set up that type of division in the forensic centre to use this type of evidence more readily in evidence in court cases.

As I spoke earlier in my opening statement, I know that we have to employ more sophisticated methods of crime detection. This is one of those methods I had intended to refer to and that's why I refer to it on this vote. Can you tell me whether facilities are being established at the forensic centre for the study and later use of odontology?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: You were talking in part under two votes here. I don't want to get technical about it but I did question the member for Dovercourt getting into coroners' work. I know there's a confusion here.

When you talked about saliva tests, we certainly have under the forensic laboratories the ability to do that. I don't know how many we do, but I presume we do them from time to time.

When you come to odontology we have been using that in the coroner's office. I understand we've been doing it for some eight years. I don't think the coroner has a special branch established to conduct it. The various coroners are familiar with it and are educated in the science. Just this week the coroners from across the province have been meeting at the Westbury Hotel under Dr. Cotnam's guidance. One of the people speaking to them was a dentist from the city of New York speaking on just that subject. It's a matter that both our director of pathology and our coroners are aware of and are putting to very active use and practice.

Mr. Stong: I may be out of order dealing with coroners' inquests. As I understand it, I know on occasion that saliva samples are evidence that police use in investigating crime and later on in the court case. In many cases of victims in rape cases particularly, there may be bites and there may be saliva deposit that can be studied. From this type of evidence, evidence can be obtained that later was used in the courtroom. It's not in terms of the work done by coroners that I refer to in odontology; it's in terms of police work and detection of crime. Apparently, from a bite—from the skin—the experts are able to obtain evidence to identify a later suspect.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I did miss the point and you're quite right that this is done in Ontario courts. As I understand it, it is not done through our forensic laboratory but through independent dentists. In other words, there are many who are equipped to give this kind of evidence practising in the private field. Various private dentists are brought in from time to time to give evidence, I gather, not only in criminal cases but in civil, if applicable.

Mr. Lupusella: I will be relatively brief, otherwise we are going to continue sometime on Friday. In item 2 the astronomical amount of money which we are dealing with is more than $2.5 million. The Solicitor General and a lot of members of this House see the necessity of this centre. My particular concern, and I hope the Solicitor General will agree with me, is that I think it's time the centre or this agency releases a yearly basis the kind of activities which are taking place there.

Will the number of investigations which are carried on, all of those statistical data and the background information, come out as a form of a summary which would be released at the end of the year? This is the only way we can pursue and we are going to engage ourselves to convince the centre under the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General to release this kind of information which I am sure will be valuable to the public and to us as well.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: A short answer: There's nothing secret about the work that we do under forensic sciences. We're glad to release all of that information. As a matter of fact, we have statistics here which we can give you and would be glad to supply to you. A lot of it is in the annual report, but as far as I know—of course, there's in-progress investigation that may be secret, but the statistics and the amount of work, there's nothing secret about that at all. Most of it is in the annual report. Anything else you want, we'll be glad to give it to you.

Item 2 agreed to.

On motion by Hon. Mr. MacBeth, the committee of supply reported progress.

On motion by Hon. Mr. MacBeth, the House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1977

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Premier (Mr. Davis) and the House leader (Mr. Welch), could I first of all ask whether it is anticipated the Premier will be in the House later this afternoon? Does anybody know? The House leader?

Mr. Nixon: Here comes the member for Parry Sound (Mr. Maeck), if that's any good.

Mr. S. Smith: Well, I will ask a question of the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough). Or rather, the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. Auld).

Mr. Conway: That's where real power resides.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. S. Smith: I am just stalling as best I can hoping some cabinet ministers will arrive, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peterson: Could you phone the Albany Club, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. S. Smith: Perhaps we should hold question period at the Albany Club. That's a good idea.

LAYOFF OF NICKEL WORKERS

Mr. S. Smith: Can the Chairman of Management Board tell this House whether in deliberations with the rest of cabinet there has already been a decision—and if not, would he assure us that there will be a decision—that the standing committee on resources development, which will be looking into the Inco matter, will be mandated not only to hear from Inco officials, but will also seek out the opinions of labour, municipal leaders, metal and mining experts, as well as those who are expert in foreign trade, and that it will look into the Port Colborne layoffs as well?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I'm afraid that I can't answer all those questions for the hon. Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, because I haven't taken part in any such discussions.

Mr. Peterson: But you're still in the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I expect that other members of the cabinet will be along shortly. I am afraid I really don't know where they are at the moment.

An hon. member: Why don't we adjourn until they return?

Mr. Lewis: Is a supplementary permitted?

Mr. Speaker: You can try.

Mr. Lewis: I'm afraid to do anything without your absolute permission.

Mr. Speaker: Please try. Please try it.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you.

Mr. S. Smith: I'll have a supplementary question if you possibly can to an answer like that. Can the minister assure us that in his discussions with cabinet and with the Premier on this matter, he will make the suggestion that this committee begin its work immediately, and that it be asked to make its report before the House rises for the winter break?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to pass along that request to the Premier at the first opportunity.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary, since the minister is now gradually engaged on this subject. Could we also ask that he requests the right of the standing resources development committee to travel to Sudbury as well and hear the submissions of the community there on the spot?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I'll pass that along.

Mr. Lewis: Good. That was easy.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the official opposition. I know it's difficult.

Mr. Lewis: It's the only disadvantage of being first.

BRUCE NUCLEAR PLANT

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of Energy, Mr. Speaker.

Since the minister indicated last week to the House that he is well aware of and well informed on my discussions with the chairman of Hydro, is he now prepared to approve of Hydro's supplying the information that I requested at that meeting?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at that question, because Hydro doesn't require my approval. I am sure that the Leader of the Opposition will get the same co-operation from the chairman of the Hydro as he has in the past.

Mr. Peterson: That's the whole problem.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I am surprised the member doesn't have those particulars.

Mr. S. Smith: For the information of the minister, I asked for progress reports, cost estimates, productivity reports, in short, everything that would explain the massive cost overruns on this project. Can he assure me that he will intervene to make certain that Hydro feels there is no impediment and that Hydro, in fact, gets on with giving me that material that we require to explain the massive cost overruns and how things could have got so out of hand at Bruce?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I am sure again that if the Leader of the Opposition would ask the chairman of the Hydro board to expedite that response, he will do everything possible to get that.

Mr. S. Smith: We have already done that.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: May I remind the Leader of the Opposition that he has not once contacted me, as Minister of Energy, in connection with this whole issue?

Mr. Nixon: You said you didn't know a thing about it.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Not once has he contacted me, not once.

Mr. Lewis: May I acknowledge the good judgement of the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. S. Smith: Thank you. I was just going to thank him for the compliment.

By way of supplementary, can the minister explain, in view of the fact that Hydro still maintains that cost targets for Bruce "B" will be met, and as a consequence has dropped its ultimatum on Bruce "B", how there are continuing low-productivity reports and field cost reports which indicate an additional $8 million increase in the two months following the ultimatum in April? Can he explain how those cost reports exist and yet at the same time Hydro continues to say that the target has been met and that there are no such overruns? How does he explain that obvious contradiction?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I don't concur in the allegation.

Mr. Makarchuk: Want to try a supplementary?

Mr. S. Smith: Why doesn't the minister seriously consider resigning—

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: He is talking about a $400 million overrun and he stands in this House day after day and says—

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. S. Smith: —he doesn't know what we're talking about, he doesn't know what the figures are, he doesn't give us the information and he doesn't concur in the allegation. That's not much of a joke.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Will the Leader of the Opposition repeat that question, please?

Mr. Speaker: There is no question there.

Mr. Kerrio: There is no answer either.

Mr. Lewis: There was a question. He was asked would the minister resign. Or he could go back to ComSoc, which would save that ministry.

LAYOFF OF NICKEL WORKERS

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Minister of Labour, if I may: Is she aware that the regional planners in Sudbury, meeting yesterday, looking at all of the available economic and employment data, have come to the conclusion that 6,000 jobs will be lost in total as a result of the proposed Inco layoff on January 31, 1978, over the immediate future after that? Can she indicate what steps her ministry is taking on the question of job relocation and job alternatives in the Sudbury basin?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the officials of the Ministry of Labour are meeting at this moment, as a matter of fact, with the representatives of the union and with officials of the federal Department of Employment and Immigration to work upon the proposals which were put by my ministry and by the union leaders of the Steelworkers local in Sudbury, in order to attempt to find some solutions to the large number which is being proposed laid off by Inco.

In addition to that, on Friday morning, my colleagues, the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller), the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier), the Deputy Minister of Industry and Tourism and I will be going to Ottawa to meet with federal ministers, representatives of the municipality and the planning group in Sudbury, representatives of the union and representatives of the company to work further on some of those features which are developed as a result of today's discussions.

Mr. Germa: Supplementary: Could I ask the minister if her ministry is supportive of those five points put forward by Local 6500 to resolve this situation?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes, we felt that there was a great deal to recommend many of the features inherent in the points which the union had put forward. There are some other features which we have suggested as modifications which we thought would be useful as well, and those are being proposed in addition to the five points which the union has proposed.

Mr. O'Neil: Supplementary: I wonder if we could ask the minister what those other proposals are that her ministry is making?

Hon. B. Stephenson: It would be difficult to outline them in detail right at the moment, because there are a number of facets which I think have to be worked out. First, I think we have to have some agreement on the part of the union specifically that it would be responsive to these kinds of initiatives, and I think perhaps it will be.

There are programs of training and re-training which we think might be useful. There is the proposal that, indeed, early retirement for some of the employed workers in the Sudbury area might solve some of the problems. There are two projects related to Inco at which we believe some of these individuals could be employed as well. There are some other features in addition to that.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: Would the Minister of Labour join with the trade unions and the membership in the Sudbury basin in rejecting the federal proposal to have the employees at Inco and Falconbridge, and Inco in particular, work a reduced work week which would, in fact, just spread the poverty around?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Although I am aware of the unions' apparent antagonism to this proposal at the moment I'm not sure that they are cognizant of all the features that might be included in such a program on the basis of the unproclaimed sections of Bill C-27, the federal Unemployment Insurance Act. We were hoping to be able to explore this further with them and with the company and with the federal government to see if we could develop it in a way which might be more acceptable to the unions than it is at the present time.

Mr. Martel: Does the minister agree that it should be the taxpayers of Canada, who subsidize Inco, rather than Inco, who should pay for the havoc it is creating in the Sudbury area?

Mr. Kerrio: They are doing the same for General Motors. You know it.

Mr. Lewis: It is negotiated in General Motors; it is not paid by government.

Mr. Kerrio: Exactly. And all we are doing is negotiating now under prior circumstances. As soon as you couldn't nationalize, you went down the pipe.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am not really quite sure of the implications of the hon. member's question. Of course the taxpayers of Canada have some concern about this, and I am sure they will be expressing their concern to those of us who are attempting, in co-operation with the company and the union, to solve the problem.

Mr. Laughren: We'll believe that when we see it.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: This will be the final supplementary on this.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the government taking any steps at all to protect the jobs or to help those people who will be affected by these layoffs, but who are not working for Inco, the 3,000 people who will be affected because of the economic decline in the Sudbury area?

Hon. B. Stephenson: It is very difficult to protect those jobs which might be affected by layoffs.

Mr. Cassidy: Not "might"—will.

Hon. B. Stephenson: What we are trying to do is, in some way and as effectively as possible, to ameliorate the immediate situation, which of course is going to have a beneficial effect on the spinoff which has been conjectured in the House.

Mr. Cassidy: The answer is no, in other words.

BURNING PCBs

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Minister of the Environment: Is there no way to end the ambulatory paranoia with which his ministry is affected in these constant decisions it is making which are secret and not shared with the public? Why wasn't the public told about the permanent burning of those toxic wastes?

Hon. B. Stephenson: That is a misdiagnosis.

Mr. Lewis: It's not a misdiagnosis. It's an accurate diagnosis.

Mr. S. Smith: They are recumbent. That is the misdiagnosis. They are not ambulatory.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There is nothing paranoiac about it whatsoever. All we are interested in is accurate, fair and balanced reporting. As for the article to which the hon. member apparently is referring, there is no question of secret burning. This is an experiment.

Mr. Lewis: A two-year experiment.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes. For every experiment of this kind we don't necessarily notify the local council.

Mr. Makarchuk: Why do you deny the question then?

Mr. Lewis: You issued a certificate.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, a certificate was issued. If the hon. member would let me answer the question—and I realize he is trying to remember some information he got just before he walked in here—

Mr. Lewis: You are paranoid.

Mr. Breaugh: And ambulatory too.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The fact is that at some time during an experimental stage it is necessary to issue a certificate. That is part of any ongoing experiment. During that period there is analysis of the process, and in this particular case there were at least three different experiments with a various number of certificates issued.

As far as the PCB burning experiment was concerned, for example, a certificate was issued in December 1975 for the period until about April 1977. During the period that the company had the certificate that experiment was going on. It involved the Ontario Research Foundation and Environment Canada as well as our ministry. But you have to burn this material in this kiln as part of the experiment, as I say, to make sure that the emissions are acceptable and that there is no evidence of toxic waste contaminating the neighbourhood.

All I am saying is that there is no intention of keeping anything from the public. We issue these certificates to have some control over the burning of this material during the course of the experiment. There was an analysis done in May 1977 by a federal agency regarding this experiment. It was after that, or about that time, that we stopped the shipments of that material to the Mississauga plant.

Mr. Lewis: When the story broke.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Now, with more monitoring equipment and some modifications to the plant itself, we are considering allowing that burning to continue because, so far as we are concerned, as a result of this experiment it is a safe and acceptable method of getting rid of contaminated waste.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, on that basis does the minister not think that when he is issuing a certificate that public hearings should take place? Does he not feel that there is secrecy involved when he has an employee of his ministry saying, as quoted in today's Star: "How far do we have to go? Do we have an obligation to hold a public hearing every time we issue a certificate?" Is not the answer yes to that question?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The answer is not yes, because this particular experiment involved a utilization of waste oils and certain hydrocarbons for the production of cement. This is not waste disposal in the strict sense of the word. This is utilizing material that can be used to produce cement and at the same time is safe way to get rid of this material.

The ministry issues probably 1,000 certificates in a year but in an experiment of this kind—

Mr. Lewis: This is a controversial thing.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —until we know what is involved and are able to hold a meeting and explain to the public what is going on and what we found out, then really we can't see the good sense in having a hearing. As I say, it's not required under our legislation.

Mr. O'Neil: Supplementary: I wonder if I could ask the minister, in regard to the reporting on this particular case, whether someone from within his ministry—I have a great deal of respect for the minister and I know it would not have come from him—asked that a confidential report be obtained on the particular reporter who reported this story, checking into his newspaper stories and his background?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I believe that is correct. I believe there was some type of assessment done on the reporter by the information branch, of which the reporter is aware and received a copy.

Mr. Kennedy: Supplementary: Would the minister confirm whether or not the lead paragraph of this article in today's Globe is in fact accurate where it states: "The cement kiln has been regularly burning highly toxic wastes for about two years without public knowledge but with the ministry's approval?"

Mr. Lewis: That's true.

Mr. Kennedy: It was certainly public knowledge last spring. I was also informed—

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Kennedy: —that burning had ceased in April. Is that accurate?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, the statement as written in the first paragraph is accurate. We did not notify the public—that's correct—at the start of this experiment. As I say, it involved three or four different agencies. It was done, first of all, on a very technical and scientific basis and then it moved into the process of issuing the certificate and the company accepting the waste in its cement kiln under the monitoring of our ministry and the other agencies that were involved in the experiment.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: It seems to me to follow straight on. I want to ask the minister as a minister, a lawyer and a civil libertarian, was he responsible for a part of, or aware of the decision of members of his ministry to look at the stories written and related background matters involving the reporter who has been persistently reporting on his ministry in order to compile a document meant to discredit him with his employers at the Globe and Mail? Was he aware of all of that?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I want to make sure that the hon. member is accurate in saying that a report was put together with the intention of discrediting the reporter. No.

Mr. Lewis: Why else? Why would the ministry put a report together?

Mr. Speaker: Just answer the original supplementary, please.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I was not aware that this was undertaken by the ministry.

Mr. Lewis: Does the minister approve of it?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: But I am certainly aware of the circumstances where, as a result of an interview with the reporter and his editor the reports that were coming out of our ministry were discussed. The idea was that we must have a fair and balanced reporting—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, of course.

Mr. Deans: In whose opinion?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —of the articles that were reporting about our ministry.

Mr. Deans: Would you like to manage the news?

Mr. Lewis: That is no way to handle it.

Mr. Warner: Nixon wanted fair and balanced news.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: You can rise in the House. You don't have to let anyone create your reports.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, all I'm saying is—now that I've found out about it—that I don't think the reporter was prejudiced in any way by this assessment. As I say, it was discussed with him and, apparently, he is satisfied with the assessment.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: Can the minister explain to this House exactly what this so-called report consisted of and who did it? Was it merely a compilation of articles written by this particular reporter or were further questions asked of other citizens regarding this reporter and his background? If so, by whom, what were the questions, and has any other reporter ever undergone a similar investigation or been reported on in this manner?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is my understanding that—as the hon. member says—a number of articles written by the particular reporter were assessed by people within the ministry; then, a report or assessment was given as a result of those articles, and this was discussed with the reporter and his editor.

Mr. Breithaupt: A sort of scoop.

Mr. Lewis: That is unbelievable.

Mr. MacDonald: Why didn't the minister rise in the House if he thought they were unbalanced?

Mr. Lewis: Unbelievable.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the minister if he thinks it is a legitimate expenditure of public funds to investigate the background of a reporter?

Mr. Deans: Why don't you investigate it and tell people what they should do?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I think that the hon. member should keep his questions in perspective. As I've said, the only assessment involved, as far as I am aware, was of a number of articles that were written by the reporter about the ministry over a certain period of time. Only those articles were assessed, with the facts as they were; and a comment was made on that assessment and given to the reporter.

Mr. Lewis: To his bosses.

An hon. member: You tried to get him fired.

Mr. Lewis: The minister didn't raise it in the House. He sent it to his editors.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Kerrio: In view of the fact that much of the polychlorinated biphenyls have been taken into New York state for high temperature incineration, has the minister taken advantage of the technology that's been developed there so that such experimentation is not so necessary here in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The experimentation that the hon. member is talking about is just what was carried out at the St. Lawrence Cement plant at Mississauga.

Mr. B. Newman: That is not a cement plant in New York state.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The American Environmental Protection Agency were also observers in respect to that experiment. So what we did at the St. Lawrence Cement plant in Mississauga gave the type of information that was wanted on both sides of the border and is the type of information that is now being used in respect to the Peerless application in Detroit.

Mr. Kennedy: Supplementary: Have PCBs been burned at this plant through the past summer? Are they being burned now, or accepted now; and, secondly, if the minister is planning to proceed did he state earlier that there would be public meetings?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is my understanding that there hasn't been burning of PCBs since about June, I believe it is. There is no burning going on at the present time and I would expect there would be hearings before it resumes.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: I want to come back to the related supplementary matter. Isn't it true that the Ministry of the Environment was so mad and embarrassed at the continuing succession of stories on environmental matters that were written that the minister attempted to compile a document which would discredit the authenticity of the story and, therefore, of the journalist? If he does that kind of thing—and there have been other complaints from other ministries to newspapers—does he not think he should rise in the House and share it with the Legislature whenever he undertakes that kind of foolishness, rather than go off to the employers in the fashion he does?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As a result of a number of articles written by that particular reporter, a number of employees within the ministry were complaining that they were being misquoted, that their answers were being distorted in a way that didn't give a true and accurate impression of what they were saying.

Mr. Lewis: Why doesn't the minister say it in the House? Raise it. That is what this place is for.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As a result of a number of employees complaining about this, we wanted to see if there was some legitimate reason for feeling this way. Were they in fact being misquoted? Were the reports inaccurate? It was strictly an in-house type of assessment—

Mr. Foulds: Oh, yes, very in-house.

Mr. Lewis: It went to his employers.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —dealing strictly with those articles and then an assessment was made in respect to that.

Mr. Lewis: It was pressure. It was political pressure.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is quite possible that this could have been asked for. There might have been some arrangement, I don't know, between the reporter or the editor in respect to this assessment to see if there was any indication of unfairness. The assessment was carried out, but certainly it wasn't given to anybody else. It wasn't intended to embarrass the reporter or anything like that.

Mr. MacDonald: It wasn't?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It was to deal with some complaints by people who were being quoted.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: The final supplementary on this. The hon. member for Renfrew North.

Mr. Conway: Who specifically directed that this in-house assessment vis-à-vis this reporter be undertaken? Was the minister aware that it proceeded and did he give this in-house assessment his blessing to that extent before it took place?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't aware that this type of assessment was taking place.

Mr. Lewis: That's what I meant by ambulatory paranoia.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I am not sure really who gave the orders or who made the decision. I'm not aware of that—

Mr. Foulds: That's why you don't know what's going on in your ministry.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —I can certainly find that out. But I wasn't aware of it at the time it was undertaken, and, as a matter of fact, I really only found out about it this week.

Mr. Lewis: I'm not surprised that's true.

Mr. Speaker: With a new question, the hon. member for Quinte.

Mr. Lewis: You shouldn't permit that, George. You just shouldn't permit that kind of stuff. It's garbage.

INVESTIGATION OF REPORTER

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, following along that same line of questioning, I wonder if the hon. minister could tell us who spoke with the reporter and the editor, and whether something has been done to reprimand the persons within his ministry who gave that particular order?

MINAKI LODGE

Mr. S. Smith: Is that a supplementary?

Mr. O'Neil: No, it's a new question.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I am not sure who spoke to the reporter and the editor. I'd have to find that out.

Mr. Peterson: Is the minister prepared to give full disclosure of this matter at this time or in the very near future?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. That was a new question. With a supplementary, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the minister prepared to guarantee to this House that this form of intimidation of a reporter will not occur in his ministry again, and will he also seek the same assurance from cabinet that it is not done by other ministries against reporters in the future?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I would have to agree that this is a form of intimidation.

Interjections.

Mr. Lewis: Exactly. Exactly, and it shouldn't be done.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, don't misunderstand me. I'm saying that I will have to agree first of all that this is a form of intimidation. I really don't have enough of the facts to know whether there was some type of agreement or arrangement to get this information. In other words, did the paper say, "If you're not satisfied with this man's reporting, why don't you analyse the stories he's been writing over the past year or so?" I don't know if that type of arrangement was made or that type of discussion was entered into. But certainly that is not the type of thing that I would favour in the future and I don't expect that it will be done again.

Mr. Lewis: Then reprimand the people of your ministry. And it is not just your ministry, by the way.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: There are other paranoids over there.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Interjections.

Mr. Peterson: Very simply, is the minister prepared to investigate this matter and report back to the House as soon as possible with names and dates about this whole incident?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I am prepared to make a statement on the matter at some future date, yes.

Mr. Lewis: Good. Done. Let it be the last time.

Mr. Martel: A question of the Minister of Northern Affairs: The government spent $8 million at Minaki and committed itself to spending another $10 million. How many jobs was it intended to create, this $18 million that the government of Ontario was prepared to spend on Minaki Lodge?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That question should be more appropriately directed to my cabinet colleague, the Minister of Industry and Tourism.

Mr. Martel: I will redirect it, but as it concerned the Minister of Northern Affairs' riding, I assumed he'd know.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I do know.

Mr. Martel: To the Minister of Industry and Tourism: With the expenditure of $8 million in Minaki and a commitment for another $10 million, how many jobs did the government of Ontario intend would be created in Minaki?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: First of all, in regard to Minaki—and we've gone through this subject on a number of occasions—not only was it to try and create employment for the native people in the Minaki area in the range of something of about—

Mr. Martel: Just how many? I want to know how many.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I will give the explanation, if you don't mind.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: That's correct and I'll come to it. Mr. Speaker, while the opposition might think that because you invest in a particular project, that's the only place there happens to be employment, there's a spinoff effect from that industry as well. I'm saying that directly at Minaki we're looking at—

Mr. Makarchuk: Most of it went to pay a mortgage in the States.

Mr. Speaker: Order, do you want an answer to the question or not?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I'm not sure they want an answer at all. They just like to hear themselves.

I said very clearly, if the members would listen and stop interjecting, 250 at Minaki with a spinoff of at least 250 in the other resort industries in the immediate area, and most of them native people.

Mr. Martel: In other words, the minister is spending roughly $90,000 or $45,000 per job. Is the government of Ontario, in order to protect the 6,000 jobs going to be lost in the Sudbury basin, prepared to put that kind of money per worker, either by stockpiling—

Mr. Speaker: That's not supplementary.

Mr. Martel: Certainly, it is. Mr. Speaker, I'm asking if the government is willing to put a proportionate amount of money in the—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will take his seat. I was very, very attentive to the first question and it dealt specifically with Minaki Lodge. It did indeed and I so rule.

Mr. Martel: It dealt with jobs, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It dealt with jobs specifically at Minaki Lodge.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I'm ruling the supplementary out of order. You cannot debate it. You can challenge it if you wish. The hon. member for London Centre.

Mr. Martel: We were talking about the creation of jobs.

Mr. Speaker: You were talking about jobs in Minaki. Order. The hon. member will take his seat.

The hon. member for London Centre has a supplementary dealing specifically with Minaki Lodge and jobs.

Mr. Peterson: Could the minister tell us his response, and how much progress has been made with respect to the public accounts committee report that that asset should be disposed of as quickly as possible? Could he tell us what progress has been made in those negotiations and, perhaps, bring us up to date on those reported rumours in the press some couple of months ago that he was prepared to give the thing away? Is that the case?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: First of all, Mr. Speaker, let me assure you that it was not a statement by the minister or the ministry in relationship to what way we've disposed of the asset at Minaki.

Secondly, in relationship to trying to find a buyer, we have been seeking out and we've been discussing it with some of the principal hotel operations in the province of Ontario and across Canada and, indeed, some of the international chains. We will continue to do it and we anticipate, very shortly, to place an ad in the trade journals that will go on a very widely circulating basis to get proposals as to what the private sector could do with Minaki.

Mr. Kerrio: Put the old Hydro building on the list.

Mr. Foulds: Could the minister tell us how many jobs were, in fact, created by that expenditure of funds? Would he not agree that, as a matter of policy, it would be wiser to spend that kind of money building a true economic infrastructure for the north, so the kind of layoff that occurs in Sudbury would not have the devastating effects on one-industry communities that it does have?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I've listened to members from the north for the last number of years indicating very clearly they felt that we should be moving into areas of tourism to try to strengthen the economic viability of some of those communities. Minaki was intended to do just that.

We got into a constraint period because of limitations and government spending. Minaki was one of the first programs that was cut, and I'm sorry to say that it has been. But it was intended to try and develop some meaningful employment for people of Minaki, both natives and others in that community.

During the construction period there were a very substantial number of jobs. At the moment, the only portion of Minaki that is in full operation is Holst Point.

Mr. Foulds: How many jobs are there?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I'd have to inquire.

LAYOFF OF NICKEL WORKERS

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Will the minister apply all her energy and resources available to ensure that fair employment practices will prevail during the present negotiations between Inco Metals and Locals 6500 and 6200 relating to the present massive layoffs of Inco Metals employees? Can the minister also assure the Legislature that good-faith bargaining will be present in the matter of equity and severance pay, and that Inco operations in Sudbury will be given the same consideration on severance pay that applies to Inco employees in Port Colborne who have received notice of termination of employment?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the company has complied with the legislation thus far. I think it has informed not only the Ministry of Labour but also the trade union in Port Colborne of the kinds of programs which it is willing to negotiate with the unions regarding early retirement and some supplement to retirement programs for those who might choose to take, perhaps, an earlier than early retirement. Indeed, there are other facets to that set of negotiations which are quite important for the workers in Port Colborne.

It is my understanding that thus far the company has carried out those negotiations in as good faith as it is possible to carry them out. I will certainly be monitoring whatever negotiations there are, because we intend to be a part of the development of the programs which might be applied to Local 6500 in the Sudbury area.

Mr. Haggerty: Supplementary: Perhaps the minister is not aware of the present negotiations going on between Local 6200 and Inco at Port Colborne, where employees who have a certain degree of disability and who are classed for only modified employment are being coerced in a quiet manner, being told, "There are no jobs here for you"?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I am aware of the scope of the negotiations. If there are specific problems of this sort, then I would appreciate having them drawn to my attention. They have not been drawn to my attention to this date, and if the hon. member has some examples then I would think it's his responsibility to let me know of these so that I may, indeed, intervene.

LAYOFF OF NICKEL WORKERS

Mr. Martel: A question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism: In view of the fact that this government was prepared to put up $45,000 per job in the creation of work in the Minaki area, is the minister now willing to put up that type of money per job to protect the 6,000 who will be jobless as a result of the Falconbridge and Inco layoffs?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, that's a question that should be directed to the Premier and subject to consultations by our cabinet colleagues.

Mr. Cassidy: Don't duck it.

Mr. Deans: Just the Premier.

Mr. Martel: I listened to the minister saying that in order to create meaningful employment the government was prepared to put that kind of money into the Minaki area; is it prepared to put that kind of money into the Sudbury area to create meaningful work for the 6,000 people who are going to lose their jobs?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: In relationship to the Inco situation, it's a matter of retaining employment. I have no program within the ministry at this time that gives me the authority to loan or advance funds to any corporate structure to retain employment.

Mr. Martel: I am not suggesting that.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: To develop meaningful employment is the project that has been given to this ministry and we try to carry it out the best we can.

Mr. Martel: Is the minister prepared to buy or stockpile nickel by outright purchase to that amount or by buying shares in Inco, so that, in fact, the government has a say as to how the company will act in respect of its employees in the Sudbury basin?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: No, Mr. Speaker.

FRENCH-LANGUAGE INSTRUCTION

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to direct to the minister responsible for the bilingual policy of the government. I understand that's the member for Cochrane North. Is that right? He is nodding. He said "Oui."

Is he aware that a significant number of the high schools in this province no longer offer French-language instruction in grade 13 and that some of them, because of lack of interest or application on the part of the students, are not offering it in grade 12?

Is he further aware that in the five years since 1971, the number of grade 13 students taking French has been reduced by 40 per cent, and is he, in his area of policy responsibility, doing anything with the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells), his colleague the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) and the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Mr. Parrott) about this regrettable matter?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Non, M. le président, je n'étais pas au courant du problème comme mon collègue vient de m'apprendre. Il me fera plaisir d'en discuter avec le ministre de l'Éducation et c'est certain que nous ferons ensemble notre possible pour essayer de remédier à la situation que le député vient de nous apporther.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: If he is not aware of this matter, as he indicated in his answer, why is it that he has been given this extremely important responsibility having to do with the policy on bilingual matters in the province of Ontario when it is of such concern and importance, not only in these days but for the educational future of our young people—

Mr. S. Smith: That's right.

Mr. Nixon:—let alone to those of us who are already suffering from certain inadequacies, not only in education but probably in a personal field as well?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Aw, Bob.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: In this province, when it comes to education in the French language, I believe that we have an exceedingly good record. As I mentioned to him in French a little while ago, I would be pleased to take this matter up with my colleague, the Minister of Education, and I am sure that we can work out a good program.

Mr. Samis: Comme le représentant de la population francophone de notre province, êtes-vous prêt de suggérer à votre collègue, le ministre de l'Éducation, de faire de la langue française un sujet obligatoire dans l'école secondaire?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Ceci, M. le président, ce sera une politique du gouvernement et ce sera la responsabilité du premier ministre et des membres du cabinet.

In other words, it would be a policy of the Premier and the Ontario government to make French an obligatory subject.

Mr. Samis: The provincial secretary is the only francophone left in the cabinet. No wonder they complain as they do.

Mr. S. Smith: What is his degree of responsibility? What does he do?

Mr. Kerrio: He balances the scale with the member for Lambton (Mr. Henderson).

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Has the minister discussed with his colleague, the Minister of Education, the fact that the funding mechanism set up by his ministry to encourage the schools of the province of Ontario to teach French is such that in fact it discourages them as they become more proficient and as they go deeper into the language? Has he discussed that?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: The Minister of Education announced this year—and I believe the hon. member was in the House—a program of substantially increased funds for various school boards to promote the teaching of French to English-language students.

Mr. Sweeney: That is precisely what I am referring to. In view of the fact that the mechanism that he announced—the mechanism that is in place—says to the local school board that if you go into an immersion program it is going to cost you more, how can we possibly expect the school boards to pick up that new mechanism when they can't afford to do it? How can we expect that?

NATIVE RIGHTS

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Natural Resources. In view of the fact that the Robinson Huron Treaty recognizes the rights of the members of the Ojibway bands in that region to hunt and fish on the lands they ceded as long as they remain unoccupied Crown lands, but the Ministry of Natural Resources officials are enforcing provincial fish and game regulations under the federal Fisheries Act and the provincial hunting laws—

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Wildman:—which seriously restrict these rights, is the minister prepared to recommend changes in those regulations to the federal government and to his ministry in order to preserve these rights and to stop harassing the Ojibways of the region?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I think the question of whether or not we are harassing the Ojibways in the region can be disputed. I believe the hon. member is referring to a specific case where some deer and moose were picked up from some Indians who alleged to be members of the Robinson Huron Treaty.

It is my understanding that the provincial game and fish laws—where we have them—are overridden by the treaties with the Indians. I also understand that federal statutes override the treaties.

Mr. Wildman: That's only true in fishing.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The fact remains, there are some rules in each category. My staff have been told to honour the treaties with the Indians. Sometimes, however, events occur where Indians who allege to be members of one band with certain rights are hunting in an area where those rights do not apply, and these result in the kinds of occurrences we saw in the member's area not long ago.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: Without discussing a particular case, I would like to ask the minister: isn't it true that although the courts have interpreted the Fisheries Act to override the treaties, the federal government simply rubber-stamps provincial regulations that are set under that Act? If that's the case, why doesn't the minister suggest changes in those regulations that would comply with the treaties? Why didn't he reply to the letter from the Union of Ontario Indians which requested a meeting on this matter to resolve the whole controversy?

Hon. F. S. Miller: First, Mr. Speaker, if I haven't replied to a letter, it's a very unusual thing except for one that the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) referred to. It has been replied to, by the way.

Mr. Lewis: I'm glad you found your courage.

Mr. Laughren: Screwed up your courage.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Thank you; it comes in bottles. Every so often a letter will be a bit slower in the reply, but they certainly will not be ignored.

While I was in the member's riding recently, I had the opportunity to talk to some of the Indian chiefs and to discuss this matter with them. I can assure them I will see that the spirit of the treaties is enforced, but I ask them in turn to obey the law also.

Mr. Reed: Supplementary: Does the override to which the minister refers apply to fish and game taken by native peoples for resale, or does it only apply to fish and game taken for home consumption?

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's, I guess, one of the questionable points. It's my understanding we've interpreted the laws to allow the Indians to hunt for their own purposes regardless of the federal nature of the statute, providing they are hunting for food for their own purposes.

We have had a number of occasions, I believe, in the riding of the member for Nipissing (Mr. Bolan) where it has been alleged that Indians using the right to fish for food have been selling large quantities of fish and causing problems, in fact depleting the stocks. This is when we get into real troubles with people who have taken a law we've already bent and bend it further.

Mr. Wildman: Is the minister prepared to meet with the chiefs of the region and the representatives of the Union of Ontario Indians to discuss the new, or apparent redefining of the phrase "unoccupied Crown lands"?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think the member will realize I'm generally willing to meet with people who have a reasonable cause. I would suggest that in some cases this kind of meeting is best done at a staff level first to hammer out technical details.

Mr. Wildman: It already has been.

Hon. F. S. Miller: If my staff say the technical details are hammered out, certainly I'll see them.

ENERGY DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Reed: I have a question of the Minister of Energy. Understanding that during the last election statements were made to indicate that work was under way to investigate methanol production for Ontario, at what stage is that work at the present time and when can we expect a report on methanol for Ontario?

Mr. Cassidy: Around about the next election, eh?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, shortly.

Mr. Kerrio: You've kept your record intact.

Mr. Reed: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad the minister didn't say "in the fullness of time." Now that it's been close to half a year, can he give us a ball park figure—a month or two months or six months, or never?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I gave the abbreviated answer first; now I'll enlarge, if I may.

As members know, experiments have been going on in connection with the use of methanol in conjunction with gasoline through the Ministry of Transportation and Communications with their various types of vehicles.

We have a committee that's made up of members from industry, from the universities and from the people in the oil industry, that will be a second report. I expect that report to be forthcoming, I said shortly, I would expect certainly before Christmas.

Mr. Reed: What year?

Mr. Samis: Supplementary: Can the minister tell us, as a result of his exotic travels, if anything from that trip can be applied to expedite the process in Ontario?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: It is very interesting. There has been a vehicle developed; the Volkswagen people have developed an all-methanol vehicle. It is very similar to the Rabbit, operating on all methanol. It looks like that application will be used in countries such as Brazil where they are using sugar cane, apparently, to produce methanol. I can see the application here either in terms of methanol mixed with gasoline or an all-methanol vehicle. I think one of the problems is to ensure a fast-growing crop that one can harvest very quickly to produce methanol and provide an economic type of operation.

In terms of the distribution system, it very well could be for example, that the premium pump could be used, in the existing service station complex, to distribute gasoline. I could talk on it for some time. I would be happy to talk with my critic at his pleasure and to develop it further.

HAMILTON OFFICE COMPLEX

Mr. Deans: I have a question of the Treasurer. I wonder if he could provide the rationale for the decision which was made, about the provincial office complex in Hamilton, which didn't seem to take into account the rising unemployment that is likely to occur throughout the province. Not only was the government not prepared to proceed with the promise it made to build a provincial office complex in the city of Hamilton, but it wasn't even prepared to undertake to go ahead with it on the basis of a private development which was proposed by a developer in the Hamilton area.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That was not my decision, it was a decision taken by the cabinet, and in particular it was a decision taken by cabinet that so much money would be available—

Mr. Cassidy: You are hiding behind the Premier.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —for public works for government buildings. In an attempt to meet that target, certain larger projects were not approved. I think—the question might be more properly directed to the Minister of Government Services (Mr. McCague).

Mr. Deans: If I may, by way of a supplementary question, I will ask the Treasurer, because I am particularly interested in what the financial implications would have been to the Treasury by way of a capital outlay in allowing the project to proceed by way of the private development that was proposed; which would have, at least in the short run, have provided a great number of jobs in the construction industry; which in turn would have helped to offset the rising unemployment levels.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That was not part of our deliberations. Whether it subsequently makes sense for the government to relocate, I assume at higher costs, from a variety of locations into a privately-owned building is a question of what the leased costs are to be compared to what the leased costs are presently. That is a question the member would have to put to the Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Deans: One final supplementary: Is it fair to say that the Treasurer might be able to make an announcement with regard to the development going ahead some time just before the next election?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Not to my knowledge today, tomorrow or before the next election. For the third time, I would say that is a question the member might want to direct to the Minister of Government Services.

DANGEROUS OFFENDERS

Mr. Epp: I have a question of the Attorney General. In view of the fact a Belleville man recently was released from the Kingston penitentiary, a man the Ontario Provincial Police classified as a dangerous sexual psychopath, and that this person was put in prison after he had assaulted a 10-year-old girl near Belleville and was released in February—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Epp: He was released in February after trying to lure some kids away from parks and schools. I wonder whether the Attorney General's ministry made any representation to the parole board; was his ministry asked to make any representation, and if asked were any made?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, we were not asked to make any representations, nor is it the practice of the Ministry of the Attorney General to make representations to the parole board.

[3:00]

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary: Since, apparently, this man kept various newspaper clippings about children in our twin-city area, and maps dealing with the locations of schools in our area, will the Attorney General recognize the seriousness with which this unfortunate circumstance is being looked at by many concerned parents in our community; and will he, perhaps, review the case before an unfortunate and tragic event, which seems almost to be planned for, can occur?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think there is, perhaps, a little confusion as to the role of the Ministry of the Attorney General in matters such as this. As you know, we do not administer the police forces. I gather the police force—and of course, it has been already stated in the Legislature—has indicated concern about this individual. I have learned somewhere, perhaps in the press, that the local police forces have indicated this man is being kept under surveillance. The role of the Ministry of the Attorney General, when the case comes before the courts, is to see that it is properly prosecuted. In the future, if it appears that an application should be made under the new amendments to the Criminal Code, that were just proclaimed a week ago, in relation to dangerous offenders, then the agent for the Attorney General will request the court to make such an order declaring an individual a dangerous offender. But once the case has been processed through the courts, the Ministry of the Attorney General really does lose jurisdiction.

Mr. Epp: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering whether the Attorney General will recommend to the Solicitor General (Mr. MacBeth) that this procedure be followed, that they become more involved in this and try to resolve it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the police forces are very much involved in the matter at the present time.

FUNDING OF WAWEL VILLA

Mr. Duksza: I have a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. Can the minister tell the House whether he will honour the promise made by his predecessor to help partially fund Wawel Villa in 1977 which is a proposal by the Polish community in Toronto to build a senior citizens home.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, the subject of Wawel Villa has been dealt with by me in a meeting with the board of that home for the aged. I have communicated very clearly to them that, unfortunately, I do not have, in my budget, capital funds that would permit me to make any such undertaking at this time.

Mr. McClellan: We have been told that in the last four years.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It is unfortunate that this particular group was ready to go ahead a number of years ago, at a time when capital funds were available; but because of a schism within the group itself they were delayed several years. Unfortunately, they are now ready again—this particular section of the group—to proceed at a time when I simply don't have any capital funds with which to support the program.

Mr. Foulds: There is a schism in cabinet now.

Mr. Duksza: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The time for the oral questions has expired.

INVESTIGATION OF REPORTER

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege: In view of the admission of the Minister of the Environment that what happened in his ministry was a form of intimidation of a reporter, and since this affects the privileges of this House in reference to free reporting, would you, as the Speaker of this House and the guardian of its privileges, ascertain whether or not that kind of thing was done by any other ministry, either by word of mouth or otherwise?

Mr. Speaker: It may be a matter of privilege affecting anybody in this House. I fail to see where you have a valid point of privilege that affects any member of this House.

Mr. Lewis: It affects free and fair reporting.

Mr. Swart: It affects all members of the House.

Mr. Speaker: It doesn't affect the privileges of any member of this House.

Mr. Lewis: We need a free press; it affects my personal liberty.

Mr. Speaker: I see no matter of privilege affecting any member of this House, and that's all I have to be governed by.

Mr. MacDonald: Is it not a matter of privilege to be assured that reporters have the freedom to report as they see fit, and as their editors are willing, rather than as required by ministers?

Mr. Speaker: No. Our privilege provisions in this House affect the privileges of members of this House and no others.

Mr. MacDonald: Collectively.

Mr. Conway: That is before the court of appeal.

REPORTS

STANDING PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Mr. Breaugh from the standing procedural affairs committee presented the committee's report, which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following applications for private Acts and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

Fuller-Austin of Canada Limited;
Borough of Etobicoke;
City of Sarnia (No. 1);
Niagara Institute for International Studies;
City of Hamilton;
Matol Holdings Limited;
Stanley Starr Limited;
Garnet Holdings Limited;
City of Ottawa;
Kedna Enterprises Limited;
City of Windsor.

Your committee recommends that the House give unanimous consent to permit introduction and first reading of Bill Pr34, An Act respecting the City of Sarnia, before the completion of the necessary publication for notice, notwithstanding sessional order 35.

MOTIONS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the statutory instruments committee be authorized to sit concurrently with the House tonight.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

LIQUOR LICENCE AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Mancini moved first reading of Bill 76, An Act to amend the Liquor Licence Act, 1975.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Mancini: The purpose of this bill is to increase the legal drinking age in the province of Ontario from 18 to 19 years of age; and that the said change take effect on March 1, 1978.

Mr. Laughren: Does your caucus agree to that?

JUDICATURE AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 77, An Act to amend the Judicature Act.

Motion agreed to.

COUNTY JUDGES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 78, An Act to amend the County Judges Act.

Motion agreed to.

JUDICATURE AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 79, An Act to amend the Judicature Act.

Motion agreed to.

PROVINCIAL COURTS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 80, An Act to amend the Provincial Courts Act.

Motion agreed to.

SMALL CLAIMS COURTS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 81, An Act to amend the Small Claims Courts Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I've been pleased to move first reading of a significant series of bills which provide for a number of changes in the structure, procedures and substantive law of the Supreme Court of Ontario, the county and district courts, the provincial courts and the small claims courts. I propose to comment on this series of bills as a whole, because I want to urge on all members the importance of the bills and the necessity of proceeding with them as expeditiously as possible.

The office of associate chief justice is created in the court of appeal, the high court, by the legislation. In the county and district courts, and both divisions of the provincial courts, provision is made for the appointment of an associate chief judge. The high court of justice, which is the trial division of the Supreme Court of Ontario, is expanded by four judges so that it will consist of a total of 42 judges.

A rational system for awarding pre-judgment interest is provided, which will be applicable in the Supreme Court, the county and district courts and the small claims court. Recommendations of the Ontario Law Reform Commission in regard to abolishing the technical and formalistic aspects of the distinction between motions in court and motions in chambers are implemented.

Substantial changes are made in the law relating to the issuing and vacating of certificates of lis pendens. Persons who make spurious claims for the purpose of registering a certificate of lis pendens against title to land are made subject to liability for damages. Jurisdiction to vacate certificate of lis pendens is extended to local judges of the Supreme Court.

These amendments are in response to a number of practical problems which have been brought to the attention of my ministry, by judges and by lawyers in private practice.

Times, of course, are changing, and the convenient and informal form for the settlement of disputes which is provided to the public by the small claims courts must be made more accessible and given a wider monetary jurisdiction. The bill increases the monetary jurisdiction of the small claims courts to $1,000 from $400 in southern Ontario and from $800 in the northern districts. In future, this new monetary limit of $1,000 will apply to small claims courts throughout the province.

The bill also makes provision for a judge to adopt less technical procedures in a small claims court and to admit relevant evidence which is inadmissible according to the strict rules of evidence. These amendments will facilitate the presentation of cases by persons who are not lawyers.

The procedure for pre-trial garnishment, a procedure which has been much criticized, is abolished.

Provision is made for the appointment, tenure and removal from office of small claims court judges, similar to the provisions applicable to provincial judges, including extending the jurisdiction of the judicial council for provincial judges to small claims court judges.

Finally, provincial judges sitting in the family division of our provincial courts are given full power to award costs of proceedings taken before them where there is no other statutory provisions as to costs.

Once again, I wish to stress the importance of these bills and to state that they represent a practical legislative approach to a wide range of problems in the administration of justice in Ontario. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

ONTARIO FOOD TERMINAL AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Pope moved first reading of Bill 82, An Act to amend the Ontario Food Terminal Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pope: The purpose of this bill is to authorize the Ontario Food Terminal board to establish a branch operation in the territorial district of Cochrane.

EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Breagh moved first reading of Bill 83, An Act to amend the Employment Standards Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Breagh: The purpose of this bill is to extend the protection for accrued wages, overtime pay and termination pay under the Employment Standards Act, 1974. Its net effect would be that when a company entered into bankruptcy, the wages and moneys owed to employees would get first priority and would not be held into a receivership court.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

AUDIT ACT

Hon. Mr. McKeough moved second reading of Bill 43, An Act to revise the Audit Act.

Mr. Reid: I will be brief, Mr. Speaker. We have been waiting for the new Audit Act for a considerable time, as a matter of fact, I think we can safely say a number of years.

As you may be aware, sir, there haven't been any substantial changes in regard to the Audit Act since the early 1950s. There was one amendment in 1971, other than that the Act remained pretty well as it has been.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Amendment was very substantial in 1971.

Mr. Reid: Yes, it was amended substantially in 1971, but this Act we have today—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I show it on my curriculum vitae.

Mr. Reid: Would the Treasurer like to make some remarks and save me all this trouble; either that or send me his curriculum vitae?

The Act we have before us today seems to be based to some extent on the Financial Administration Act of the federal government, Part VII, dealing with the Auditor General of Canada; and of course that deals with a number of matters that are appropriate to our own situation here in Ontario.

There are some new sections in the bill. As a former chairman and present chairman of the public accounts committee, I'm quite happy to see, in particular, the sections dealing with the fact that the Auditor has direction and control over those agencies, Crown agencies and otherwise, that are being audited by accountants in the private sector.

The Auditor has the authority under section 9 of the bill to ask for the working papers and in fact he can ask for additional examination and investigation of any audit that has been done by the private sector of an agency or ministry of the Crown that is not under the direct control of the Auditor, or which is not being audited by the Auditor's staff. I think this is a most important part of the bill.

Pretty well the essence of the bill is in sections 9, 12 and 13. I have a couple of questions that perhaps we can get into when we discuss the matter in the public accounts committee. There is one question in regard to section 13 of the Act, but perhaps that can wait.

Generally, the Liberal Party supports the bill. We are happy to see it.

It might be worthwhile at this time to say that the Auditor and the public accounts committee have come quite a way in the last few years. It was only in 1968, if I recall correctly, when a member of the opposition became chairman of the public accounts committee—it's here in my curriculum vitae.

I believe it was Mr. Jim Trotter, former member for Parkdale, who was the first opposition chairman.

Mr. Nixon: His Honour James Trotter.

Mr. Reid: His Honour James Trotter, yes. The second chairman, I am sure you are not aware, Mr. Speaker, was my friend and colleague the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt).

An hon. member: For six years.

Mr. Reid: The third and more eminent chairman was the member for Rainy River, as a matter of fact—

Mr. B. Newman: Is he still in the House?

Mr. Reid:—and the fourth was the member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa). So there have only been four chairmen of the public accounts committee from the opposition parties.

There are a couple of matters that would be more appropriately brought up during the clause-by-clause discussion of the Audit Act in the public accounts committee and I will reserve my comments for that particular time.

It is interesting to note, perhaps by way of historical footnote, that we have not been operating to the letter of the Audit Act as amended in 1971. In fact, we have not been operating according to the letter of that Act for some time. It's really time that we did do away with all those matters relating to pre-audit, the Auditor having to sign the cheques and a few other things like that which were in the previous bill. It's an interesting footnote that the government in fact has been operating somewhat illegally, I would think, in not following the old Audit Act, and I say that the new one is long overdue.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and make a few comments on Bill 43, An Act to revise the Audit Act. It is true that we have been waiting for some considerable period of time for this bill, and I think one of the most important principles involved in the bill is that it secures the independence of the Provincial Auditors, not only through his appointment but in establishing his wages, in his freedom to hire his own staff and in his freedom to hire the assistant auditor.

In principle I think we are making a major step forward to secure the independence of the Auditor, and I think it would be good to enunciate the principle of an independent person—and I will quote from a paper produced by the Bureau of Municipal Research in June 1976: "The importance of an independent audit of funds handled by public officials has been recognized historically as early as Aristotle's days when he described a situation in ancient Greece." I continue to quote: "Inasmuch as some of the magistracies handle large sums of public money, there must be another office to receive and account and subject it to audit, which must itself have no other business." I underline that statement, "handle no other business." "These officials are called auditors by some people, accountants by others, examiners by others, and advocates by others." So the principle of an independent auditor goes away back in our history, and to that I do subscribe.

Those people who handle public moneys, I think, have to be scrutinized by a person who has absolute independence and cannot in any degree or manner be perceived to be under any influence from any authority. In order to maintain the confidence of the public in public spending, it must know that the person auditing these expenditures is, in fact and absolutely, independent.

I had thought that, during my experience and my close contact with the Auditor in Ontario, in my continuing duties as a member of the public accounts committee over the past five or six years—and of course as chairman in the past session—I was in close contact with the Auditor. During that period I was of the impression that Ontario probably had one of the best audit systems in Canada—

Mr. Reid: Had one of the best; and is too!

Mr. Germa:—until such time as a study was done by Simon McInnes from the department of political science, Glendon College, York University. In a paper presented in Quebec City on May 30, 1976, McInnes evaluated all of the Auditors in Canada in three categories which he headed: not independent, almost independent, and independent. He classified Ontario's Auditor as almost independent; which was a surprise to me, because from my experience with three Auditors during my time here, I had thought them to be, and I did perceive them to be, acting in an independent manner. But after careful study by McInnes, he came to the conclusion that the Ontario Auditor was almost independent.

I am not exactly sure where the absolute independence of the Auditor in Ontario breaks down, but I have to accept that McInnes is a qualified researcher. I do not know exactly where the weakness was in the legislation, but he came to that determination.

Just for general interest, under the heading not independent—and McInnes is referring to the Auditors—Alberta's Auditor is classified by him as not independent; British Columbia's Auditor is also classified as not independent; and those provinces which he deems to see as having independent Auditors are Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and Saskatchewan.

I think the bill probably does accomplish, the plugging of those holes in the legislation where McInnes perceived that Ontario's Auditor was not, or could not be classified as independent. It is my sincere hope that adoption of this legislation will, in fact, accomplish that.

There are a couple of sections that I think should be stiffened up. Both of them are controversial; they have been around for many years and have been discussed at various levels. I'm speaking to the principle as enunciated in section 9 of the bill, having to do with audit of Crown corporations. [3:30]

The bill, while it does improve the present legislation, gives the Auditor opportunity to intervene when private auditors are hired by Crown corporations to do their audit. The Provincial Auditor could, if he saw fit, go in and re-examine their presentation. But I would tend to go back to the basic principle of Aristotle's time, when it's said that the auditor of public moneys should handle "no other business." That's how long the argument has been in place about who should audit the expenditure of public funds.

Even back in those days they were determined, and did state, that the person who was auditing public funds should be engaged in no other business. We do not accomplish that principle when we allow Crown corporations to go out and hire a commercial auditor.

Mr. Foulds: Themistocles did some—

Hon. B. Stephenson: What about Diogenes?

Mr. Foulds: No, it was Themistocles.

Hon. B. Stephenson: But I think Diogenes was looking for the honest man too, wasn't he?

Mr. Foulds: Diogenes was fooling around with the silver he found.

Mr. Germa: Is the Minister of Labour trying to disturb me?

Hon. B. Stephenson: As long as your vision and your hearing have improved today, Bud, I will be quiet.

Mr. Germa: They have, markedly. I recognize the difference, you know.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Good.

Mr. Germa: The report of the independent review committee on the office of the Auditor General of Canada, tabled in Ottawa—in March, 1975, I think—was the bible that was used by the people writing this legislation. I notice a lot of the wording of the recommendations of the report of the independent review committee are just transferred into the legislation. I think this was a very good report.

They did consider and speak to the subject of the audit of Crown corporations at that level. It says on page 55 of the report: "In the 1960s, for example, the standing committee on public accounts stated that the Auditor General should audit all Crown corporations." That was back in 1960. They were of a very firm opinion.

"The committee," and I'm quoting again, "consistently maintained its position in its report to the House of Commons between 1964 and 1969." So we had a position that maintained for nine years that all Crown corporations should be audited by the Auditor General.

Then in 1970 it reversed its stand, proposing that there should be no change in existing arrangements; that is, and I'm quoting again: "the audit of some corporations should continue to be undertaken by accounting firms."

Mr. Foulds: Shameful retreat.

Mr. Germa: Of course the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, I suspect, had some influence in changing the committee's mind. I think that either position is valid, except that mine, I think, is a little more valid; mainly because I hold that opinion, I guess that's all that makes it more valid.

So I propose to enter an amendment when we get to committee—I'm presuming this is going to the public accounts committee for the clause by clause—I propose to try to amend section 9 to accomplish that all Crown corporations shall be audited by the Provincial Auditor.

Another subject I would like to speak to is section 10. It provides that "every ministry of the public service and every agency of the Crown shall furnish the Auditor with such information regarding its powers, duties, activities, . . ." I am posing this as a question, and I am relating it to the difficulty the Auditor ran into last year when he attempted to extract certain information from the Ministry of Health as it related to the expenditures of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan.

Under the Act which established the Ontario Health Insurance Plan there is a section which apparently must supersede the section which I have just quoted, the one which says that every ministry must supply the Auditor with information. We know of the controversy that surrounded the attempt by the Provincial Auditor to get certain information so that he could make an evaluation as to the expenditures of that particular program. I am posing it as a question to the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough), that he clarify in my mind which Act has precedence; the OHIP Act which provides for the non-disclosure of of very large expenditures, or this section of the Audit Act which says that no information can or will be withheld from the Auditor.

There is definitely a conflict between those two pieces of legislation. That concerns me, and I don't know until the Treasurer responds whether an amendment would be advisable or not.

A new section and a new concept is that having to do with the Auditor not only going through the basic financial evaluation to ensure the money was legally spent, that legislation was complied with and that there is an accounting, but also that the Auditor now will have the authority, and is in fact commanded, to report on value for money expended. In the report of the independent review committee, which I referred to earlier, on that subject matter, under recommendation (iii), it states: "The Auditor General should report annually to the House of Commons if money has been expended other than for the purpose for which it was appropriated by Parliament, or if value for money has not been obtained for any expenditure or expenditures."

That is one place where the person drafting the bill deviated from the recommendations. They used the clear and unadulterated term "value for money expended," whereas in the present Act that we have before us they speak of "money expended with economy and efficiency." I know some people will translate those three words and say they all mean the same thing. If money is expended with economy and efficiency, therefore we must have consequently received value for money. I tend to favour the wording of value for money, even though I suspect that if money is expended with efficiency and economy then I must have received value for money.

I myself, personally, would like the Treasurer to speak to that particular wording in the legislation. Why was value for money not lifted right out of the recommendation, as very many other parts of the bill in fact were? Otherwise, I am very happy to see this legislation before the assembly. We do intend to support Bill 43.

Mr. Peterson: I just want to make two or three points. I don't intend to dwell on that which is self evident to every member of this House, and has been for the past few decades or so. I just want to say a couple of things.

First of all, we very clearly support the position of the independence of the Auditor, but I am personally somewhat disturbed by the way the public accounts committee functioned last year, because we do have the legislative power to undo what he can do through his independent good offices. I think that in spite of what is enshrined in the Act, despite any new provisions that are brought in through this Act, we have to always remember very strongly the responsibility of the public accounts committee. As one who was a member of that committee last year and suffered through some of the trials with that committee. I don't look back with a great deal of pride on what transpired. I think we have to constantly remind ourselves that we have a very strong obligation as members of that committee to make sure that the credibility of the Auditor is at all times protected, because he certainly can't do it alone. He needs the assistance of the legislators in this process.

There is one other point I want to make which pleases me a great deal. I wasn't sure when I originally read the Act, but section 93, as I understand it after consultation with people more expert than I, says: "Where the accounts of a Crown-controlled corporation are audited by other than the Auditor, the person or persons performing the audit shall—" such and such and such.

That includes, I understand, various pension funds that have been a great source of concern to me. My understanding is that in the past the Auditor has audited the public service superannuation fund and the Legislative Assembly retirement fund; but according to the new provisions he will be in charge of auditing OMER's fund and the teachers' superannuation fund. I think that is a very progressive step, I want to see an independent corroboration for those numbers; but almost more important, I want to see an independent annual check on the unfunded liabilities of those funds. We have, in the past, so heavily leaned into those funds to finance provincial deficits; when they are not actuarially sound; when there are large deficits and unfunded liabilities—depending on how you interpret it somewhere between $1.3 billion and $2 billion, depending on whether you take the optimistic or pessimistic view. It is my view that those things need an annual review.

Under the present provisions, I understand, there is a new actuarial report done every three years. I am told by certain ministry people—and I believe it was the Treasurer, but I am not exactly sure and I don't want to misquote him—that they contemplate doing that on an annual basis, even though it may require an amendment to the Pension Benefits Act.

Given the perilous economic times we are living in, given the rapid change in demographics in this province and in this country, given the very high inflation we're experiencing—all of which are unfunded liabilities on a very substantial basis—it is my opinion that those kinds of matters have to be brought under constant scrutiny; not only by the Treasurer, not only by the legislative process, but also by the Auditor. That is why I am going to continue to push, as best as I can, for an annual provision for the review of those unfunded liabilities.

In the past these funds have been a very easy source of credit to the province; I have said on other occasions, and I will continue to say, that they have probably been very substantially abused. We are going to have to pay a price for that sometime in the future, and that future is probably closer to us than we would like to admit.

I want to put this point before the Treasurer today on second reading so that he can consider it. We will have to satisfy ourselves that this is adequately dealt with in section 93. I am assured by my staff that it probably is, but I want to make sure that this other provision is dealt with and that the Auditor can give his independent assessment of these unfunded liabilities that appear no more than by way of footnote, or a note in financial statements. They appear on no consolidated balance sheet, no statement of accounts and no ledger in this province so that we can scrutinize it annually and understand it.

I think this Act, it appears to me at this point, is a progressive step. We start to get a clear overall picture on our total liability position in this province and I hope we can, through this Act and through amendments to other Acts, move towards that kind of view in the very near future.

Mr. Makarchuk: I'd also like to rise in support of the bill. I'd like to raise a few matters that are of concern to me, and they have been outlined by the previous speaker from our party.

One of the items that is of concern is section 9, subsection 2, which says the Auditor may perform on audit of Crown corporations and public corporations. I think this will probably be a matter for amendment, and that "may" should be changed to "shall." I feel that the Provincial Auditor should be required to be responsible for auditing Crown corporations as well as public corporations, and this may and should include Ontario Hydro.

One of the things that did come out in the discussions of the public accounts committee, particularly on Minaki Lodge, was the fact that some of the provincial money was spent on the lodge inefficiently, if that's the term that we use in this thing. We didn't get value for money received, and they had a private auditor examine the books. I think there's a difference in approach between how a public corporation shall function and how a private corporation shall function.

If a private individual within his own company decides to spend his money in any way he sees fit, perhaps frivolously, perhaps he may embark on some projects that may be more of an entertaining nature, shall we say, than a straight business nature, that can be charged to the business, that can be used as a business expense and a private auditor will consider that as a legitimate expense.

I do not think the same code of ethics or the same standards should apply for a public corporation. This is one of the reasons why I feel the Act should state that the Provincial Auditor "shall" audit the books of Crown corporations and public corporations, including Ontario Hydro. I think of the problems that have developed recently in the discussion stage regarding the heavy water plant, the Bruce plant and so on.

I think the air can be cleared to a great extent if we had the Provincial Auditor involved in this situation instead of an auditor who has been employed by Hydro for a great deal of time. In some cases there develops sort of what one would call a rather friendly relationship that exists between the two of them and things may just not quite be on the up and up.

It's the kind of a situation that happens in a lot of cases, not necessarily in Ontario Hydro, where things can be overlooked or it can be suggested that perhaps we can put this spending here and we can put that money there, we can hide it here; that kind of a thing. That's a thing that does happen in private business.

The other item that is of concern is the value for money received. Again, this is a matter that was raised by my colleague, and it's section 12(2)(f)(iv). I'm sure every member of the House has on many occasions received complaints from members of the public indicating that money was misspent or that money was wasted on this particular project or that project; or they felt that the province overpaid; or they come to you and say, "We're spending so much money on certain things."

There's no way we could, in the estimates of the various departments, really go over this kind of information, but it seems to me that perhaps this kind of suggestion can be forwarded to the Auditor and the Auditor himself should have the authority to ensure that we actually are getting what we're paying for.

As an example, one could possibly be buying batteries for some of the transceivers that people carry around, and paying something like $70 or $80 for batteries that are worth about 25 cents. When we get that kind of information those are the kind of things that worry me, because in many cases the people who are purchasing these things are not aware of the technology involved.

They are really not aware of what they're buying, and in many cases when the equipment is purchased the decision is made that one is going to be buying this kind of equipment and only this kind of equipment will fit in here, when in fact similar equipment can be picked up anywhere for a lot less.

I'm sure each and every member of this House has on occasion received complaints from members of the public where they felt that there has been a misspending of government funds. Yet each member cannot in any way assure himself or prove it one way or the other. He just doesn't have the resources, the time or the ability to dig into the reams and reams of paper, the invoices, the purchase order et cetera, to find out whether in fact it was well spent or not.

I would like to see the Auditor empowered to do this kind of work and have the adequate staff to ensure that the province of Ontario is not taken to the cleaners. I have the feeling right now that the province of Ontario has on many occasions been taken to the cleaners. Basically, the reason for that is that we really have not done that kind of supervision or examination of our spending in many cases.

On another item, and this is not quite in the bill but it's certainly a matter that has come out in the public accounts committee where we are concerned about provincial spending—and I'm referring to the Ronto situation—perhaps somewhere, sometime, somebody in this government or some authority, and I think the Provincial Auditor is the suitable person, should be able to look not at the government's taxation policies but at whether the government is really collecting taxes according to its own policies or its own regulations or its own legislation.

Again, at this time we have indications—in fact there was an editorial in the Toronto Star recently indicating it—that the provincial government is not collecting tax that is lawfully due to be collected. There's nobody who can sit up and say with detail or with certainty that this is going on or it is not going on. Although it's not in this bill at this time, I think it should be discussed in the public accounts committee—I will certainly raise it there—that perhaps the Auditor should be empowered, not only to examine the spending of this government but also to see whether it is collecting the taxes it decides upon within its own regulations or legislation.

I would like to hear the minister's comments on that matter.

Mr. Breithaupt: As we now proceed with a new Audit Act, I do want to congratulate the Treasurer in bringing forward this bill which has been some time in preparation. As my colleague the member for Rainy River (Mr. Reid) mentioned, I had the great pleasure of being the chairman of the public accounts committee for the six years between 1967 and 1973. Throughout that time, the deputy chairman was Mr. James Allan, the former member for Haldimand-Norfolk. I believe that between the two of us we were at all times anxious to see the Auditor given the strength and support which we believe that office deserved.

The whole procedure has changed, not only during those years but since then, as we have developed a new operation within the province of Ontario. The expectations that we all have of the Provincial Auditor have changed as well while this job has been developed. As members of the assembly are aware, while the Management Board of Cabinet deals with the review, basically, of estimates before they come to the House, the Auditor's estimates are not included in that package. We have now developed the Board of Internal Economy to deal with those estimates and the ones of this assembly, as well as the Commission on Election Contributions and Expenses and the office of the chief election officer. As a result, the first step towards independence comes when the estimates are removed from the general governmental or politically-oriented overview and brought to a board which has on it representatives of all three parties in the House.

We've seen as well a division of the duties of this office and an improvement in the whole operation, as I've mentioned before. When I first became chairman of the public accounts committee, Mr. George Spence, who had served in that office for many years, was near his retirement. His successor, Mr. Bill Groom, was a man of whom those of us who knew him thought most highly. The unfortunate death of Mr. Groom and his wife in an automobile accident was something which we found a very tragic occurrence.

And so Norman Scott came into this office, a man who had worked for many years in the operation of the audit office and is a distinguished public servant in Ontario, I might say, Mr. Speaker, with Mr. Scott being present under your gallery, he has proven to be independent, he has proven to be capable and loyal; and he certainly has proven to be an efficient auditor, one of whom the Legislature can, indeed, be proud, and one who has served the people of this province and will continue to serve the people of this province, I believe, most well.

Mr. Nixon: That's in place of a raise.

Mr. Breithaupt: Another thing which is going to happen today, which perhaps hasn't happened before, is that this bill dealing with the new Audit Act is going to be sent out of the House to standing committee; but instead of the procedures followed dealing with committees that we have known in the past, this bill is going to go to the public accounts committee. This is the first legislation that committee has had, just as other standing committees are now receiving legislation under this new approach in a way that is new to the operation of the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That's where the last Audit Act went.

Mr. Breithaupt: I wasn't aware of that; I didn't recall that. In any event, we're pleased to see the new Act. We welcome the information that the Treasurer has brought to us, and I'm sure members will be able to comment further in committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to comment on Bill 43? If not, the hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I just want to comment briefly. I think the questions which have been raised will be better answered in committee. I would certainly associate myself with the remarks of the member for Kitchener and his comments about the three auditors with whom we have both served—Messrs. Spence, Groom and Scott. Each has served the province in his own way, and very well indeed. I join in his tribute to those gentlemen.

This is a progressive piece of legislation. I was joking when I said to my friend from Rainy River that the 1971 move was a rather substantial move. The 1971 Audit Act, which I had the privilege of taking through the House, took us out of the dark and misty era of pre-audit and post-audit. Mr. McIntyre, who is also under the gallery, was the controller of accounts at that time. He was very much associated with that Act.

Mr. Nixon: Remember how your predecessors used to defend pre-audit?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: My friend from Kitchener made mention of a vice-chairman of the committee.

Mr. Breithaupt: I think you were chairman of that committee.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I was chairman of the public accounts committee, as was the former member for Northumberland-Durham, but the member for Kitchener made mention of a vice-chairman of the committee. On more than one occasion, he thought we had made a dreadful mistake by moving from pre-audit to post-audit.

Mr. Nixon: You really miss him.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I will no doubt hear from him after saying that; I'll leave it at that.

At any rate, I think it is a progressive piece of legislation, a piece of legislation which moves us forward. Although I will put on my curriculum vitae that I'm responsible for the Audit Act of 1977, it is fair to say that its drafting and much of what goes into it has come from the "independent" Auditor of this province, Mr. Scott, as you will learn from discussions with him when the bill does go to public accounts.

It is really a more progressive piece of legislation in several instances than that which has been adopted by Ottawa and passed by the Parliament of Canada. I think it puts us in most areas, slightly ahead in terms of being progressive. I'm trying to avoid the word "left."

Mr. Breithaupt: Progressively conservative.

Mr. Foulds: For you only, progressive is left.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The legislation depends completely, of course, on the occupant of the job. Whatever we may pass in this House, not to in any way take away from the prerogatives of the House or of this Legislature, it will be, in my judgement, how well or otherwise the Auditor interprets what words we give him to work with that will be the acid test of the new Act.

[4:00]

I could perhaps correct a couple of errors or omissions. The member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson) knows full well—we went through this during consideration of my estimates the other night—that the actuarial liabilities are shown on the province's balance sheet and on the balance sheets of OMERS, public service and other boards. Whether they are done every year, the Pension Benefits Act calls for them to be done every three years and it will be an individual decision of each of those boards as to whether it will be done more often than that. But that information is there and has been for some time.

I would say to my friend from Sudbury that the Provincial Auditor tells me that Mr. McInnes had based his comments on pre-audit. Well he is only six years out of date. He subsequently apologized to the Auditor for his comments. I haven't seen the report. I look forward to seeing it in committee, but I guess it is a little out of date.

I do want to thank members who have spoken for their support of the bill, and I look forward to it being looked at in some detail in the public accounts committee.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for standing public accounts committee.

PUBLIC VEHICLES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 34, An Act to amend the Public Vehicles Act.

Mr. Breithaupt: Does the minister have any particular comments to make, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I made some brief comments at the time of the introduction of this bill. It is quite a simple, straightforward bill, the purpose of which is to exempt dual-purpose vehicles—known more commonly to us, I guess, as vans—while used as car pool or van pool vehicles. It is our proposal in this bill to exempt these vehicles from the regulations of the Public Vehicles Act. The purpose of this is to remove a problem that exists to some degree at the present time for individuals and companies that wish to use this type of vehicle for transportation of commuters to and from their employment on either a co-operative or individual basis. The purpose really is to remove any impediment to or restriction of the use of this type of transportation, because we feel it is very advisable to encourage the use of car pools and the use of this fairly new vehicle, the small van, of which we see so many now, for this type of transportation. It will lead to energy conservation and to a reduction in the number of vehicles on our public highway system. Briefly, that is the background to this bill that I have introduced, which will assist in encouraging the use of this type of vehicle.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I would concur with the aim of this bill. This is something that has caught on to some extent in our area, where the Chrysler Corporation has started car pools with its new modern vans and is using them throughout Detroit and in the Windsor area. I think there are about 12 in the Windsor area, and some of them are being used already as far as Kingsville, which is about a 30-mile drive each way. There was a write-up in the local paper not long ago which reported that many of the people found a new enjoyment in going to work because a driver was taking on the responsibility and it gave them a chance to relax while they were getting to work. It seems to be an excellent idea, and I certainly would agree with the principle of the bill. I am sure the member for Wentworth North (Mr. Cunningham) will have something more to say on it, but I just wanted to say that in my own area, an automobile centre, we feel very good that a bill like this is here today before us.

Mr. Philip: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of the principle of the bill. It seems reasonable to exempt car and van pools, provided that adequate safeguards are taken and that we are not opening the doors for those who would violate the PCV Act.

The criteria seem reasonable: a seating capacity of not more than 12 persons, none of whom pay more than on a weekly basis; not used by more than one driver nor more than one trip; and the owner does not own more than one vehicle, unless he is an employer.

The first criterion does raise some questions with me. It is a question that I raised with the minister prior to discussing this in the House. Under the Highway Traffic Act, the motor vehicle is defined as including an automobile, motorcycle and any other vehicle propelled or driven otherwise than by muscular power; but does not include the cars of electric or steam railways, or other motor vehicles running only on rails; or a motorized snow vehicle, a motor-assisted bicycle, traction engine, farm tractor, self-propelled implement of husbandry or road-building machine within the meaning of this Act.

This raises the question that, as we see municipalities such as Etobicoke and North York, in terms of their school buses, moving toward very stringent enforcement when it comes to offering tenders to private operators of small vehicles like this, sometimes of 12 seats or less, for transporting children who have learning disabilities or other children that have special needs from one school to another, when these people are enforcing fairly rigid standards on their tenders, what kind of standards can we expect on these vehicles that will be used for transporting as many as 12 people.

The question I would ask of the minister is: can we be assured that at least people who are driving in these vehicles will be required to wear seatbelts in the same way that they are in any other motor vehicle as defined in the Act?

In supporting the bill, I must also express my concern at the introduction of what I would describe as piecemeal legislation in the absence of any identifiable people-transportation policy in this province. I would like to know where the bill fits into the overall people transportation gestalt or picture?

Mr. Speaker, the kind of chaos we are experiencing in the transportation of goods is quickly on the horizon in the area of the transportation of people. We needn't go into the whole problem that has been caused lately with the Greyhound-Gray Coach affair, but it is merely a symbol of the kind of chaos that we could have forecast, and is the same kind of forecast that we could have made—and that we are making—about the transportation of goods.

As a result of the Select Committee on the Highway Transportation of Goods, we can now see some concrete policy and policy directions coming from the minister. In particular we were very happy to see the policy direction in terms of reciprocity. The minister informs me that other bills and policy thrusts will be evident later in this session.

When I see bills like this under consideration, I cannot help but feel perhaps we may need a select committee on people transportation to at least give us some kind of direction as to where we are going with this bill and with other bills, particularly with Bill 35 which we will be looking at in a minute.

I wonder also where we go in a very specific way after this bill. The amount of experiments that are documented at places like the transportation centre in Knoxville have shown that car pooling can be a very effective method of saving both energy and of transporting people, and that it has worked in a number of places in the United States. I would wonder where we go after this bill has passed.

Does the minister intend to back it up with a promotion of any particular model which may have been successful elsewhere? If so, which model can we expect, and what kind of commitment can we expect from the government? It's not just good enough to pass this kind of bill and leave it.

One of the previous speakers talked about the success of the Chrysler experiment and my question would be, what is the minister going to do to encourage other types of experiments and to put together the kind of evidence that we have coming out of the States and other places as to the way in which these kinds of car pooling systems can be used to reduce traffic and to reduce energy costs.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that we are in agreement with the bill. We would hope that the minister might care to address himself to some of those questions.

Mr. Cunningham: I, too, rise in support of the passage of Bill 34, the intent of which I gather is to exempt the operators of car pool vehicles from provisions specified under the PCV Act.

We in the Liberal Party welcome the initiative taken by government in recognition of both the efforts by corporate entities and as well the collective efforts, I suppose, by individual commuters to minimize the amount of traffic on public roadways during peak periods.

We further lend our support to the suggestion by government that promotional information be released possibly by the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Transportation and Communications with a view to encouraging higher vehicle occupancy rates. The steps we take to deal with the present energy shortage that I know the minister is aware of, will directly, I think, affect our lives and those of future generations.

As a means of providing transportation in urban areas, the automobile certainly has its drawbacks. Most obvious are the demands on limited urban space and the unwanted side effects of noise, pollution and injury. Both city and suburban dwellers however, are very heavily dependent on the private automobile and beyond a certain point conventional public transport fails to provide a practical substitute.

The solution or urban transportation problems, including that of energy conservation, will depend heavily on the public's willingness to participate in seemingly minor efficiencies such as car pooling, the wider implications of these measures being increased public awareness of the need for energy conservation.

Transportation investment alone has not helped resolve the problems of urban congestion, however, and there is strong evidence to suggest that consumer education may be the first step in making the shift from automobile transportation to rapid transit. The cost of building, maintaining and operating transit facilities are growing more rapidly than available financial resources in most Canadian cities.

Serious consideration should be given, I would think, to an increased role for the commuter in planning and executing certain transit objectives in providing an acceptable level of service.

We recognize the problems inherent in the exemption of car pool vehicles from the licensing requirements specified under the Act, particularly those of liability insurance and vehicle safety standards. The government admits that effective enforcement of such requirements would be difficult and to that end we concur. These problems may be offset however, by an appeal to voluntary adherence to certain common sense precautions provided in the promotional material.

I must associate my remarks with those of the member for Etobicoke, I believe, as they relate to the absence of a policy though, Mr. Speaker. In the past I would say that we have from time to time communicated in this House our collective concern as opposition members about the absence of not only a policy as it relates to the transportation of goods, but also the transportation of people. Certainly the Minister of Transportation and Communications, representing a largely urban riding and one that I suppose has a great constituency of commuters is well aware of the difficulties and traffic congestion on the QEW, in and out of Toronto, and other highways. To that end I think he should be addressing himself not only to a more efficient system of rapid transit, but possibly conveying his ideas and his government's ideas to the Ontario Highway Transport Board to effect and recognize the changing nature of transportation in the province of Ontario.

It wasn't that long ago that I appeared at the Ontario Highway Transport Board—in fact the only occasion I have done so—on behalf of the owner and operator of such a vehicle, a 12-passenger bus. It was his intention to make application to the Highway Transport Board to allow him to carry passengers periodically from the town of Dundas to the city of Toronto for various cultural and sports events. The fact that the individual had to make an application and participate in the intervention process and argue public necessity convenience when obviously his intent was to save his clients and save himself from bringing a large bus down to the city of Toronto indicates in part, I suppose, the lack of policy as it relates to the transportation of people.

In short, I commend the minister for bringing the legislation in and I support it.

Mr. Young: In rising to support the general principle of this bill I would express a couple of concerns; one in connection with the safety of the vehicle. I take it from conversation with the minister that this vehicle will have to conform with all the safety standards set up by the federal government. I hope there is no way that this can be circumvented in the way that the old school buses used to be constructed. That is, a person might buy a chassis and then build a bit of a tin roof over the top of it, put some seats in and he has a vehicle. I take it from the definition given us and by the legislation before us that that just can't happen, that these would have to conform and therefore would be vehicles in which there would be a real safety factor built in.

The matter of seatbelts has already been raised by my colleague. I would like to ask the minister, too, whether or not the mini-buses that have been developed in this province recently would fit in there. I have ridden in those buses but I am not sure how many people they seat. It seems to me that 12-passenger limitation might well fit within these, although I suspect they might be just a bit too expensive for the kind of transportation envisaged here. Although if they are used by different drivers and used for different shifts in a plant I can see that the mini-bus as developed by Ontario might well fit into the pattern here and might provide an outlet for this kind of a vehicle.

Those are the only observations I want to make, Mr. Speaker. I think that all in all if we can get this kind of co-operative endeavour on our highways and cut down on the traffic there then we are getting some place, not only in the cutting down of the number of vehicles on the highway but in conservation of energy in this province.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to participate in this debate? If not, the hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to respond to the points that have been raised by the members opposite. The vehicle that we are dealing with here today, the commonly known van, I believe falls into the category of a utility vehicle. This vehicle, like all other motor vehicles manufactured or imported into Canada, comes under the design criteria and specifications of the Canada Motor Vehicle Safety Act, the federal legislation.

It is my understanding that of course the vehicle has to meet the specifications of that Act, has to have the normal safety and other equipment that would be required on any other vehicle. If this utility vehicle is purchased as a mini-bus, with the seating arrangement to handle eight or 10 or 12 passengers, then it is my understanding that seatbelts must be installed for all seats.

There is one possible loophole, though, in that it may be from time to time that a person would buy a van type vehicle—although I doubt if this would happen very often—with only the driver and passenger seats in the front and then add seats in the back of the vehicle; in this way the additional seats would not be required to have seatbelts. This is something we will have to monitor. I don't know whether we would have the jurisdiction to require seatbelts in a case like that; this is an after-manufacture modification. But certainly I wish to assure the member that I have questioned this fact that the utility vehicle that will normally be bought for this purpose with the seats installed will have the seatbelts there.

The hon. member for Essex North mentioned the Chrysler experiment at the present time. This we are aware of and this is the type of use that we want to encourage. Once we have this legislation in effect we propose to plan a demonstration pooling project within our own ministry, out of the Downsview office. We have a great number of employees coming to that particular location and quite a number coming from out in the more rural areas that don't necessarily have good public transportation. We haven't worked out exact details on that yet but we propose to have a demonstration project there.

We propose also to do some publicity advising the public of this legislation, because there has been some concern voiced. Some individuals have been operating this type of service for the last couple of years not knowing whether they were legal or not and there have been objections raised by public bus companies to people using these vans. Not so long ago my ministry officials were attempting to charge people doing just this because they were in conflict with the Public Vehicles Act. I might say this bill was introduced last spring and did not get passed, unfortunately, or we could have had it into use sooner.

Mr. Foulds: Yes, too bad the Premier called the election.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Something came along there about the last weeks of April, just about the time that I was going to get the bill up for debate that delayed it a few months unfortunately.

Mr. Foulds: Too bad that election was called. It wasn't necessary; the House could have been sitting and we would have had this stuff.

Hon. Mr. Snow: We intend to advise the public that the legal impediment to using this type of service has been removed and we intend to encourage it. We will also, to the degree possible, be meeting with large employers to encourage them to encourage this type of commuter service to their place of employment.

Mr. Foulds: Is this because dial-a-bus has failed?

Mr. Speaker: Questions are not permitted on second reading.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I can't help it but that interjection on the type of operation we are considering here shows how much the hon. member knows about public transit when he compares dial-a-bus to this type of regular commuter vehicle.

There are changing needs with regard to public transportation. We have made considerable advances over the past 10 years. The hon. member for Wentworth North referred to my own riding of Oakville. I don't think there's a riding anywhere in Ontario that is more involved with the needs of commuters. I look back to May 1967 when the first GO Transit train pulled out of Oakville and I take a look at the statistics today indicating a continuing increase in the number of passengers carried by GO Transit, both by rail and bus. We're continuing to expand that service.

I also look at the great improvements that have been made in communities such as Oakville, Burlington, Brampton, and Mississauga in municipal public transit systems—greatly assisted, I might say, by the policies of this government. Those on the opposite side seem to keep saying that we have no policy in the movement of people.

Mr. Foulds: Toronto and Ontario aren't synonymous. That was certainly a slip of the tongue.

Hon. Mr. Snow: It's very interesting travelling around and meeting people from other jurisdictions. No matter where I go and meet municipal or federal or state representatives in the United States or in other provinces, when I say I'm from Toronto or from Ontario, the first thing you hear from them is what a great transit system we have in Toronto—

Mr. Cunningham: Did they ask about UTDC?

Mr. Foulds: What are you doing for communities in the north?

Hon. Mr. Snow: —and how great they think the GO Transit system is. The GO Transit system we operate here in the Toronto area is well known around the world.

Mr. Cunningham: Did they ask about UTDC?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I have nothing to apologize for on behalf of UTDC at all. I think you will be pleasantly surprised—

Mr. Speaker: That is hardly a principle of this bill.

Mr. Cunningham: I will be amazed.

Hon. Mr. Snow: You will be pleasantly surprised in a very few weeks when you see the new UTDC light rapid transit vehicles on the streets of Toronto.

I'm planning at this time to introduce another bill before the end of this session, an amendment to the Public Vehicles Act, dealing with policy matters. At that time, I expect I will be making a statement at some length on passenger policy as it relates to the busing industry.

I know we've all ridden in these types of vehicles from time to time. Many of the motels and hotels use them as courtesy vehicles from airports in many communities now. Some are more comfortable than others. I know I had the necessity to ride in one just last week—

Mr. Foulds: What happened to your limousine?

Hon. Mr. Snow: —12-passenger vehicle. I just forget the make of it at this time. It was most comfortable and rode well. It was roomy and an ideal vehicle for this type of use. I thank the hon. members for their support for the second reading of this bill.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I didn't feel it was necessary to go to committee but if the hon. members do, it will be committee of the whole House then.

[4:30]

AIRPORTS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 35, An Act to amend the Airports Act.

Mr. Cunningham: We on this side will be supporting this legislation. Certainly during the next election, I hope that it is remembered how co-operative we are.

Mr. Swart: It will be by the public.

Mr. Cunningham: I see in the bill that it enables the province to co-operate with the federal government, a municipality, a corporation or an individual with regard to the establishment of airports. I think that makes sense, although I question the necessity to establish any more airports in the province at this time. I'm wondering if the minister would indicate to me just what airports he's contemplating, specifically—possibly Mount Hope in my area, or Pickering—and where these airports are being contemplated and why at this time, if that is the intention of this legislation.

Mr. Philip: We have some apprehensions about what we consider to be rather large blanket, enabling legislation, which this is. We can see certain influential people in certain communities lobbying for airports on grounds that the provincial government will now pick up a larger share of the cost. I think that this bill should go into committee to answer some questions about where the government is going, in terms of this kind of people transportation mode. A number of our members have a number of specific questions concerning the powers that the government is assigning to itself with this bill and what it intends to do with them.

While we can find nothing specific in the bill that we wish to oppose, we would like it to go to committee so that the minister might be able to answer some questions.

Ms. Bryden: This amendment to the Airports Act appears to broaden the present Act in several senses. It includes authorizing the government to undertake construction of airports, as opposed to simply acquiring, leasing, operating, maintaining, extending, and so on. I think this is a fairly significant change and could indicate a fairly significant policy plan to get into the airport business on a much wider scale, but we can't tell from this bill and therefore we hope that in committee we will get more information as to why this particular extension is required.

It also authorizes the government to set apart a part of an airport for a limited use. The intent of that section is not very clear.

It also allows the government to lease part of an airport for a limited use. I'm wondering whether this is tied to the proposal to set up a STOL network operating out of Toronto Island Airport. I wonder, too, whether the government is contemplating leasing a part of that airport for a STOL network, leasing it from the federal government which is the present owner—I think it's the present owner, unless it's the Harbour Commission.

These are some of the questions that we would like to know about. What are the plans in regard to this?

In addition, the bill allows for the extension of the subsidization power of the government, not just to subsidize the acquisition of airports and their extension and operation and maintenance, but to subsidize any matters in an agreement about airports. Again, we would like to know the intent of this particular broadening of the words. What kind of additional subsidies not already provided for in the present airports legislation are contemplated?

Particularly, I noticed that under the previous Act as well as under this subsidization of corporations is allowed. We always seem ready to provide a welfare state for corporations but when it comes to providing money for handicapped persons to allow them to become mobile or to allow them to be able to take jobs, or children with learning disabilities, we can't seem to find the money. But this bill certainly allows for the government to subsidize private corporations. Presumably it could subsidize private air carriers, and yet the bill does not tell us what the plans of the government are in this sense.

If the purse-strings are going to be opened for these kinds of handouts to private industry, we would like to have an opportunity for such subsidies to be brought before the Legislature, subsidy by subsidy, so that we could vote on each one individually rather than just a lump sum being put in the estimates for the ministry which could be used for subsidization for any group that is contemplated in the legislation.

We think there is a need for subsidization of municipally operated airports, particularly in the north country where air transportation is very vital to some communities there, but we want to know what other kinds of subsidies are contemplated in this bill.

As my colleague mentioned, we feel that this sort of piecemeal legislation that is being brought in—the previous bill, this bill and the one on TATO—indicates a piecemeal approach to our transportation policy. We have never had an overall transportation policy from this government which indicates how the various modes fit into each other and what modes we think we should put stress on when we start to think about energy conservation and the ecological effects of transportation or whether trips of less than 500 miles in southern Ontario should be in the air at all, when you consider the amount of energy that aircraft use as well as the noise factor of airports and other ecological disadvantages.

We're still looking for an overall transportation policy rather than amendments to pieces of legislation. I hope that the minister will not think that these pieces of legislation are the answer to the transportation policy which we need for both northern and southern Ontario and which should be adapted to the needs of those regions.

One important reason for this going to committee is that if the development of a STOL network is contemplated under this legislation, it would give us an opportunity to find out from the minister something more about the government's plans in this area. Up until now, there has been no statement from the government on its policy for a STOL network. It has produced a book which contained no specific recommendations. It has participated in the intergovernmental staff forum of various levels of government to look at the future uses of the Toronto Island Airport, which included the possibility of a STOL network. But, up until now, the government has not revealed its position at all on the possibility of a STOL network for southern Ontario. Nor has it really studied the alternatives to a STOL network for southern Ontario, although various alternatives are developing, such as in the TATO area, which we will be dealing with later.

Certainly one thing that people will want to know, if a STOL network is considered under this legislation, is how much will be required to subsidize it, both in terms of new airport facilities which will be needed in southern Ontario and in terms of subsidies for the carriers. I think we want to know whether these subsidies are being contemplated simply perhaps to save a few minutes for businessmen and senior civil servants travelling between cities in southern Ontario or whether that sort of money should be reserved for some of the more urgent needs of our province which are being denied at the present time. I mentioned money for children with learning disabilities and for increasing our very low public assistance rates to people who are unable to work.

I think we also want to know from the minister if his ministry is considering the ecological costs of each project that it plans to subsidize or fund under this bill. We cannot ignore the effects of transportation on our environment.

One thing that also disturbs me in the bill is the provision for leasing for periods longer than 21 years. It seems to me that 21 years should be the limit of any lease arrangement. I wonder why that provision is put in. Is there any good reason for contemplating a lease of over 21 years?

In conclusion, I would say I hope the minister will give us a statement on what his government's plans are in regard to air transportation for both northern and southern Ontario and, particularly, respond to some of the concerns that were expressed about the STOL possibilities in the long series of public hearings which were held in the Toronto area by this intergovernmental staff forum on the Toronto Island airport. These hearings indicated there is great public concern over the results of a possible STOL network for southern Ontario. I think the consensus of those hearings was that Toronto Island airport should be left to its present uses and that a STOL network was not really needed in southern Ontario.

It may be the answer to some of the problems of northern Ontario. The Dash 7 plane may be a useful plane for certain uses in this province and in this country, but the consensus of those hearings, I think, was that it was not the answer to southern Ontario's transportation problems. At any rate, these are some of the questions we would hope the minister would deal with when the bill is in committee.

Mr. Foulds: There are a number of points I would like to raise on the second reading debate on principle because I too have some sense of unease about the bill. As I look at the legislation that is in front of us and see the legislation that it is basically replacing—because in effect the minister is gutting the Airports Act of 1971 and replacing it with this one—the question that leaps immediately to mind is why is this trip necessary? Why is this Act necessary at all? It would appear to a layman like myself—I am not a lawyer and I am not a transportation expert—on reading the original Act that was passed in 1970 that that would be sufficient for the government's present purposes.

It strikes me that the provincial government may very well be getting into the airport business in a wholesale way. That is probably necessary in certain sections of the north, particularly for towns such as Manitouwadge, Geraldton and so on where the federal government has shamelessly abdicated its responsibility to provide those people with adequate plane service. If that is the purpose of the province taking an initiative, then I am wholeheartedly in support of it. However, the minister has failed to outline that to us on second reading and I think that he could understand why our questions arise.

Hon. Mr. Snow: With every respect, I didn't get a chance. The member for Wentworth North was on his feet before I got a chance to make my opening remarks.

Mr. Foulds: That obviously was an error in judgement on the part of the Chair in failing to see that the minister was assisted to his feet quickly enough so that he could make his opening remarks.

If I recall the genealogy of the legislation, it is rather significant that the provincial government didn't really think it necessary to get into the business of legislating with regard to airports until 1970. I wouldn't be surprised if that didn't have something to do with the push of a former cabinet minister of the Ontario government who is now in the federal House—one Allan Lawrence, who was briefly the minister of northern affairs—and the public relations program that the Ontario government conducted in 1969-70 having to do with what it called its highways-in-the-sky program.

Only within the last two or three years has that program begun to get off the ground, if I may mash or mix a metaphor. I would certainly like to know, in some detail, what benefit the extension of the legislation, as it is outlined, will add to that program. Because I don't really see that as being necessary from the original Act.

It would also seem to me that the province is in some subtle and fundamentally constitutional way edging itself towards some kind of confrontation with the federal government. It would appear that both jurisdictions will be getting into the business of air transport. Obviously, up until 1970 this province did not see that as being necessary. As I say, the federal government does seem to have abdicated its responsibility in providing that kind of service in the northern part of this province, and hopefully this will be the Act that the government will use to develop that program.

The important question that the minister must answer for me when we get to committee stage is whether section 5 of the old Act still applies. I assume that it does; I think it is the only section of the old Act that is still intact. I would certainly want a clear and unequivocal statement to that effect.

Because it is worrying that in the present Act it would appear that the minister has much wider powers though the Lieutenant Governor in Council to dole out the patronage. It has been, unfortunately, the history of the precursor of this ministry—the Ministry of Highways—that it was fondly known around the province in many towns, communities and hamlets, as the ministry of patronage. I would certainly hate to see that happen under the present incumbent and in its present incarnation.

Mr. Nixon: That was back in the 1930s.

Mr. Foulds: I would certainly hate to see an extension of that, if the government is getting into the airport business.

I would also certainly like far clearer indication of the kinds of relationships that the minister sees between government and the private sector with regard to leasing and responsibilities there. The arrangements that the present minister's former ministry, Government Services, had in some of its leaseback arrangements haven't been all that happy and successful.

Hon. Mr. Snow: These leases go the other way.

Mr. Foulds: If he bungled it in one ministry going one way, it's perfectly conceivable that he would bungle it in this ministry going the other way. I would certainly like some iron-clad assurances in that regard.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Nothing was bungled.

Mr. Foulds: Finally, I think that our party reserves the right to vote against the bill on third reading if we do not get satisfactory explanations or amendments in committee stage. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to this bill? If not, the hon. minister.

Mr. Cunningham: We're going to give you double time.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I regret that I did not get an opportunity, and I didn't want to interrupt the hon. member for Wentworth North when he got started in his remarks. I think I could have clarified a lot of the points if I'd have had a moment before second reading.

The hon. member for Wentworth North says that in his mind there is no need for additional airports in Ontario. I've just got to say that's the greatest example of a transportation critic in the Liberal Party not knowing what he's talking about that I—

Mr. Cunningham: You build airports all over the place.

Hon. Mr. Snow: —that I've ever seen. Because, and I'm sure if the Speaker himself, the hon. member for Lake Nipigon (Mr. Stokes), and my colleague, the hon. member for Cochrane North (Mr. Brunelle), were here that they and other northern members would agree on the importance of this policy of the government, that was implemented back in the late 1960s. I think the first Act was passed about 1968, if I recall. The member for Port Arthur said 1970. I recall this Act coming in the year after I was elected in 1968.

Since that time, great improvements have been made in transportation in northern Ontario. I well remember that Act because when the Act was first drafted, I believe it was called the Northern Ontario Airport Development Act. I had something to do at that time with having it changed to the Ontario Airport Development Act or just the Airport Development Act.

In those past eight to 10 years, great improvements have been made in northern Ontario. First might I say that the policy of the government and the ministry is to construct and assist in the construction of airports in northern Ontario. That was the policy up until about a year ago.

About a year ago it was decided that if there was a good cause, for industrial purposes or for transportation purposes, that the Act or the policy could be expanded to assist with development of municipal airports in eastern Ontario as well. The policy of the government at this time is not to involve itself financially either capital-wise or maintenance-wise of any airport in southern Ontario.

In those past 10 years there has been quite a number of airports. I guess most are in the ridings of the members for Cochrane North, Lake Nipigon, and Kenora (Mr. Bernier). I have visited quite a number of those airports myself. We have several under construction right now. I happened to open the one in Fort Hope last year and visited Red Lake—another one that we built. We have also constructed airports at Attawapiskat, Round Lake, Big Trout Lake, Sandy Lake, Fort Severn, Fort Albany, Moosonee, Kashechewan.

Mr. Cunningham: Did you take your fishing rod?

Hon. Mr. Snow: About 10, I think it is, of those remote airports have been developed in northern Ontario. Those were built totally by the ministry and maintained totally by the ministry using native help from the reserves.

When the airport is constructed, it's basically constructed by the natives with the equipment that we send in. When the airport is completed, we employ two natives, one as airport manager and one as assistant airport manager, to operate that equipment and maintain the airport.

Some of these are more remote than others. Pickle Lake is another one of our airports. It's not a remote airport; there's a road to Pickle Lake, but it's still pretty necessary to have an airport there. In fact this year we're paving that airport to upgrade the facility. When we have the paving contractor in the area doing the road, we're putting a coat of asphalt on the runway.

About 10 or 12 of those airports have been built—we have been building one or two per year—and although my ministry is still responsible for building and maintaining them, the Minister of Northern Affairs is working with the establishment of the priorities.

The hon. member for Wentworth North says we don't need any more airports. I have a list of agreements from Treaty No. 9 and Treaty No. 3 native communities, for 12 more airstrips to be developed at their communities. That is under the remote airport program, which is funded 100 per cent provincially. In addition to that, my predecessors established a policy of assisting municipalities in the construction of municipal airports. Right now there is one going in at Hornepayne and one at Hearst is in the planning.

Mr. Foulds: See how easy it is, Rene? If he doesn't know you tell him. You get it sooner.

Hon. Mr. Snow: There is one at Geraldton under construction. We built one at Fort Frances and at Atikokan.

Mr. Cunningham: How about Hudson?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't believe Hudson has one. I think Sioux Lookout has. These are municipal airports where the ministry has, in the previous legislation, had the authority to subsidize municipalities to assist in the construction of airports.

Cochrane is another one. This last year we gave a subsidy to Iroquois Falls, I believe it was, for the paving of their municipal airport. Kirkland Lake was another municipal airport that was constructed.

Up until this time, most of those airports are connected with the norOntair system. Not all, but most. Geraldton, when it is completed, will be a larger airport than we normally build. We are putting in a 5,000-foot runway there to allow the Speaker to get up and down into his riding.

Mr. Foulds: It's still 200 miles away.

Hon. Mr. Snow: It will also serve as a water bomber base for Natural Resources. That is why instead of a 3,000- or 3,500-foot runway we have gone to 5,000 feet, I believe.

We are negotiating with the federal government to take over the airport at Armstrong. It was going to abandon it and let it go to pot. I say, when we are building new airports why let an existing one go to pot? So we are negotiating now to take over that airport so that it can be maintained. It has a decent runway and with a little maintenance it can be used as another air base for Natural Resources. My colleague the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) also has some interest in maintaining an airport at Armstrong for health purposes—getting people out to Thunder Bay hospitals and so on. That is our municipal airport program.

One of the main reasons for this bill is that many of these municipalities, although they have our subsidy to help build the airport and to help make improvements to it, or to put in a small terminal ramp area, did not get any money for maintenance. The municipalities—Wawa is another one—have approached the ministry asking for some assistance for maintenance in maintaining the airport. I have no authority under the legislation to give a subsidy for maintenance. According to the legislative counsel and the Provincial Auditor we cannot do so.

I announced earlier this year a program under which we were going to give subsidies for maintenance of municipal airports. There are two levels: up to $10,000 a year subsidy for municipal airports where there is no scheduled service; and up to $25,000 a year for municipal airports where there is a scheduled service, which are basically the ones that serve norOntair or some of the other smaller scheduled operators.

That is the major purpose of this bill, to allow the ministry to pay a subsidy to the municipality to maintain the airport, an integral part of its transportation system, the same as we pay the municipality a subsidy to maintain its roads system.

The second main purpose of the bill is that we have certain situations on ministry airports. In the municipal airport, the airport is owned by the municipality. For instance Pickle Lake is a ministry owned airport. Perhaps there are other similar ones where a private operator will want to establish some facility. Perhaps a small flying service, a charter operator, or bush operator, will want to build a small hangar to maintain his aircraft and to operate out of, and the obvious place to put a hangar for an airplane is on an airport. We own the land. Under the present bill all these things weren't foreseen by my predecessors and there's no provision for us to lease airport land to an operator.

If you go out to Malton airport you'll see Field Aviation, Sky Charter, Skyport, Leavens Brothers, Millard Air, even Air Canada, CP Air—all of their hangars are built on federal government airport land, land that those operators have leased from Transport Canada. The intention of the lease provision in this bill is to allow us, for instance in a municipi-pality like Pickle Lake, to lease an acre of land to an operator in the area either to build a hangar or put in fuelling facilities, if there are none there, to sell fuel to serve the community. Of course, if there was need, it would also provide for leasing of land for a restaurant or some other facility to serve the public on the airport.

The hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine posed many questions. The lease—I think I have explained that. About the STOL island airport, I assure the hon. member that as far as the government of Ontario is concerned we do not have any plans to get into the operation of any air service in southern Ontario.

Since the meeting with the island airport committee last May, when Mr. Lang and myself attended the windup of their public hearings, I have not heard anything further from Mr. Lang. He has said that he wanted time to study and so on. I have not had any conversations with him pertaining to Toronto Island Airport or what his plans may be. But I assure you that we as the Ontario government have no plans to get financially or otherwise involved in the implementation of a STOL service in southern Ontario.

In fact our airport policy does not allow us, at this time at least, to make any grants for either construction or maintenance of an airport in southern Ontario. That's government policy at this time. We have no intent under this Act to get involved in the subsidy of any air operation. We do subsidize, through the Ministry of Northern Affairs and through the Ontario Northland transportation system, the norOntair air service. Here the contracts are let for the operating of seven Twin Otter aircraft serving some 16 communities. This will be expanded, I believe, in the next year to probably 18 or 20 communities that will be served with those aircraft, and there is a subsidy of $1 million a year or so. At least there's about $1 million, as I recall, shortfall of revenue to operating costs.

But the way norOntair has grown there are some routes of the norOntair service that are now almost to the break-even point over the past year. The member was critical for our "piecemeal" approach in bringing in three different bills. I don't know how I can amend three different Acts without bringing in three different bills. If she can tell me I'll be happy to put them all together.

The member referred to a study of other types of transportation. As I announced in this House almost two years ago now, we entered into an agreement with the federal Minister of Transport for the federal-provincial central Ontario passenger transportation study. This has been under way for close to two years now; it was supposed to be completed at the end of December of this year. The most recent report I have, mainly from the federal parties that are involved in it, is that the report will probably not be ready until about the end of the first quarter of 1978.

That study is looking at all types of passenger transportation in southern Ontario—air, rail, bus, automobile and so on. There is a considerable amount of work going on and needless to say, we're very interested. We think the route—and this has nothing to do with this bill—within Canada that has the most possibilities of supplying a good rail transportation service, where there is high density and short distances, is the Toronto-to-Windsor segment of the Quebec City-to-Windsor corridor.

Mr. Davidson: With a stop in Cambridge.

Hon. Mr. Snow: As I'm sure all hon. members know, we have been waiting for some years now, periodically hearing federal announcements about upgrading rail service and calling for tenders for trains, which was about a year ago now and still no contract has been awarded; nor has there been any announcement of any work being done on that corridor. If there's any corridor in Canada that could support an improved rail service, that's the one.

I share to some degree the frustrations of some of the members opposite in seeing improved rail transportation brought about.

I think I have answered most of the questions of the hon. member for Port Arthur. He was concerned about why we need this Act. There are two main reasons: to allow us to lease land and to allow us to pay maintenance subsidies.

If all of the hon. members' questions aren't answered and they still want to go to committee, we'll go to committee.

Mr. Foulds: Yes, there are just one or two questions.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

TORONTO AREA TRANSIT OPERATING AUTHORITY AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 44, An Act to amend the Toronto Area Transit Operating Authority Act.

Hon. Mr. Snow: This bill is very self-explanatory, Mr. Speaker. When the Toronto Area Transit Operating Authority was established a number of years ago, at that time it was made up of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and the regional municipalities of Peel and York. In addition to that, at that time the bill provided for the regional chairmen from Halton and Hamilton-Wentworth to sit on the board in an advisory, non-voting capacity. At that time, the region of Durham did not wish to be a part of the TATO A organization.

Since that time, of course, the TATO A operations of GO Transit bus and rail have expanded considerably. The advice and participation of the regional chairmen from Hamilton-Wentworth and from Halton have been most helpful. All three of these regional municipalities have passed resolutions and forwarded them to me asking that their representatives become full members on the board of TATO A, and this Act implements those requests.

There are some other minor matters involved. One is that it legalizes something that has been going on anyway for some period of time, and that is the carriage of parcel freight on the buses that TATO A operates. As hon. members may or may not be aware, many of the TATO A bus routes were former Gray Coach routes. Those routes supply a parcel express service to the communities they go through. TATO A has maintained to supply this parcel express service that a bus normally supplies. But it has been brought to our attention that the Act doesn't specifically provide for TATO A to carry parcel freight. That's covered in this bill.

Mr. Cunningham: I appreciate the house-keeping nature of the bill. As I see it, it expands TATO A's area over Durham, which I gather now from the minister's remarks is pleased to participate in TATO A. As well, he will get advice, I suppose, from the regional chairmen of Halton and Hamilton-Wentworth. My only concern there is that there is a lack of political accountability by those individuals and the addition by an appointment by the Lieutenant Governor in Council certainly won't assist in the accountability aspect of the advisory board here. But that's not the function of this particular piece of legislation.

I'd like to indicate to the minister that I'm concerned about section 4 of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Snow: In due respect, those regional chairmen are now elected by their regional councils.

Mr. Cunningham: That in no way makes them necessarily politically accountable to the individual constituents. If the hon. minister is harbouring illusions that that amounts to accountability, then so be it. He hasn't been accountable for a while himself.

I am concerned, and I'd like the minister to appreciate this, about section 4 of this bill. While I can appreciate that it's been the habit, albeit illegal, for some of these buses to participate in a form of parcel express, I'm not entirely certain that that should be, at least from a policy point of view, a function of TATO A. I find some ideological inconsistencies there as it relates to the remarks by the Treasurer of the province, remarks that I must say I associate myself with from time to time as they relate to private enterprise.

I find the government getting involved here in an area that at least it would indicate to me is well served by the private sector, specifically people who are involved in the cartage of goods—the myriad of various cartage companies and transportation companies that must apply to the Ontario Highway Transport Board for a certificate of public necessity or convenience. I'm sure the minister has probably, at least indirectly, been given some pressure by the various people involved in the United Parcel application which seems to be quite a contentious matter before the Ontario Highway Transport Board. I'm sure he's well aware of the great extent and the number of various companies that serve us, at least in the private sector. I'm not entirely sure that this is an area where government involvement would be to the advantage of the people of the province of Ontario.

At the same time, I'm concerned that TATO A wouldn't have to go to the Ontario Highway Transport Board for such a certificate. I'm also concerned about increasing the scope of TATO A at this time in the absence of an express policy on the transportation of not only goods but, more specifically, people. It's obvious to members on this side of the House that there really is no policy in this particular ministry with regard to the transportation either of goods or people. The Greyhound-Gray Coach fiasco that we saw last year is certainly but one example of this. Again, the current dilemma that people are facing as it relates to increased transit fares in the city of Toronto further demonstrates this lack of a comprehensive transportation system.

I never cease to be amazed at the great progress that we hear verbally at least about the improvement of GO facilities. They usually are immediately followed by an election. For the last two elections we've heard nothing but the great things that are going to happen in the area of the city of Hamilton and surrounding districts with regard to the expansion of GO facilities. I want to tell the minister at this time that I don't think they're particularly impressive and certainly come nowhere near the nature and the scope of the promises made before elections.

Mr. Philip: I see this primarily as a house-keeping bill. I think that it's self-explanatory. As the minister stated, the three municipalities that are chiefly involved or are being involved as a result of this bill have requested it. It was a change in the attitude that they previously held.

I share with the member for Wentworth North some of the concerns about accountability under this system. I am concerned about section 4, but in a different subsection than the member for Wentworth North, the first subsection. I am wondering what the implications are to Gray Coach Lines as a result of this, and I would suggest that possibly by going to committee we may be able to look at some of these questions.

Ms. Bryden: I have one or two questions that I would like the minister to clarify on this bill, particularly that section which gives them power to operate transit services within a regional area at the request of and under an agreement with the council of the regional area. This is in areas where the TATOA is operating an inter-regional route or an inter-regional transit service.

Does this new power which is added by this amendment give TATOA the power to operate, for example, the TTC? Does it give it the power to operate any other municipal transportation service, and if it does, under what terms are we contemplating that TATOA could enter into this? Would the objective be to provide a sort of integrated service within as well as between municipalities, or would it be to possibly bring all public transit in this area under one operating authority?

I am also concerned about the addition of the section that provides that the fares for such services would be established by agreement. Presumably this would be an agreement between the municipality and TATOA, but it seems to me that all public charges of this sort should be subject to some sort of review, some sort of public input on the rates, and on the extent to which the operating costs would be paid by the riders and the extent to which they would be paid for out of general taxation, either provincial or municipal.

We now require that hydro rates be reviewed and I think it would be legitimate to request that transit fares should also be reviewed. At the moment, as everybody in the Toronto area knows there is a discussion of what percentage of the transit costs should be carried by the riders of the TTC, and the province has intervened in this dispute by promising its grants to the TTC this year on the insistence that the riders in the Toronto area must pay 70 per cent of the cost of operating the TTC.

I am not going to argue whether 70 per cent is the right or wrong figure. I think it's a figure that should be determined by the local municipality, particularly when the local municipality is operating the service, and the province should be expected to contribute to public transit in local municipalities as it has made it a policy in the past because it saves expenditures on roads and it promotes the use of public transit, which is environmentally a good thing and also saves energy. I think the province should determine what percentage of subsidy it will give to municipal transit operations, independently of the amount which the municipality then decides to charge to the riders.

This year the province had agreed to carry 15 per cent of the operating costs of the TTC—

Hon. Mr. Snow: Thirteen and three quarters per cent.

Ms. Bryden: I was just at a meeting of the Metro executive committee where they were praising the minister for having raised it from 13.9 to 15 per cent this year. There had been some negotiations, I understand. Perhaps you haven't been as generous as I thought you were. But I would think 15 per cent is hardly adequate when you consider that encouraging people to use the TTC in the Toronto area is one of the highest priority items we should have, in this very congested area. Especially so if we want to cut down on traffic congestion, wasted energy, and the pollution that occurs from excessive use of the automobile in these highly concentrated population areas.

At any rate, I would like the minister to comment on the premise that he is telling the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto what percentage they should charge to the riders before he is willing to subsidize them at all. Or maybe before he is willing to make this increase, I am not sure at what stage this requirement was imposed, but they seemed to be quite convinced that it had been imposed.

Those are some of the questions that I hope the minister would deal with. As to what is the meaning of this extension to section 6—which is under section 4 of the Act—regarding the operating of transit services within a regional area, and whether he would contemplate an amendment which would allow for the review of the fare schedules, the fare tariffs, that are to be set in any operation that TATO A takes on.

We all know that GO Transit is heavily subsidized, but I think we would like to know to what extent and have some public input as to whether the subsidies should be increased or decreased—at least what the policy is behind the subsidies.

Mr. Ashe: I will try to confine my remarks to Bill 44, to do with TATO A. I am not quite sure what the TTC has to do with it, but I will try to maintain my remarks in that context.

I rise in support of Bill 44, particularly on two aspects of it that I can speak very specifically and knowledgeably about, as it affects my riding of Durham West.

The first one is the inclusion of Durham into the expanded area that is recognized in the TATO A jurisdiction. This has been something that we have been trying to accomplish out in that area for many, many years. Unfortunately, many of the regional councillors failed to recognize the reality that in fact TATO A was operating within the confines of Durham region, and it was much better to have some voice in its operation than to criticize it from afar.

I appreciate that it is always easier to criticize something when you are not a part of it, so maybe that's why it went down the drain from time to time. The previous concern of some of the elected people in Durham in the past was the provision that called for the seating of the regional chairman as the representative on TATO A board by the particular region. Again, there was some concern expressed from time to time by some representatives that that person did not represent an elected voice and therefore should not be seated. This was overcome by the election of the regional chairman in Durham, as in most other regions, earlier this year.

It was that particular instance along with the realities of the situation that finally prompted, in my opinion, the correct decision of Durham to petition the minister to be included in an expanded bill, which is now before us, known as Bill 44.

I think this is something that has been long overdue, and I am pleased to see that Durham is now in it.

Secondly, in the portion of the bill that speaks to the parcel service that is provided by TATO A and, in effect, shall we say, legalizing it, I can say that out in my area, where for economy reasons there was going to be a reduction in the hours of service provided by one of the TATO A stations for the pick-up and delivery of parcels, I had a great hue and cry from within that municipality as to how useful that service was and how it could not be provided by alternative services at any reasonable price and at any reasonable level of service.

Upon negotiation we were able to get a somewhat expanded service compared to what the cutback was going to be. It is a recognized area of service that can logically be provided, it is well appreciated by the users and I don't think is infringing in any way upon the private sector. As a matter of fact, in many instances it seems to complement the private sector. I support Bill 44 in its entirety.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is for second reading of Bill 44.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Do you want me to respond?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, by all means.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, you cut me off before I got started on the other bill and before I got stopped on this one.

Mr. Foulds: You are slow on your feet.

Hon. Mr. Snow: My remarks will be brief, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth is concerned about the private sector and the cartage of goods by buses. The hon. member for Etobicoke was concerned about what effect this would have on Gray Coach.

First of all, it will have no effect on Gray Coach because Gray Coach does not operate on the same routes that TATO A does.

Mr. Nixon: You haven't got many of those routes left.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Secondly, I would like to say that it has been a tradition that the public expects a parcel service to be carried by the bus that's operating through the area. Our TATO A buses, for instance, cover from Toronto out through Brampton, Georgetown, Acton, to Guelph. There are no other buses running on that particular route and the people who require a parcel service to Guelph expect it to be supplied by TATO A. TATO A is not in the business of promoting parcel service but is carrying on a tradition that the public expects, as has been explained by my colleague, the hon. member for Durham West.

I regret the point brought up by the hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine at some length. Perhaps if I had given a more detailed explanation at the beginning—there is one area of the bill, sections 5 and 6 that I did not explain in my opening remarks.

Section 5 provides for the leasing of transit vehicles owned by the authority with drivers for any purpose related to objects or powers of the authority. This minor amendment allows for the use of GO Transit vehicles that are basically used mostly in the rush hours for commuter services during the off-peak hours. This would allow arrangements where GO buses could be leased to a municipal transit service for use in the off-peak hours if they are needed.

Section 6 provides for the authority to enter into an agreement with the council of that regional area or with the council of an area municipality within the regional area, and that the tariff of fares of the service shall be established by the agreement.

The reason for that amendment is, for instance, on the Yonge Street corridor where we have, I guess it's the town of Markham—Markham Transit operating within the municipal bounds of the town of Markham, and we have GO Transit providing service on the Yonge Street corridor. Invariably, we have a GO Transit bus and a Markham Transit bus going end to end up the street, which is not a very efficient way of running transit. So on an experimental basis, TATO A has entered into an agreement with Markham Transit where TATO A will supply the local service on that particular route so that there's no duplication of buses.

TATO A accepts the normal fare that Markham Transit would charge. TATO A charges certain operating costs of supplying that service to Markham Transit which puts that in as part of its cost of transit and applies for subsidy on it as part of their operating costs, as far as our provincial subsidy is concerned, for Markham Transit.

That is why we have put in this amendment to allow for that type of service agreement, which has been put in as an experiment and which is working very well. This will allow us to formalize that agreement and enter into similar agreements in other municipalities where there is a need to do so because of that duplication of service and where there will be efficiencies and lower costs for the taxpayers, whether they be municipal or provincial taxpayers.

I am sure in a few weeks when we get to my estimates the hon. member and I will have great opportunities to discuss the TTC fare policy. I don't think it is part of the principle of this bill, so I won't respond to her remarks on that issue.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

PUBLIC VEHICLES AMENDMENT ACT

House in committee on Bill 34, An Act to amend the Public Vehicles Act.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any questions or comments?

Mr. Philip: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: On which clause?

Mr. Philip: On the minister's answers to a previous question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Which section of the bill are you talking about?

Mr. Philip: I don't know. I don't have the bill down here.

Hon. Mr. Snow: There is only one section.

Mr. Philip: I am sure that the minister will recognize which section I am talking about.

Mr. Cunningham: If you start talking about it, he will recognize it.

On section 1:

Mr. Philip: In the minister's remarks about the possible expansion of the system through the experimental project and through various forms of public education and so forth, does the minister not foresee that as this kind of system increases, so too does the possibility or the probability of gipsy-type operations? I wonder if the minister would tell us of any precautions he is taking to ensure proper enforcement will be carried out so that we don't have a duplication of the kind of gipsy system that we have seen over the years in the trucking industry?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am not that concerned really with regard to gipsy systems. If we are talking about commuters who are presently using a car pool, I don't think you have any gipsies in car pools that I know of. A car has always been considered exempt by the Highway Transport Board. If you want to take three or four of your neighbours to work with you that has been an accepted practice as long as I can remember.

We have taken the alternative route to what we have done in the past. The bill exempts van pools. If someone starts running a bus business, using one of these vans, and charging individual fares then that operator is not within the terms of reference of this exemption. Obviously, we would find out about that and that person could then be prosecuted for running a bus service without a public vehicle's licence.

Mr. Cunningham: The question is how.

Hon. Mr. Snow: As long as he operates under the manner of this exemption, he is exempt from the Act and from any inspection.

Mr. Young: On section 1, clause 1(aa), in the description of the vehicle, I asked the minister before in connection with the vehicle that has been developed by the organization headed by Mr. Foley here in Ontario, as to whether that vehicle would qualify under this section of the Act. I've forgotten how many seats—the minister didn't answer my question—but I just wanted to get that clear. I was rather interested to know whether or not that would fit into this scheme of things.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't believe it would. I can't tell you either—I'm sorry, there are 17 seats in that small transit bus so it would not fall within this exemption. I don't think unless it were a very deluxe service that it would be practical in any case. The cost of that type of a vehicle—a diesel-powered, heavy vehicle meant for public transportation use—I am sure would be above the budget of most people who would want to operate this type of van.

Bill 34 reported.

AIRPORTS AMENDMENT ACT

House in committee on Bill 35, An Act to amend the Airports Act.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are there any comments, questions or amendments on Bill 35?

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2.

Mr. Foulds: The minister didn't entirely clarify to my satisfaction the reason why he has to add the words in line six of subsection 1, "construction, operation or maintenance of airports" to the previous Act. I really don't see why that is necessary when you may already enter into an agreement, in the former Act, "with respect to any matter in relation to establishment, extension, improvement or maintenance of airports."

In other words, the main argument the minister made is that he had to expand his powers with this section in order to subsidize municipalities for the maintenance of airports. That's a laudable aim, particularly in the northern communities that he mentioned. But I don't understand why he needs the extension of the authority as it is outlined in section 2(1).

I also would like to find out from the minister why he needed the addition of the last two and a half lines "the Lieutenant Governor in Council may provide funds to the municipality, corporation or individual for such purposes." In other words, during the second readings the minister indicated that his officials told him that he could not supply funds to municipalities for maintenance and operational costs of airports. I want to know what this wording does that the wording in the original Act does not do.

Hon. Mr. Snow: If you want a legal terminology I guess we'll have to try and get you one. But I am advised by the solicitors of my ministry, who are very competent people, by the legislative counsel and by the Provincial Auditor that we need this different authority to pay a subsidy to municipalities. I have taken their word for it and we have included it in this amendment. If you are not prepared to take the word of those gentlemen, then we will have to get you more information.

Mr. Foulds: I am just saying that that is exactly my position. I'm sorry, but I don't want a long legal explanation—I just want a legal explanation in layman's language.

Hon. Mr. Snow: We have deleted in this Act section 3 of the old Act. "Section 3 of the said Act is repealed" and the subsidy was payable under section 3. I am told by my solicitor that the wording is too limited in the former section 3.

With regard to your question about the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the Lieutenant Governor in Council has always been involved in the Act in approving airports. Airports are handled somewhat differently in the ministry than are roads. I do not have to go to the Lieutenant Governor in Council for an order in council to build a bridge or pave a mile of road. That's within the authority of the minister. But as far as an airport is concerned I cannot give a $50,000 grant, or whatever, to a municipality to build an airport, the same as I can to build a bridge, without getting authority of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. That's the way the existing Act is set out.

Mr. Foulds: I'm sorry but the minister has not satisfied my question. He tells me that his advisers tell him that the authority is too limited. He has not explained to the House in what way that is limited and what extension he needs. In others words this House is granting to him authority to spend public funds. I would like to know why that extension is necessary and what are those limits on his authority as it is now outlined in this Act in contrast to the former Act?

Hon. Mr. Snow: From the compendium that was provided as background information with the Act I will, if I may, read the last two paragraphs:

"The minister has for some years has been subsidizing the construction of certain municipal airports. These municipalities have found that the cost involved in maintaining and operating these airports, once built, strain their resources and the government plans to pay subsidies for the maintenance and the operation of specific airports, where authorized by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

"Such subsidies are possible under the existing wording of the Act. But the Act refers only to the acquisition of land or any equipment apparatus or thing that may be required for the establishment, extension, improvement or maintenance of a municipal airport. Under the rules of the statutory interpretation 'thing' as used here can only apply to physical goods, which would include fuel for the heating of buildings and electrical power supply but would not properly apply to services including salaries and wages.

"At the same time sections 2 and 3 of the Act are being merged in the interest of simplicity."

So the ruling is that we could not pay for wages of people pertaining to maintenance of airports under the old Act.

Mr. Warner: I'm wondering if the minister, in the interest of time, will go over section 2 very briefly? Does the wording of that mean that you can, or want to, or it's possible for you to get involved, embroiled in that whole hassle out at Toronto International Airport with regard to the taxi problem? The licensing procedures have been a problem in the municipality of Mississauga, they were a problem for Metropolitan Toronto for a while. They then became a problem for the federal government. If I interpret "operation and maintenance of airports" in a certain way, it would include the licensing of taxis as well. I'm wondering if that does and what your intention is that regard?

Hon. Mr. Snow: We have nothing as a province to do with the federal government airports at all. The Toronto International Airport at Malton is a federal airport. It's federal property; we contribute to it financially in no way. The municipality may supply some services, water or sewers, to it. We build roads to the boundary of the airport, they build the roads within the boundary of the airport. The taxis, of course, are licensed by the municipality wherein they operate and those that operate on federal property are to be licensed by the federal minister and it has nothing to do with this bill whatsoever.

Ms. Bryden: With regard to section 2, Mr. Minister, I appreciate that it is broadening the power to subsidize so there is no doubt that any matter covered in an agreement between the ministry and a municipality, corporation, individual and so on, can be subject to subsidy. If that is correct, at least we know where we stand on the question of subsidization. But, as I mentioned earlier, I would hope that each individual subsidy would be brought before this Legislature rather than having a lump sum voted for subsidization so that we know exactly what we are subsidizing under this section.

I was very glad to hear the minister state in his reply on second reading that the government was not contemplating the operation of any airports in southern Ontario nor the subsidization of any carriers in southern Ontario. That is a clarification of government transportation policy that we have been waiting for a long time, and I think it does clarify a good deal of the concerns that were being expressed at the hearings about the future of the Toronto Island Airport. So I was glad that he was very clear in making his position evident to us on this matter.

With regard to this section, I would just like to make that suggestion that when the estimates come in, that we have each subsidy shown to us.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Let's be a little bit reasonable. When we bring in the estimates to the House, our estimates are very small for this part of the program; I think we have something like $250,000 for all the municipal subsidies this year. During consideration of my estimates, I'll be able to give the hon. members a breakdown of municipalities to which that subsidy would go. But for me to bring this information to the Legislature every time we want to give a $5,000 subsidy to a municipality, I think is somewhat beyond reasonable. To debate each municipal subsidy in this Legislature if the hon. member wanted to do that for the 900 municipalities and all the road and transit subsidies, we would be sitting 24 hours a day, 365 dollars a year, just debating the subsidies my ministry gives to municipalities.

Mr. Foulds: Dollars a year?

Ms. Bryden: What I was really suggesting was that either in the detail of the estimates or in any compendium that is provided to the opposition parties, that there should be a list of the breakdown of subsidies. The minister mentioned subsidies only to municipalities, but this particular section gives the power to give subsidies to individuals, private corporations and all sorts of other bodies, and we would like that information at the time of the estimates.

Hon. Mr. Snow: That will certainly be available. It's available any time. All the hon. member has to do is ask a question in the House every day between 2 and 3 if she wants information on any subsidy that this ministry gives out. My life is an open book. Everything's available to you.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, boy!

Mr. Cunningham: It won't be a best seller, I'll tell you that.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Chairman, I'd simply ask the minister to outline to us at this time the conditions under which his ministry could contemplate such an arrangement with an individual.

Hon. Mr. Snow: To my knowledge, we have not to this date made any arrangements with an individual or subsidized an individual for a private airport. There is a possibility that some time in the future there could be such arrangements. In some municipalities in the north, and in eastern Ontario, there are some small airports operated by private individuals, I guess you would say—perhaps a flying club that has bought land.

As an example, near here we have the Brampton Flying Club, which owns 200 acres of land at Snelgrove, north of Brampton, and has quite a nice little airport there. They have had no subsidy whatsoever. They never applied for any. I'm not talking about any for that. But there could be instances where there is an airport at a community that is not a municipally owned airport, where some type of improvement might be needed and whereby, maybe for $100,000, you could fix up that airport under some agreement where it would become available to the public rather than spend $1 million to build an airport across the road owned by a municipality. I've got no examples—we have not done it—but this would allow that type of a thing and it would be under special circumstances that it would happen.

Section 2 agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall the balance of the bill carry?

Mr. Foulds: I have one question for information from the minister. In what would be the consolidated Act once this bill passes, what number does section 5 of the original Act become? That is, the clause in the original Act which reads: "The moneys required for the purposes of this Act shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated therefor by the Legislature."

Hon. Mr. Snow: There is no change.

Mr. Foulds: Yes, what section does that become? Does it remain section 5?

Hon. Mr. Snow: It remains section 5 of the main bill.

Bill 35 reported.

TORONTO AREA TRANSIT OPERATING AUTHORITY AMENDMENT ACT

House in committee on Bill 44, An Act to amend the Toronto Area Transit Operating Authority Act, 1974.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are there any questions, comments or amendments on this bill? The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere.

On section 1:

Mr. Warner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Obviously, there are a few terms missing from the bill—words such as ad hoc, Band-Aid, piecemeal. Frankly, I get tired of seeing bills that come in front of us that are not a part of an overall planning strategy.

Mr. Cunningham: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, this is not on the bill.

Mr. Ruston: What section is he dealing with, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Could I ask the member what section he is dealing with?

Mr. Warner: I'm referring to section 1, subsection 2(g), where it starts to define the regional areas. I would like to know, first, in his defining, why he uses that particular kind of description.

Secondly, what is the effect it is going to have on the existing transit facilities that are in those areas, whether it's Markham Transit or what? I listened to your description of the Yonge corridor and the crossover with Markham Transit, but how do you envisage it affecting those other areas?

The Chairman may want me to leave the question about subsidy until section 6. It seems to me to be related, because if you're going to talk about the region that it affects and the transit system that is already presently in place in that region, then surely that also involves a discussion of the subsidies which it now receives versus the subsidies that are handed out to GO Transit or whatever else the province wants to operate, because there are some real conflicts in all of that?

Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, if we can proceed one step at a time I would like if the minister could explain the reasons for selecting those particular regions as described and whether or not he means the entire regional area, and the effect it will have on the existing transit facilities in each of those regions.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I must admit that I have some difficulty in understanding what the hon. member wants to know.

First of all, this is for the GO Transit system which operates now in Hamilton-Wentworth, in the region of Halton, the region of Peel, the region of Metropolitan Toronto, the region of York and the region of Durham, and, in some cases, in very minor instances, extends outside those regions to supply the commuter service. It has nothing to do whatsoever with local transit, other than the interconnections. Oakville Transit and Mississauga Transit interconnect their buses with the GO Transit stations at Oakville, Clarkson or Port Credit. This has nothing to do with it and it will make no change to the local transit system.

Basically, what this bill is doing—other than the minor part that we discussed before about parcel express—is making Hamilton-Wentworth, Halton and Durham full partners or full participants in TATOA, as their municipalities have voted and passed resolutions, forwarding them to me and asking that this be done.

Mr. Warner: In explanatory notes, you certainly say you are “expanding the meaning of ‘area of jurisdiction of the authority.’” I would like to know what the intent of all of that is then. You are doing one of two things. You are either becoming more aggressively involved in providing good public transit—that’s why you are expanding the meaning of area of jurisdiction—or you are going to put some pressure on people like Gray Coach or whoever else is operating there. It is either one or the other. I would like to know definitively what it is that you are about when you want to expand the area of jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. Snow: We are not expanding the area of jurisdiction. Two regional chairmen sit on TATOA board meetings now but are not voting members under the old Act. This will make the regional chairman from Hamilton-Wentworth, the regional chairman from Halton and the regional chairman from Durham voting members on the TATOA board of directors.

TATOA presently services those areas. The lakeshore GO trains go from Pickering to Hamilton. The buses travel as far as Hamilton, as far as Oshawa, up as far as Sutton, the north end of Durham and as far as Guelph on the northwest route. There’s no intention other than expanding service to meet the demand within the present service areas. This does not really change that at all.

Mr. Warner: Perhaps you should have added an explanation to the explanatory note because under explanatory notes it clearly says, at least in the copy I have, “The amendment expands the meaning of ‘area of jurisdiction of the authority.’” At the bottom of the page again, it says, “the amendment expands the meaning of ‘regional area.’”

I take that at face value in the explanatory notes that you are in fact expanding the area of jurisdiction. I want to know, if that’s so, what the purpose of it is. If it is not that way, if it is in fact as you have described, that you are not really expanding the area of jurisdiction but what you are doing is more directly involving the regions, that’s a different kind of explanation. I don’t wish to get into—

Hon. Mr. Snow: If the hon. member would read the explanatory notes. It says at the beginning, “the Act presently reads as follows: . . . ‘area of jurisdiction of the authority’ means the area composed of,” (i) the regional municipality of Peel, (ii) the regional municipality of York, and (iii) the regional municipality of Toronto.

“The amendment expands the meaning of ‘area of jurisdiction of the authority’” by including, in addition to that, the regional municipalities of Halton, Hamilton-Wentworth and Durham.

Mr. Warner: Then it concludes by saying, “The amendment expands the meaning of ‘regional area.’” I don’t wish to get into an argument over semantics. It is just that if it is as you have stated, then I suggest that that’s what it should have been in the explanatory note instead of trying to suggest or leave the impression that you are expanding the jurisdiction, because that becomes an entirely different matter. I shall leave it at that on that point.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Just to further explain it, this Act expands the area of full membership; maybe that would be a better explanation of TATOA. It does not really expand the area of authority because TATOA operates in these regions. The region of Halton has several GO routes through the north, the middle and the south, as does Peel and as does Durham. It includes them as full members of the authority now which they weren’t before.

Section 1 agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall the bill be reported?

Mr. Warner: No, I have further discussion.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere. Could I ask the member is it a brief comment or will he take some time?

Mr. Warner: I have one question pertaining to section 6.

Sections 2 to 5, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. Warner: Section 6 talks about the tariff for fares established by an agreement. I am wondering if the agreement that you have in mind is similar to the one which you have foisted upon Metro Toronto, namely, that 70 per cent of the operational cost must come from the fare box before any subsidy comes from the province of Ontario. Is that the intent in section 6 that you wish to establish by agreement?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I explained this whole thing fully a few minutes ago to the member for Beaches-Woodbine. I am sorry you weren't here.

This is the agreement between, for instance, Markham Transit and TATO A for the use of the TATO A buses to ply the transit service to the town of Markham. This would be an agreement between TATO A and the city of Markham for the cost of operating that bus, not the fares paid by the riders.

Section 6 agreed to.

Sections 7 and 8 agreed to.

Bill 44 reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House begs to report three bills without amendment and asks for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1977

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

House in committee on Bill 22, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Mr. Chairman: We have the Act reprinted as amended by the standing resources development committee. Are there any comments or amendments? The member for Quinte.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Chairman, we have one amendment which we would like to propose, moved by myself and seconded by Mr. Mancini. It is an amendment to add a subsection 2 to section 125 of the Act as set out in section 3 of the bill.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. Before you place any amendment to section 3, I'd like to ask if there are any other members who wish to speak to any previous sections.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. O'Neil moves that section 125 of the Act, as set out in section 3 of the bill, be amended by adding subsection 2 as follows: "Effective the 30th day of April, 1980, for the purposes of section 125(1) and sections 126 to 140, the industrial, commercial and institutional sector of the construction industry referred to in clause e of section 106 shall be deemed to include the electrical power systems sector of the construction referred to in the said clause e, in addition to the said industrial, commercial and institutional sector."

Has the member for Quinte any further comments?

Mr. O'Neil: No, Mr. Chairman; I think this has been discussed very fully in our hearings across the province, in the centres of Thunder Bay, London, Ottawa, Sudbury, and Toronto. I think the point has been made by our party as to our feelings that Ontario Hydro should come within the scope of this bill as of that date, April 30, 1980, which would give a fair amount of lead time to Ontario Hydro. As I say, I think enough comments have been made about it in standing committee.

Mr. Bounsall: We too would like very much to see Hydro covered in province-wide bargaining, and in the committee stage initially moved the same effective amendment as we have before us from the Liberal Party.

The minister then responded, I think, in a very positive way. She brought a proposal to the committee in which she proposed to establish an industrial inquiry commission, according to section 34 of the Labour Relations Act, to consider the extension of this bill into the electrical power system sector. If I could read out part of the terms of reference which the minister had in mind, they included "the feasibility of the merger of the electrical power system sector with the industrial, commercial and institutional sector."

I think a very valid study could be done on that one single term of reference alone, because I think it was the feeling of all members of the committee, particularly hearing from contractor groups across the province, and from many of the union groups, that Hydro had to be included in this province-wide bargaining. This was partly because of the rate of pay which Hydro paid in the area in which they had a project, which tended to be the second highest rate in the province—not the highest, but the second highest—a rate which often disturbed the trade rates in the area and made it very difficult for other employers to keep or even to find tradesmen.

For Hydro to be paying the rate pursuant to the area, which would emerge as the local appendancy to a province-wide agreement, seems to us to be a step forward. There are other reasons why tradesmen, without having a higher rate of pay, would prefer to work on a Hydro project, one of them being the long-term work which they would get as opposed to maybe short-term work at various sites in the other markets. But there is no question in our minds that Hydro should be included, either now or eventually, and we certainly hope in the not too far distant future, in the province-wide bargaining with the rest of this sector.

The minister proposes an industrial inquiry commission which would thoroughly investigate the problems of making them part of this ICI sector. It goes on with a couple of other terms of reference: Part B, "The desirability of the retention of multi-trade bargaining as opposed to single-trade bargaining in the electrical power system sector"; and, finally, "the process and timing for such extension."

The minister went on to propose in writing, and said in response to questioning, that this was no problem; the commission would be appointed not later than October 31 and it would report to the minister within three months. Both of those time frames—when we would get this commission started and when it would have to report—mean that we would have this report before us in a rather short time. In questioning, the minister said she has in mind some person who is very capable of being the commissioner of this inquiry commission and who presumably is available—he or she—to meet these sorts of deadlines.

I would like to see, because it is such a complicated sector—the whole construction industry is complicated; I must admit I liked being on this committee for the sole purpose of finding out more about the construction industry and how it operated. From the educational point of view, it was well worth it.

This would allow a thorough investigation of Hydro and how Hydro could and should be operated. The only drawback, of course, is the power that Hydro seems to exert upon the cabinet. I can envisage a report from the commissioner coming in and saying, "Hydro should be included. Let's do it now—or whatever the date may be—and do it under the following different conditions, which can be either accepted by both sides in the construction field or, if necessary, legislated." I can see that coming forth and then, because of Hydro's seeming influence on the cabinet, the bill that would do that or the urge to get them into that sector would never see the light of day. That is a concern, a lingering concern.

Mr. O'Neil: Why don't you vote with us?

Mr. Bounsall: But as I said during consideration of the estimates, the Ministry of Labour's sins, and they are manifold, are ones of omission and not ones of commission. If they go out of their way to meet the need in this way of taking this step—and this commission, as I have no doubt, has to include them in some way in the province-wide bargaining—then I feel it would be so compelling that they be included that even Hydro's objections, if there are any, would not carry the cabinet in the way which I fear. The reasons for them to be included as turned up by this commission would be so compelling that the government would have to move on their inclusion.

I can see all sorts of areas in which this inquiry commission should look. The terms of reference as suggested tell me that those are broad enough to cover the entire field of the construction industry in which Hydro participates. The commission is able, from the terms of reference, to look into every corner and sector of that; including, I would think, in the construction field a look at Hydro's system of cost-plus on all their projects rather than the tendering system. I would say to the commission that this does have some effect, I would think, upon the contracts reached, if not necessarily directly on the bargaining. This is also an area which the commission could quite fruitfully look into and come forward with some recommendations, because of the added costs to the province of their cost-plus system of arriving at the contracts on their construction sites.

I certainly don't agree with the brief that Hydro presented to us outlining how they would be at a disadvantage with respect to being included under this bill. One of the arguments placed was that they must purchase construction material and equipment on the open market at the best price. They want that right. That simply says they want to use non-union materials, something which I don't think Hydro should be allowed to do, particularly in light of the fact that the money saved there would be picayune compared to the money spent on their cost-plus arrangement of arriving at their agreements to build.

Their proposal was to set up a parallel structure, a bill of their own if you like, parallel to the powers here in this bill, with a single designated bargaining agency representing all employers of trades or crafts working in the electrical power system sector for province-wide, multi-employer bargaining. What they are really saying is set up some sort of procedure which forces the subcontractors with whom they have to deal to sit down and deal with them.

That's a funny way of arriving at something which by their very subcontracting contracts they can achieve anyway. We surely don't need a parallel structure simply to achieve the main point of what Hydro asked us to do. It is clear in my mind they should be included in a province-wide contract.

What I am interested in, however, is a qualified person looking into the ins and outs of exactly how they should be included and what differences, if any, there should be. They may turn up some significant differences. I have heard stories saying that they both do and don't pay the extra bonuses for high level work which often occurs on Hydro projects in local areas.

I'm not sure which side to believe in this. If it is true, I can see where one of the recommendations would be to include them, but that this is a provision from which they should be exempted because of their particular type of project. In many areas the highest thing they would ever have in the whole area would be the Hydro project, if they were lucky or unlucky enough to have one there, whichever way you want to look at it.

For that reason, I support the commission inquiry and trust the ministry and the minister to appoint a well qualified person, the one they have in mind, to be the commissioner. I trust him in this and certainly would hope they would follow through in complete detail, in legislation if required, what that inquiry commissioner would recommend.

For that reason we have decided that the proposal by the minister is not just an interesting one but the proper way to proceed at this time with this bill. We would prefer to take the minister at her word, follow through this procedure as she has committed herself to do, and we will not support the amendment, one which we had moved in the first place but then withdrew as a result of the proposal put through by the minister.

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Chairman, first of all, let me say that it was certainly a privilege for myself to serve on the standing resources development committee as the chairman. I wish to acknowledge the tremendous amount of co-operation we received from the deputy clerk of the House, who informed me on many different occasions of what my duties and responsibilities were as chairman.

I would like to say that I sat in the hearings and I heard every single brief that was presented. I sat in the committee and I heard management organization after management organization approach the committee and explain to us the need they felt of Ontario Hydro being included in this bill, and I totally support my colleague from Quinte in his amendment; I believe it's necessary.

I would also like to say that we had support of the other opposition party until the different unions from Hydro sent telegrams. That's the first time I realized we had lost the support of the other opposition party. All through the committee hearings all the members of the committee stated emphatically that Hydro should be included in this bill; it was just a matter of when would be the most appropriate time to have them brought in.

Mr. Kerrio: You don't want to see a flip-flop, do you?

Mr. Mancini: No, I don't.

Mr. Warner: Why don't you just get on with it and resign?

Mr. Mancini: It was decided before the very last meeting, on a general consensus of all of the committee members, that Hydro was to be included in this bill in April 1980. It is not right to say that we need this industrial inquiry commission to further study Hydro. My goodness, we've had a top-notch commissioner study, we've had Don Franks working on this. He's very highly acclaimed. He has looked into Hydro and he says, on page 59 of the Franks brief, that the power sector is no different from the institutional and the commercial and the industrial sector. He recommended strongly to the minister—

Mr. Foulds: Is that Don Franks the actor, the singer?

Mr. Mancini: I can recall seeing a letter that Mr. Franks sent to you right after the Hydro people presented their briefs. I think he kind of mentioned that they came to the committee cap in hand to be treated special.

I have to say, in all honesty, when we have an organization as large as Hydro, an organization that has a long-term commitment of a multi-billion dollar program for the future and employs 10,000 construction workers, how can we ignore an agency this big? I say it's special treatment for a government agency.

If anyone needed special consideration, it was the petro-chemical people from the Sarnia area whom my colleague, the member for Sarnia (Mr. Blundy), represents. If anybody had a good setup which was working well and should not have been tampered with, it was those people in Sarnia. But due to the fact that we needed province-wide, single-trade bargaining, we had to include them.

Now we have a government agency which has caused this government all kinds of problems in other areas, the same government agency that employs more than 10,000 people, which is the biggest contractor in the province, and which has a multi-billion dollar program underway; and they're going to be excluded. We're going to have this industrial inquiry commission to study whether they should be in or not.

I say let's put them in now, for 1980, and work for two years on how would be best to bring them in. That is the answer to our problem.

Mr. Warner: You've got one supporter.

Mr. Reid: Don't wait for 1980, do it now.

Mr. Mancini: Members of the Conservative Party—

Mr. Foulds: There's going to be an outage on your mike pretty soon, you know.

Mr. Mancini: —strongly recommended it until the last day or two and they even bandied around the date 1980. The member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton) was one of the strongest supporters of 1980.

Mr. Eaton: Oh, no.

Mr. Mancini: He certainly was. He was a strong supporter of 1980.

Mr. S. Smith: No; he's 1984, isn't he?

Mr. Foulds: It's a very good year, I'll look forward to it.

Mr. Mancini: Now all of a sudden there are regulations for the rest of Ontario but there's no regulation for a government agency. I expected the support of the third party, and I'm disappointed that we don't have it.

I dare say that if this amendment is not passed now, Hydro will never be brought in under this bill, and I'm sure that's what they want. It shows Hydro's power in the cabinet. Unfortunately, many of the people in Ontario are going to have to learn to work together, but a large, powerful government agency does not.

Mr. Ruston: Never, until we're elected.

Mr. Mancini: First priority.

Mr. Warner: Lake Ontario will freeze over.

Mr. Foulds: We'll be there before you are.

Mr. Warner: You're half-way in the Tory bag now, for heaven's sakes.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Kerrio: The next move for you is right out the door.

Mr. Foulds: Can you get a Hydro bus?

Mr. Kerrio: You're headed in the right direction.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The member for Essex South has the floor.

Mr. Mancini: I'd just like to say that at least 50 per cent of the union people and at least 90 per cent of the management people who came before our committee wanted Hydro included. I dare say there are probably more out there, but they are afraid to upset the bill and are therefore keeping quiet.

Also I would like to say that I really didn't appreciate the manner in which Hydro came to present their brief. It was typical scare tactics. "If you touch us, there'll be no power. If you touch us, there'll be extra cost to the taxpayer." Do you know just over a lunch hour they sent us an estimate of $25 million as what it would cost to bring them in right now?

Mr. Mackenzie: That was an expensive lunch.

Mr. Mancini: Don't you think that Don Franks, the commissioner, could have figured that out?

Mr. Foulds: He's slumping in his seat with embarrassment.

Mr. Mancini: Don't you think that a man who had done such a fine job with his report could have figured that out? I think the minister has to answer a very serious question. How can she not support the recommendation of Don Franks?

Mr. Kerrio: Hydro's a sacred cow.

Mr. Pope: Or a sacrificial lamb.

Mr. Kerrio: Bigger than this Legislature.

Mr. Mancini: I'll just wrap up by saying that our party is going to support the inclusion of Hydro; we want to treat all of the government agencies the same way that we treat the private enterprise people.

Mr. Foulds: That badly?

Mr. Mancini: I think Hydro should be included in this bill and I would hope that members of the third party would change their minds. Thank you.

Mr. Mackenzie: I'm delighted to have the Liberal member place his priorities so squarely before the House. He's now supporting this particular amendment because only 50 per cent of the union but 90 per cent of the management people want the amendment in there. It's pretty clear to whom they listen and who carries the weight.

Mr. S. Smith: Sharp is the word for it.

Mr. Mackenzie: The other thing that's very interesting too—and the Liberal leader should follow this a little bit closely—is that one of the arguments used in committee, which quite frankly I'm not sure I'd buy—

Mr. Mancini: You supported it until the last two days.

Mr. Mackenzie: —was the cost of $25 million. The member who just finished speaking said there's no way of knowing, or at least that Hydro was wrong with these figures. They may be wrong, the commission may be one way to find out; but let me tell you I thought, following the last election campaign and the comments I've heard in this House, that the Liberals were supposed to be interested in whether or not we saved the people $25 million. Obviously it's not a major concern when it comes to an issue like this.

Mr. S. Smith: How come you didn't think of it when you proposed the same amendment?

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Mackenzie: It may be, but the instant expert on labour, the leader of the Liberal Party, should stop and realize—

Mr. Ruston: You are not getting home to him.

Mr. Mackenzie: One doesn't get home to him in any way, it doesn't go in. It's in one ear and out the other. He should stop and realize that the amendment in committee was first moved by my colleague, the member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall). We are perfectly willing to listen to arguments, and in this case, there was at least some validity in the arguments.

Mr. S. Smith: Why didn't he think of the $25 million then?

Mr. Mackenzie: It was you people who made that argument. All of a sudden $25 million doesn't count. I can't understand you.

Mr. S. Smith: Why didn't the member for Windsor-Sandwich think of that argument?

Mr. Bounsall: We're willing to be convinced by facts.

Mr. Mackenzie: The member for Quinte said: "Why don't we vote for it?" This Hydro deal is a Liberal issue.

Mr. Ruston: You want to believe it is.

Mr. Mackenzie: It's not a union issue. This particular bill is supposed to be aimed at bringing some order into the construction industry; obviously it doesn't matter a darn to these people.

Mr. S. Smith: Nor does it to the member for Windsor-Sandwich, nor to Franks.

Mr. O'Neil: That must have been a pretty good lunch you had.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Mackenzie: Let me give you a couple of examples. Obviously, it bothers them to have the truth come out. In the same committee hearings the member who just interjected a few minutes ago and said: "Why don't we vote for it?"—the member for Quinte moved two amendments, not major ones but of some import to the bill. In his comments in committee he said he was moving the amendments because he had been asked by Mr. Koskie to move them.

Mr. O'Neil: Who? I didn't propose—

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Koskie. Those were union amendments. Let me tell you something, when the arguments were raised by the minister in that committee—and there was some validity to the arguments—what did he do? He withdrew them. There was no vote forced on those particular amendments. They're the ones who changed "may" to "shall"; if you remember. When he says, why don't we vote for them, why doesn't he know what he's talking about?

I'm not at all entirely sold on the arguments we've had from the government, but I think they're worth looking at. I think we might find out the costs and the problems with multi-trade bargaining and a number of other things that are involved in the suggestion about Hydro. The intent of this bill is to bring about, or the reason we're given for the bill, some order in the construction industry.

Mr. Kerrio: Isn't Hydro in construction?

Mr. Mackenzie: If it's to bring about some order in the construction industry, then you're looking for a position that meets some general agreement.

Mr. Worton: That's normal.

Mr. Mackenzie: The member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini) also made the comment about receiving some wires from Hydro and Hydro unions. I've never received a wire from Hydro or a Hydro union since I've been in this House. Let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, one of the things we did check—and I'll make no apologies for it—was the union position in this particular issue? Do you know what we found? Very clearly, there is no unanimity; the only thing the member for Essex South is right about is that it's a 50-50 split.

Mr. Reid: That means you have no position then, if they don't tell you what to do.

[8:30]

Mr. Mackenzie: It's a 50-50 split. The only really strong arguments I heard—well apart from the anti-Hydro argument, the arguments weren't that strong. There were arguments for and against, even on management's side.

Mr. Ruston: Louder, Bob.

Mr. Reid: There always are positions. That's what you don't understand. In every issue, there are arguments for and against.

Mr. Mackenzie: I think I do understand and I don't think the Liberals understand. I think what's happened here—

Interjection.

Mr. Chairman: Would the member for Rainy River contain himself please?

Mr. Reid: How can you expect me to contain myself listening to this?

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Mackenzie: If we are interested in an amendment that might contribute to a bill before the House, that might bring some stability and peace and order to the construction industry and the bargaining that goes on there, then you are not going to do it with a position that's at best 50-50 right off the bat, with all kinds of strong feelings on it. When a suggestion is made that we take an immediate position—

Mr. Reid: You mean you are afraid to take a position unless the union tells you.

Mr. Foulds: You are really fascist, a Liberal Labour member.

Mr. Mackenzie: When it comes to an immediate position—

Interjection.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

An hon. member: What a bunch of nonsense.

Mr. S. Smith: He says jump, and you ask how high. Even then it has to be 90 per cent of the union.

Mr. Mackenzie: What's bothering the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Mackenzie: What's bothering you?

Mr. S. Smith: You are.

Mr. Mackenzie: I am glad we have got through to you.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Mackenzie: I have been waiting for two years for some understanding of the labour movement in the Liberal caucus. They woo them like heck, but they don't understand them.

Mr. Reid: Your understanding is if it is 50-50 you don't take a position.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. Would the member for Hamilton East address his comments to the Chair?

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Chairman, I would be delighted to. You must forgive me, I am being abused and the interjections here are getting through to me—unreasoned interjections from the party on my right, the far right.

I would simply say that what we have here is an amendment that gives us a chance to get out and ask some specific questions as to the effect of multi-trade bargaining, which is what we have right now in Hydro, and the other party should understand that. It's not a single-trade bargaining situation. We can learn what, if anything, it's going to cost. I have grave reservations about the figures the government threw at us as to cost, but I would like to know what it is going to cost and what kind of a time frame and arrangements can be made in terms of bringing Hydro in, if indeed it should be brought in; we have that chance.

Mr. Mancini: You will never have a chance.

Mr. Mackenzie: Maybe before that commission we can also take a look at the cost-plus practices and some other things that have bothered people for a long time about Hydro, and I doubt very much if Hydro's too happy about being put up to that kind of scrutiny again. When we have that kind of an assessment, then we still get another crack at it here in the House. That, to me, makes eminent sense. I want to be very, very frank with some members of this House, I don't think we have always got the answers and we may on occasion—

Mr. Reid: What? I don't believe I am hearing that from a socialist.

Mr. Mackenzie: I admit that I am a democratic socialist too, Mr. Chairman.

Mrs. Campbell: Do you not have anything useful to do?

Mr. Mackenzie: We may on occasion—

Mr. Reid: By God, we will have to have that framed. That is the first honest thing I have heard.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Chairman, would you please control your colleagues?

Mr. Chairman: Order, order. Would the member for Rainy River please continue drinking his water?

Mr. Reid: It is almost like Moses getting the tablets. A socialist saying he doesn't have all the answers.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, he doesn't even know the questions.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Mackenzie: We may on occasion, Mr. Chairman, in our party, have the wrong answers or even flop as has been suggested, but one of the things that we rarely do, we leave that to the party on my right, is flip-flop on an issue. Thank you.

Mr. Kerrio: You have broken the all-time record.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The member for Middlesex.

Mr. Eaton: Mr. Chairman, I would like to join in this debate very briefly, because I think we went through this very thoroughly in committee. We have heard all this discussion before, but I do want to draw to the attention of the House the remarks made by the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini) which described my position as being that of strongly supporting 1980. I put that suggestion forth as a compromise on the ridiculous position his party was taking of trying to force Hydro in by April of next year—

Mr. Kerrio: That makes a lot of sense, that is sensible.

Mr. Eaton:—considering none of the consequences that could take place because of it. I think we have a good proposal here from the minister. In committee we all agreed that it was a good proposal. We agreed, and you brought the report to the House as chairman of that committee. I feel the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio) and the Liberal Party are just trying to use Hydro as a whipping boy, no matter what the case may be.

Mr. Kerrio: They're big enough to look after themselves.

Mr. Eaton: I think if we can take a practical look at it through the commission, with some in-depth study, then we can get a report that gives us some proper direction. I know that you said you listened to every brief and the presentations of all the groups very carefully. I just want to remind you that when that next amendment comes in, on compulsory co-ordinating agencies, you remember what many of those employee groups were saying to you, don't just listen to what the former member for Sarnia has told you about the Sarnia group. I think this amendment they have put forth should be defeated, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Blundy: I am rising to speak in support of the amendment and I am going to reiterate the statements that have been made to me by the people in the Sarnia area, both trades union people and contractors. They have insisted to me that Hydro should be included.

This is not just something they have pulled out of the sky. We, in Sarnia, are an area in which we have experienced massive building programs over the last 10 or 15 years, an area where we are used to dealing with multi-million dollar contracts and international contractors. In Sarnia we have experience with both Hydro and these private contractors. We have, in the Lambton Generating Station, one of the largest coal-fired generating stations in Ontario, so we know how both these groups are working.

I can tell you that Ontario Hydro, when building the generating station, were drawing labour from the same pool as any other contractor, the same labour pool; so there are no differences.

The member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton), is talking about the former member for Sarnia, Mr. Bullbrook. The former member for Sarnia is just as convinced as I am that Hydro should be included.

There is no real reason why. You mentioned that it is just another way to look into Hydro affairs, investigate Hydro. There are many, many ways in which Hydro should be investigated, but not necessarily in this way as far as I am concerned.

Another thing I want to mention is this $25 million people are talking about that would be extra costs accruing to Hydro if it were included in this bill. I think that is a lot of hogwash. We have experienced both types of construction in the Sarnia area and I can tell you—and I am not speaking of wages, I am speaking of allowances and benefits, which were much more generous as far as Hydro's projects were concerned than on Petrosar, Union Carbide or Shell Canada.

I really don't see any reason to hold up this spectre of an additional amount of $25 million, because this party is not wanting to saddle the province of Ontario with $25 million on any thing based on such flimsy excuses as have been suggested here tonight.

To sum up my few words, I can tell you categorically that both the trades people in the Sarnia area and the contractors in the Sarnia area want Hydro included in this bill. They are the people who have experienced both kinds of building and know what they are talking about. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pope: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I understand the issue before this House, it is a problem relating to how the bargaining carried on by Ontario Hydro in the province of Ontario relates to the rest of the bargaining in the construction industry. My understanding, based on information that has been received by the standing resources development committee, is that Hydro has entered into collective agreements with the Allied Construction Council, composed of certain unions whose members are employed on Hydro projects; and that council represents the international unions of the boilermakers, cement masons, bridge and structural iron workers, labourers, machinists, operating engineers, painters, teamsters and carpenters. Other internationals can, of course, join the Allied Construction Council; for example, bricklayers and sheet metal workers.

These agreements are province-wide and cover all construction work on Hydro projects, the Hydro employees and the employees of contractors and subcontractors. The agreements provide that wages and benefits on the Hydro projects will be those negotiated locally by the locals of the affiliated unions of the internationals, with certain important exceptions; for instance, premium pay on certain shifts, hours of work, travel time, payment for room and board.

The agreements permit the use of composite crews, composed of the members of several trades, permitting the release of the skilled tradesman from performing unskilled work. The agreements do not contain restrictive provisions regarding the handling of materials by each trade in respect of its own materials, the prohibiting of the use of non-union materials, limits upon the number of journeymen per foreman, limiting the work force to members of affiliated unions only, and extra pay for work in certain places.

I must say that the purpose, as I understood it and as has been discussed by all parties which have made representations to the committee, was to provide for single trade bargaining in the construction industry, or certain segments of it. What we have here is a proposed amendment which will destroy that concept.

Why will it destroy that concept, and is there another concept that is more adequate? Surely that is the purpose for the formation of the commission, to study all the implications? We have an Act designed to alleviate some of the collective bargaining problems in the construction industry that all parties have admitted to; unions and employers alike have admitted there are problems, and what we have is an amendment that, for the sake of getting at Hydro, will destroy that concept by putting another concept completely foreign to that concept into the bill.

I ask you, what does it accomplish? Does it bring some sort of organization to the collective bargaining processes in the construction industry with respect to the power systems sector? I would submit it does not. What it does is destroy an existing collective bargaining process in the power system. And for what reason? To get Hydro.

Surely if there is a concern by Her Majesty's loyal opposition with respect to the costs of Hydro, which has been voiced most capably by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) in this House with respect to certain projects, then perhaps the Leader of the Opposition will also capably demonstrate to this House how we can refuse to deal with the possible cost consequences of destroying this collective bargaining relationship.

Mr. Kerrio: Let them be competitive. They are not competitive.

Mr. Pope: How can the two concerns be juxtaposed with any form of consistency? They aren't juxtaposed and they are not consistent, and that is the entire problem with this amendment that has been proposed by the Liberal Party and the opposition.

I say to you that if we are to have—

Mr. Warner: That's the problem with the Liberal Party—they are juxtaposed and inconsistent.

Mr. Pope: That's right. If we are going to carry on to get some sort of proper bargaining system in the construction industry, and if we are to encourage a continuation of multi-trade collective bargaining in the power systems sector in order that both workers and employers can benefit from it, then I say that this amendment should be defeated. I cannot for the life of me understand why this proposal has been put forward by the opposition.

They have yet to explain how they're going to amend all the other provisions of the bill to avoid a conflict between single-trade collective bargaining province-wide, and multi-trade collective bargaining province-wide.

Are they willing to destroy a system that, from all the evidence that is available to us, has worked, for the sake of their own beliefs that Hydro by some means is not protecting the economic interests of the province? Are they prepared to do that irrespective of the cost to the province? The suggestion I have from the members for the opposition is that they are; they're prepared to sacrifice a potential loss to the people of this province for the sake of getting at Hydro.

For that reason I cannot support the amendment. I think my friend the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie) has put it quite well, that there may be some facts that have to be gone into deeper.

Mr. Mackenzie: Be careful, I might reverse my position.

Mr. Pope: They will be dealt with deeper. We will have an examination of the cost saving or lack of cost saving based on the multi-trade collective bargaining system province-wide that Hydro presently has.

However, to make a decision and propose an amendment on the basis of a lack of information seems to me to be illogical and irresponsible for an opposition party. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment proposed by our party, and I have very good reason to. There are some in this Legislature who would suggest that the free enterprise system is ill and failing in its responsibility in this country.

Mr. McClellan: Trudeau said that.

Interjections.

Mr. Kerrio: It's federal, it is socialist, but it surprises me that it is conservative.

Interjections.

Mr. Kerrio: I would say this, with respect, to the minister—

Mr. Warner: Who said free enterprise is free?

Mr. Mackenzie: Don't insult us with Trudeau.

Mr. Kerrio: —that having been there, having treated them fairly, and having some notion of what is going about here, I say that in a fair democratic process if we are going to allow Hydro to get into the construction business, which is what it is doing, then it should play the game according to the rules that all the rest of us have to play the game by. The moment you exclude Hydro and make it some kind of sacred cow in this particular issue, you are putting private enterprise at a distinct disadvantage.

There is no recourse for it. Hydro has been for many years nearly unreachable from the floor of this Legislature. It has gone about its business doing what it will. I say in this particular instance, if it wants to be in the construction business let it play the game by the same rules as apply to the rest of us who are in the construction industry. Let's not allow it a position that is not fair and not competitive.

I might agree that in the short run the $25 million is objective because of the better bargaining position that Hydro gets from the trade union, but remember, it is dealing with the same workers that the construction industry is dealing with. Hydro hasn't proven that its top management is that much better that it can take these same people and do the job at a better price. Hydro is suggesting that it wants an advantage. If we are going to pursue that premise that the free enterprise system is worth saving, is worth pursuing, trade union people have their methods of protecting themselves, where does this put the individual who would compete with Hydro? I say Hydro is not competitive. I say there is hardly any government body that is competitive with true free enterprise, and I tell you again, it is not fair to exclude Hydro in this particular bill. You are allowing it to play the game by a different set of rules.

Mr. Eaton: No matter what the cost.

Mr. Breaugh: Is that what the Lummus Corporation—

Interjections.

Mr. Kerrio: That is the only way it can play the game.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order please.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, I have to rise in opposition to this amendment and there are quite a few reasons for that.

Mr. Kerrio: Let's make a deal.

Mr. Charlton: Let's make a deal?

Mr. Breaugh: No, this is not the Liberal caucus.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Can I ask the member for Niagara Falls, who has just had the floor, to allow the next speaker to continue?

Mr. Charlton: One of the things our Liberal friends down here seem to be forgetting is that one of the arguments that was raised originally in committee—about not including Hydro next April, and the ultimate suggestion that it should be in April, 1980—was that perhaps there were some problems that we didn't know about and perhaps there were some differences in the case of Hydro. That question led us away from the original amendment that I think both parties were prepared to move to include Hydro immediately.

One of the things that the Liberals are forgetting now is that by moving their amendment for April 30, 1980, they are in fact tying Hydro to two and a half years from now. The commission that the minister has agreed to set up and have report will in fact be reporting early enough that, if this Legislature so desires, Hydro could actually be included next April or in April 1979 if the commission and this Legislature find that that is reasonable and useful.

Mr. Kerrio: That's a cop-out.

Mr. Mackenzie: Just don't flip-flop before then, fellows.

Mr. Kerrio: You are the experts.

Mr. Charlton: The problems in the Hydro sector, the problems of multi-trade bargaining and the other problems that Hydro has declared—the problems of money and so on—at this point we don't know all the answers to those problems. We must have a look at them. A little earlier in the debate, in response to a comment from my colleague the member for Hamilton East when he mentioned seeking a little bit of peace and so on in the construction industry, one of the members from the far end of this side yelled, "Why not include Hydro? It's construction, isn't it?"

Mr. Kerrio: That's right.

Mr. Charlton: Well, where were the Liberals and the members of the Liberal caucus who were members of that committee when we moved to include the residential sector? They didn't support it.

Mr. Nixon: But you are excluding Hydro, aren't you?

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Nixon: The NDP and the Tories are still bowing down to the sacred cow, always Hydro.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Will the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk please allow the speaker to continue?

Mr. Charlton: The Liberals are accusing us of positions that they themselves are taking all of the time. And the reasons they take those positions are the same reasons for which we take ours: we happen to think them through and decide what is best in light of the circumstances.

Mr. Nixon: You are in bed with the Tories.

Mr. Warner: If you keep yelling, we'll think it's one of your caucus meetings.

An hon. member: Do you want to see the rest of the amendments?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Nixon: You know when you are on a weak footing.

Mr. Charlton: There was a suggestion also from that end of the floor that if there was a reason to exempt anybody from the bill, the situation in Sarnia was that reason. I would like to suggest to this House that, if anything, the situation in Sarnia and the kinds of problems that the Sarnia area has caused for the construction industry, both management and labour, in the rest of the province, is one of the very real reasons why this bill is here in the first place.

Mr. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, I don't think it's necessary for me to go into too much detail with regard to the position of our party relating to the amendment that has been made, because it has been quite adequately done by the members for Hamilton East, Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall) and Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Charlton), but I would like to say a few things.

I didn't have the opportunity, as most of the members of the committee had, to tour the province and to listen to all of the briefs that had been presented, because I substituted on that committee only for the clause-by-clause debate. There has been some discussion from the right side of myself—

Mr. Nixon: The correct side.

Mr. Davidson:—that we are somehow or other flip-flopping from a position that we had taken during the course of the discussions that were held during that clause-by-clause debate.

Mr. Nixon: Precisely.

Mr. Davidson: I want to make it perfectly clear once again that I do not believe there is any member who sat on that committee who did not feel that Hydro should be included in the bill.

Mr. O'Neil: Right. You're right.

Mr. Kerrio: Hear, hear. Right again.

Mr. Davidson: As a matter of fact, I will point out once again that the original amendment to have it included was made by the New Democratic Party. But—

Mr. Nixon: Flip-flop.

Mr. Mancini: However—

Mr. S. Smith: With the passage of time—

Mr. Nixon: Elie, how warm it is in that bed.

Mr. Davidson: But also I think when you are dealing with legislation here in the province of Ontario—and it is supposedly a responsibility of every member of this House to try to bring forward the best possible legislation for the conditions under which we are trying to create an atmosphere—

Mr. Nixon: And give Hydro what they want.

Mr. Davidson:—that you also have to listen to some of the things that the government says, because sometimes the government is not always wrong.

Mr. Lane: Right on.

Mr. S. Smith: Is that right, Bette?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes, it is in triple negative.

Mr. Davidson: Granted, it's wrong most of the time but not all of the time.

Mr. Mancini: This is the new coalition.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Davidson: In fact, they brought forward to this committee a proposal that I am not even sure the Liberal Party expected that they would bring, because they are much closer to them than we are—

Mr. Nixon: Wait until the UAW hears about this, Breaugh.

Mr. Davidson: And I can assure you that we, as a party, did not expect that type of proposal would be brought forward by the government. But, in fact, it was.

Mr. Mancini: I wouldn't want your job, Mike.

Mr. Davidson: It gave us, as a committee representing the New Democratic Party, an opportunity to review again our position.

Mr. Nixon: And change it.

Mr. Davidson: Part of our position resulted from some of the very things that the Liberal people within that committee had been saying themselves, not only within committee but that the Liberal leader himself has been haranguing the government about, that other members of the Liberal Party have been haranguing the government about; and that was the astronomical cost of Hydro to the consumer in this province.

Mr. Mancini: I am glad you know we are the opposition.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Yakabuski: You can't have it both ways.

Mr. Davidson: There are several things that apparently they have forgotten since they have been doing all of this. What this inquiry will do, if nothing else, is in fact point out to us if there will be an increased cost to the consumer as a result of including Hydro in this legislation. If in fact there is, is the Liberal Party then going to continue to harangue on Hydro? Based on the additional $25 million, or even if it's $5 million, I couldn't care less, are the Liberals going to stand up and argue about that?

Mr. Nixon: Twenty-five or five?

Mr. Bradley: A flip-flop.

Mr. Davidson: And if as a result of their haranguing Hydro or this Legislature cuts back some of Hydro's expenditures, are the Liberals then going to be proud of the fact that as a result of their haranguing perhaps some of these very construction people we are talking about will be laid off of the very jobs that they might have had?

Mr. S. Smith: That is the most convoluted piece of reasoning I have ever heard.

Mr. Davidson: These are some of the things this inquiry will bring forward, and these are some of the things that perhaps you people should be taking a look at. We understand that you have a bag on about Hydro. We understand that's the big thing in your real world today.

Mr. Nixon: Lots of luck explaining that, lots of luck explaining that to the taxpayers.

Mr. Davidson: We understand that probably you did not look beyond your own nose when you looked at the proposed inquiry that was put forward.

Mr. S. Smith: It was yours.

Mr. Davidson: I can fully understand that; and I can fully understand your position, because as I said earlier I don't think there's one party in this House that disagrees that Hydro should be included. But let's get the facts first; and this Legislature then has as much right to have them included later as it has to have them in now and then taken out later. Let's check what's happening before we make the move.

Mr. Lane: Right on, right on.

Mr. Nixon: Let it be known that the main applause comes from the Conservatives for that NDP speech.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Chairman, I don't think there's any doubt that there's significant rationale for the inclusion of Hydro, one of the major industrial builders within this province, in an Act similar to this or the same as this. But it has been said that the bill was developed ignoring the recommendations of the Franks report. I should like to remind the members of this House that indeed somewhat like the elephant, this bill has been two years in gestation. There is at this point a degree of urgency in the passing of the bill.

Mr. Mancini: That's because you kept withdrawing it.

Mr. S. Smith: You have had two years for the Hydro inquiry, why didn't you do it?

Hon. B. Stephenson: It is one bill that I feel should be brought into enactment as soon as possible, in order to proceed with the necessary methods to ensure that by this April there will be the mechanisms in place to permit both the trade unions and the employers to attempt to provide some peace and some order within the construction industry.

Mr. Nixon: We were ready to do it a year ago.

Hon. B. Stephenson: We were also ready to do it a year ago and it was not possible to proceed at that time.

However, we have not ignored the Franks report. It has been mentioned that the Franks report was favourable to the inclusion of the electrical power system segment in the industrial, commercial and institutional sector, from which it is now separated. A fair reading of that part of Mr. Franks' report, Mr. Chairman, would disclose that what Mr. Franks was actually putting forth were the views of some representatives of the industrial, commercial and institutional sector and others regarding the number of the sector.

On page 73 of Mr. Frank's report, he deals with upsetting projects and points out, I think quite clearly, that these require a special group to deal with associations, and that the provincial agreements would have to include appendices dealing specifically with such projects. We have looked specifically at the industrial, commercial and institutional sector, because this was the one area in which there was a great measure of agreement between employers and employees about the route which should be followed in order to bring the kind of harmonious situation that we would hope to see within the construction industry. There has never been, I think, in the history of the development of any bill in this province, the kind of co-operation and the kind of mutual support which we have found in the development of Bill 22.

[9:00]

Although I recognize the rationale for the inclusion of Hydro, I would put it to this House that indeed it would be entirely disruptive to the passage of this bill to include any specific date at this time for the inclusion of Hydro. Therefore, in light of the comments that were made within the clause-by-clause discussions of Bill 22 by the committee, I did propose that we would appoint an industrial inquiry commissioner to examine the feasibility, the methods, the potential costs, the difficulties and the method by which to bring Hydro into this bill or into a similar bill; and that we would do it within a very short period of time, we are prepared to do so.

I would therefore ask the members of this House to defeat the amendment which has been proposed by the official opposition.

Mr. O'Neil: I have a few closing remarks in regard to some of the statements that were made by some of the members of the third party, and also by the minister.

Maybe we should let it be known that both of these parties are supporting Hydro in this particular case. I must say I think the members here who were not members of this committee should be aware of the fact that Ontario Hydro was given a chance to present a brief when this committee met in the city of Toronto. A brief was presented by them, and I know that they were well aware of some of the comments that were made across this province by some of the employers and some of the labour unions.

I think when that brief was given to this committee in Toronto it should have been a stronger brief, in light of their knowing some of the arguments to have Ontario Hydro included.

Things seemed to change around a bit, I recall, on the last two or three days of the committee meetings here in Toronto when Ontario Hydro was present at the clause-by-clause discussion. I know that our party members were invited out to lunch with the Deputy Minister of Labour and we were lobbied to see whether or not we would change our mind and go along with excluding Hydro altogether and going for this inquiry.

Mr. Nixon: The NDP must have had a better lunch.

Mr. O'Neil: We didn't go along with it. Mind you, the NDP were treated at dinner that night. It must have been a lot better dinner than it was lunch—

Mr. Mackenzie: You got short-changed.

Mr. O'Neil: —because when they came back they were for excluding Hydro and going for this inquiry.

Mr. Reid: It is amazing what a dinner will do.

Mr. Mancini: That's what you call a free lunch.

Mr. Kerrio: That's no free lunch, that's what it costs to support you.

Mr. O'Neil: I must say with regard to the inquiry that has been suggested by the minister—and I think she is possibly sincere in the setting up of this inquiry—what we as a party are afraid of is that in the past there have been too many inquiries that have been set up. We haven't heard back from them, or if we have heard back from them the results have not been brought before this Legislature, or in other words acted upon. It is our fear as I say, if this inquiry is set up at the early date which she has promised, that we may not get it as soon as possible and we may not be able to bring about the changes in this bill which we would like to see.

It was our proposal, I believe, or it may have been a proposal of one of the other parties, that if Ontario Hydro was included as of the end of April, 1980, and if the inquiry brought in evidence that substantiated their claim that it was going to cost the province more to have Ontario Hydro included, then at that time the bill could be brought back before this Legislature, the changes could be made and Ontario Hydro could be excluded or a specific date set for inclusion; that was our feeling on that particular matter.

Mr. Nixon: What could be more reasonable than that? We are going to have a balanced budget, almost, by then.

Mr. O'Neil: We have been accused—

Mr. Eaton: That would disappoint you, wouldn't it?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Reid: We won't have to worry about you people bringing it in.

Mr. Nixon: You won't be there. You will be out selling white beans.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Will the members of the House please allow the member for Quinte to continue?

Mr. O'Neil: We don't really believe, as has been suggested by some of the other members, that by including Ontario Hydro in this as of April 30, 1980, we will destroy the bargaining system.

Mr. Nixon: Of course not.

Mr. O'Neil: We figure that we will tighten up on the bargaining system.

Mr. Mancini: And a number of other things.

Mr. O'Neil: We know that in this Legislature we have had discussions just over the last week on the overspending, in millions of dollars, by Ontario Hydro on some of its projects. We are for tightening up the bargaining system and the cost that Ontario Hydro is incurring for the people in this province.

Mr. Mackenzie: Why make the workers pay?

Mr. Samis: What are you insinuating?

Mr. Mackenzie: Why tighten up on the bargaining?

Mr. O'Neil: I think it was the member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa) who said: "They flipped over there, and you fellows flopped"; and I think that's very true.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Would the member please ignore the interjections and continue?

Mr. O'Neil: I'm trying, Mr. Chairman, I'm trying very hard.

One of our members mentioned the chairman. I think the chairman did an excellent job during these hearings across the province and was very non-partisan. It's a pleasure to hear him tonight and have him say what he felt during those hearings, and yet he held back from saying them.

Again, too, it was mentioned by the chairman of the committee that we were faced over the lunch hour with a cost of $25 million which was thrown at us by Hydro. We contend, in the Liberal Party, that that cost could have been in savings if we include Ontario Hydro and go along with this amendment. So the amendment stands as far as we are concerned.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All in favour of Mr. O'Neil's amendment please say "aye."

All those opposed please say "nay."

In the opinion of the Chair the "nays" have it.

Shall this vote be stacked?

Agreed.

Are there any further comments on this bill? The member for Quinte.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Chairman, to save a bit of time, the next amendment that we will have will be the deletion of sections 137 to 140 of the Act, as set out in section 3 of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall sections 126 to 136, inclusive, as set out in section 3 of the bill, carry?

Mr. Mackenzie: No, I have some comments on section 130 of the Act.

We moved an amendment in committee which I think it is worth mentioning. We did manage to achieve support on this one. I think it was the only one we got support on and that we could carry in committee.

You will notice in the revised bill the words underlined, "subject to the ratification procedures of employee bargaining agency." The bill, without that, simply said, and it may have been legitimate but it worried us, "shall vest in the employee bargaining agency, but only for the purposes of conducting bargaining and concluding a provincial agreement."

The argument was made by the ministry that, obviously, it would be subject to ratification of the trade that was involved. That did not satisfy us. We felt we had to make it very clear, because one of the concerns expressed out in the province was whether or not that ratification was going to go back through the normal procedures of the trade, since there are a variety of different ratification procedures used in the construction industry. We asked for the amendment, and I'm happy to say that particular amendment has been added to the bill and those are the underlying words in section 130.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is there any further comment from members on section 3 of the bill?

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Chairman, I rise in connection with section 133 of the Act as set out in section 3 of the bill, not with an amendment, but a comment that in committee this was one section on which I moved an amendment very similar in intent to the amendment that was just spoken on by the member for Hamilton East, in the sense that we wanted to make it clear in the bill, as clear as we can to anyone reading it, what was expected and anticipated.

The member for Hamilton East mentioned that we had moved the amendment, which was carried, that we indicate somewhere in the bill that we expected a ratification vote to be taken on the provincial contract reached by the constituent local groups that form that particular bargaining group, even if the decision of that particular trade might be, in terms of ratifying, to pass a resolution letting its negotiating and bargaining committee conclude the agreement without referral back. That also is one of the ways of ratifying.

We wanted to make this clear, because of the concerns brought to us across the province by both management and labour groups about the local appendices, and how much would be included in the local appendices and would their local particular differences be recognized in a province-wide agreement, which is, of course, anticipated but not mentioned at all in the bill. This was the appropriate place to make a reference to the fact that there would be local appendices and that we expected local appendices, which would maybe be quite large at the beginning and disappear slowly with time to what would be, in most cases, one agreement covering the entire province; but which none the less, in any particular trade may, for example, to take into account the particular differences in camp type construction in the north, exist forever.

So we had at this section introduced an amendment in committee that said: "Nothing in this section prohibits the inclusion of appendices to the provincial agreement relating to designated regions," simply so that anyone reading this bill would be reassured. We expected that many of the contractors and construction workers unfamiliar with reading legislation would, in fact, pick this up and read it and wonder no doubt why there was no mention of local appendices.

This would simply be an assurance, by putting it in the bill, that we expected such things to exist, particularly at the beginning—it is very necessary at the beginning—and including it in the bill was simply a matter of clarity to assure both sides what our intent was and that nothing in the bill prohibited local appendices to be appended to the province-wide agreement.

Again, it was a clarificational and educational type of amendment for both sides in this bill. We regret to say very much that neither of the committee members from the other two parties saw fit to feel that this clarification, this additional piece of information in the bill, which would help to allay fears—not at the top level of the union or the top bargaining position in the employer bargaining agent, but someone just interested in what was happening—that there would not be local appendices.

I think we certainly could have included it with no loss of intent to the bill. We won't make the amendment, but I wanted to point out to the House that we did make it in committee and we felt it was a worthwhile amendment from the simple fact of clarity in legislation, something which we as legislators should strive to achieve.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I might simply say there is nothing in this bill which inhibits the inclusion of local appendices and it seemed to us an unnecessary addition to bring this in.

I would defy the hon. member for Windsor-Sandwich to find anyone who would sit down to read Bill 22 as light evening reading in front of a fire, with a glass of cognac, or something of that sort. It is not something which the average individual is going to sit down and read; he is going to look at it for a very real purpose. If we can assist him in sorting out whichever difficulties he may have with the bill, the Ministry of Labour will be delighted to do so. But we didn't see the purpose of encumbering the bill with extra language, simply in order to make it enjoyable.

Mr. O'Neil: As clarification on some of the comments made by the member for Windsor-Sandwich it is our understanding also—and I think we have that commitment from the minister and from the ministry staff—that the local appendices are understood to be included as part of the bill, even though the explanation was not in the explanation part.

Mr. Mackenzie: I think to some extent that the explanation of the Minister of Labour is exactly why that should have been in. It is not the reading that you would sit down and do with a glass of cognac in the evening; it is because this bill will have a profound effect on the bargaining in the entire construction industry.

One of the things we ran into in the hearings across the province of Ontario was that some regions had established some local bargaining practices. They were fearful—that came through loud and clear right across the province—as to the loss of some of the things they had been able to negotiate on a regional or local basis. We felt that nothing may inhibit it, but nothing says that is the case in the bill, either. If you have had some experience with collective bargaining, you are very cautious about what rights you don't have in that particular legislation.

The other point I wanted to make just briefly on the same section and I believe the following one, is simply that we also argued at this point, and it was pretty obvious that it was a losing argument from the word go, but we argued the problem that probably causes as much trouble as any other issue in the construction industry in bargaining. That is the double-breasted unionism.

When a worker is organized and certified and when a collective agreement is signed, that covers that particular worker in that trade across the province of Ontario. But, unfortunately, it doesn't necessarily cover the contractor. He is covered only in the region in which he is certified.

Mr. Kerrio: Or if he works for Hydro.

Mr. Mackenzie: This leads to as much trouble as any other particular problem in the whole construction bargaining situation.

We did have one amendment in that area and made some additional arguments, but obviously didn't have the support of the committee to carry the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any further comment on section 3 of the bill?

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Chairman, if you are dealing with sections 137 to 140 of the Act as set out in section 3 of the bill, we will oppose those sections and ask for their removal from the bill.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Do you wish to comment on the matter?

Mr. O'Neil: Yes, I do. Again there have been days and days of comments concerning the removal of sections 137 to 140 from the bill. We feel that the co-ordinating agency should not be legislated by the government. We feel that if there is going to be a co-ordinating agency it should be one that is formed by the contractors, by the employers themselves, rather than by legislation. We have a worry that if the government steps into this process they are stepping into a process I don't believe they have entered into before. It is something that the labour unions do not have by legislation on the other side.

As I said, we discussed these comments for days and days in committee. I think our views have been made known. Rather than prolong it, we ask for the removal of those sections from the bill.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You are moving an amendment that section 137 be deleted?

Mr. O'Neil: Voting against it.

Mr. Mackenzie: I am glad that my colleagues on the right have come around on this particular issue. We moved this in committee. I guess one of the prerogatives of the official opposition is that you may get first crack at it in the House, but we moved it in committee. It required a one-week delay, as I recall it—they had to have a caucus to decide whether or not they were going to support us on this particular amendment.

I just want to make the point very clearly that there was no question from the word go that if there was a deficiency in this bill, in our opinion it was the co-ordinating agency, sections 137 to 140, which did in effect stack the deck as far as construction workers are concerned. And there was no question that it had to be removed.

We listened and listened carefully to the arguments in committee, but there was little doubt in our caucus fairly early in the game that this was the centre of most of the problem. It was an amendment that we moved and, quite frankly, we're very delighted to be able to support our colleagues on the right on this particular amendment, now that they've seen the light from our moving it in committee.

An hon. member: You need a third hand to pat yourself on the back.

Mr. Mancini: I also would like to rise in support of my colleague's amendment to delete sections 137 to 140 inclusive. We heard a great deal of debate on this subject in the committee. I dare say that 90 per cent of the unions were against the co-ordinating agency as were at least 50 per cent of the employers.

Mr. Kerrio: So the NDP didn't make up their own minds.

Mr. Nixon: We know who pulls the strings.

Mr. Mancini: I also would like to say that never before has the government ever taken such a drastic step as to legislate this type of co-ordinating agency. It has never done that for the unions and I don't think it ever will. I don't think that we should have it done for the management side.

I would like to say that they've had a co-ordinating agency in two other jurisdictions across this country, in British Columbia and in Quebec, and it has not worked out well at all. We have had prolonged strikes in those areas and the total bargaining system had broken down. I say we have to make Bill 22 so that it will work. I say to the House from all the briefs that we received and from all the knowledge that we have been able to obtain, if we leave sections 137 to 140 in the bill, this type of bargaining in the construction industry will not be successful.

One looks at section 137 and sees the extraordinary powers we are giving to this co-ordinating agency, such as to set a fee. I think the members of this House should know that the main organization which wishes to be the co-ordinating agency is $150,000 in debt. When we asked them why they were in that debt position, they simply stated: "If we had to get the money, we're sure that we could." When the government legislates their fees, I guess they sure would be able to get the money. Also, we were unable to obtain from the minister what the constitution would read. We were also unable to obtain from the minister how this would stop multi-trade bargaining from prevailing in an atmosphere where it was to be single-trade bargaining.

All of these points were made very strongly in the committee. I'm glad to see the opposition is in agreement with this. It would have been voted down in the committee, except the chairman was a member of the opposition. I would want to point out to the members of this House, never in all the sittings of the committee had anyone substituted for the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel. On the final day, when we had the most important vote in the committee, all of a sudden, we had substitutes by members who had not sat one day in the committee.

Mr. Kerrio: They had their orders.

Mr. Mancini: It was just a little bit of hanky-panky. You knew darn well then that those sections would not have carried, if the chairman had been a member of the government party. I think that our position has been put forth very plainly and strongly. I want Bill 22 to work. I'm sure it will, once we delete this section. I support the amendments proposed by my colleague from Quinte.

Mr. Bounsall: We, of course, placed this amendment fairly early in the committee stage of this bill, as soon as we got it. We are delighted that after a week's delay, which they took to consider their position on it, the Liberal Party members in that committee supported us on this.

Speaking to the content of the deletion, it never struck me as unreasonable if you had 20-odd—whatever number it turns out to be—employer bargaining agencies on the employers' side conducting bargaining in their particular trade fields, that they would not find it reasonable to meet together from time to time—in fact, rather compelling that they should meet together from time to time—to say: "What are you doing in the bargaining in your field?"

It simply makes such common, ordinary, good sense for that to happen. Yet in this bill, and from the representations from across the province to us from some on the contractors' side, and indeed from the officials from the ministry side, we are told that they are such individualists on the contractors' side of the construction industry that there would be no way this bill would work unless we legislated that representatives of these 25 or 24 bargaining agents must get together. We are also told that they are so incapable of pulling themselves together for what would be various obvious interested conversations from time to time that we are going to have to write their constitution for them, set the regulations for appointing a board of directors and legislate through regulations the fees which must be collected from the other contractors in the province or the whole thing would fall apart. That just isn't reasonable.

We do know that there are two or three of the contractor groups that would show real reluctance to come together—some of the general contractors from Toronto, the mechanical contractors from across the province, I believe, and a few others. But it strikes me that it is to their detriment if they don't wish to get together informally from time to time. We should expect this. It makes no sense whatsoever to set into motion the legislation of a group on the management side, to set their fees and outline their duties, responsibilities and privileges, because they can't get together.

A lot of discussion at all of our presentations revolved around the formation of the co-ordinating council; in virtually all of our presentations it was mentioned. The management side, in the presentations they made to us, clearly saw this as a group that would have a lot of influence when they got together on the individual trade bargaining; they stated that, in fact, irrespective of section 140, which says that co-ordinating agency shall not exercise the bargaining rights held by the employer bargaining agency.

In the words of one of the submitters to us, "who is kidding whom?" When we legislate this body together, they are going to be there for the sole purpose of trying to influence the bargaining that goes on in every individual single trade. That is the reason they are there. That is the reason we would legislate them. It is in their own best interests to do it voluntarily. But, for heaven's sake, again, who is kidding whom? There is no way we are going to cause this group to come together under legislation of this House to do that kind of a job, which no doubt they would do, in trying to influence the individual trades, irrespective of section 140, because how can you enforce section 140? Who is ever going to know what goes on behind the closed doors of that legislated agency if these sections carry in the bill? They could go ahead and do the exact opposite of section 140 and no one would know.

If they want to come together voluntarily to do it, that's up to them. I suspect that they will and I suspect that the two or three which are determined to sit outside of that voluntary group with time will come. To me, it really makes little difference whether they come together or not. If I was a contractor and part of one of the employer bargaining agencies, I certainly would want to get together with my colleagues and transfer some information.

I would say the employer bargaining agency in each trade which does the bargaining has to collect some sort of a fee from the contractors who belong to their employer bargaining agency. For a very slight extra fee, if at all, you can provide enough funds for them to meet over lunch some place from time to time. But to set into shape by legislation a whole hierarchy which they have to attend and give them the right to collect a given type of fee from all the contractors in order to support that superstructure is not something we can support and simply is bad legislation.

I might say at this point that this is one thing in which the author of the report into province-wide bargaining in construction, Mr. Don Franks—who did a very good job, I should say, in that report and had to put up with us on the committee in the hearings across the province—disagreed with the members of the NDP in that committee and eventually, with the Liberals coming around to our point of view, the Liberals as well, I would say to Mr. Franks, you are not perfect in every respect. This is the one area in which you are flawed.

To the minister, I say it is obvious if we'd had the normal chairman situation in the committee these clauses would have been deleted in the committee. It is obvious when we are here with the numbers that the opposition have relative to the government, that these sections will be removed tonight. I would say to the minister that, faced with that inevitability, she would not fight this to the final stage but simply get up and acknowledge, however she wants to say it, why she wants these sections still in the bill but face and recognize the reality and simply remove them. If not, we will have to vote them out and that will happen.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I appreciate the solicitous comments made by my hon. colleague from Windsor-Sandwich but there are some points I think should be made regarding sections 137 to 140. Although the concept of multi-trade bargaining has been rejected as unworkable and retrogressive by all of the parties in this portion of the construction industry, it is equally recognized that province-wide bargaining in single trades cannot exist in a vacuum and particularly within the ICI sector. There must be intertrade links of communication and that has to be on both sides of the bargaining table.

At the present time, on the trade union side there is a very effective co-ordinating mechanism. There has been a history of interchange of information, of interunion co-operation through the provincial building trades council, and it has been effective. It would be, I suppose, Utopian if indeed we could anticipate that voluntarily the employers in this sector would come together with that kind of unified approach to the implementation of the progress of Bill 22. However, it is our information that past efforts in this area have been singularly unsuccessful and that some specific kind of moulding mechanism was necessary, if this were to come about.

There isn't any doubt in my mind that the employers are capable of developing within legislation any kind of co-ordinated information-sharing agency. We have not specified any group exactly that should be doing this, nor do I intend to, because I believe that they have initiative and enough interest in this to come together in the kind of group which will be acceptable to the vast majority of the employers within the ICI sector of the construction industry. There does have to be some balance.

When we're looking at this proposal I think we should look at it not from the actual drafting of the legislation but from our concern about the success of the process. If the process is to be successful, balance has to be achieved on both sides. This is an unusual step, there's no doubt about that, but this is an unusual bill. There has never been this kind of labour legislation introduced in the province of Ontario before. It is an experiment.

It's an experiment which we think will work. We think that it will assist trade unions and assist employers to work together co-operatively in an effective kind of way to ensure that the kind of disruptive programs and incidents which occur in this portion of the construction industry will be less likely to occur in the future.

I feel rather strongly that one of the major mechanisms of this bill is being deleted on the motion of the official opposition and supported by the third party. I want this bill to be successful. It is my understanding and my strong feeling that the way we can make it successful at this time is to develop within it the information-sharing agency on the employers' side, which would provide the balance. I would urge the members of the opposition to withdraw their opposition to the inclusion of these sections at this time.

It is quite possible that within a relatively short period of time this section of the bill will not be necessary, and it is quite possible when this process really begins to roll that indeed it might be deleted. But for the initiation of this process by this bill we feel that an information-sharing mechanism for employers is essential—

Mr. S. Smith: That is the opposite of what you just said about Hydro.

Mr. Kerrio: We will trade you off for Hydro.

Hon. B. Stephenson: —therefore I would support the retention of these sections.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Chairman, I'm very happy to speak on this portion of the bill. I'm particularly happy to rise just after that rather surprising suggestion by the hon. Minister of Labour, with regard to sections 137 and 140, that if we were to find later on that we didn't like them for some reason we could always remove them at that point. When the same minister rose in this House not an hour ago with regard to our attempt to include Hydro in the bill, and our statement that if we then didn't like it and it sounded too expensive, we would have two years to remove that portion of the bill, she said that was impossible. "Better to leave it out now and we can always put it in later."

Hon. B. Stephenson: I did not.

Mr. S. Smith: Yet on this occasion she says we can always take it out later. So apparently whether we put it in or we take it out sooner or later, seems to depend very much on the point of view of the minister about the individual amendment in question.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Stuart, I do wish you would listen.

Mr. Nixon: She wants to have it both ways.

Mr. Germa: You should understand that.

Mr. S. Smith: As to the sections we are now discussing, we've given considerable thought to this matter because we recognize the history of construction trade bargaining in Ontario is, shall we say, a chequered one. We recognize that the large number of contractors compared to the relatively small number of unions, the lack of organization among the contractors compared to the, I think, excellent organization which is a credit to the union movement, has made it very difficult for the contractors to ever adopt even the slightest concert in their efforts or the slightest co-ordination.

Many of them are very sensitive about this and they recognize that on a voluntary basis their history of co-ordinating their activities has been a dismal one at best. They therefore have come—not all of them but in part—to the minister and they have come to us with the request that there be some co-ordinating agency legislated into the Act. They feel that somehow or other they can go to their errant members and their errant friends and wave a copy of the Act at them and say, "You see, there is an agency in the Act," and that somehow then people would co-ordinate their efforts.

Of course, in the first place, looking at it just from the point of view that these people have brought to the attention of the Legislature and giving them the benefit of consideration at the very least, there is no guarantee that the simple legislating of such an agency would bring about a co-ordinated approach anyway. Secondly, if they want such an agency, there's absolutely nothing to prevent them from organizing such an agency without the benefit, dubious as it may be, of legislation.

In the third place, as I have pointed out to many of these contractors, if the bill is accepted with the sections that are presently printed in the matter before us, the contractors will find that they must from time to time prove that that co-ordinating agency "adequately represents" the contractors as a whole.

That whole procedure of proving this, that whole procedure of being subject to the regulations that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may, in wisdom or otherwise, from time to time bring down in this province, is something that frankly I think the contractors are very foolish to want to get involved with. I think they are much better off to have the freedom of organizing their activities any way they please, co-ordinating themselves any way they please, without having inscribed in any form of legislation and subject to any regulations, a number of procedures to prove the adequacy of their representatives and so on and so forth.

I believe, frankly, that it is not in the interests of the employers to try to form this type of co-ordinating agency. I have told them very frankly that I believe they are overreacting to the long history they have had of squabbles among themselves and difficulties co-ordinating their efforts. In fact, under the present circumstances, they are obligated to band together anyhow into bargaining agencies for each of the trade by trade bargainings. Consequently, we're not speaking now of hundreds or thousands of individual contractors. We're only speaking of what is it—the minister can correct me, 14, 24—

Hon. B. Stephenson: Twenty-five.

Mr. S. Smith: —a relatively small number of individual bargaining agents that have already been an amalgamation, so to speak, of large groups of contractors. It should not be an insurmountable problem for these people to, from time to time, communicate with one another—which is what they propose the co-ordinating agency would be, an agency for communication—it should not be an insurmountable obstacle for even 25 of these groups to chat with each other from time to time about how things are going.

Mr. Nixon: They probably belong to the same club.

Mr. S. Smith: In any case, I do believe from their own point of view they'd be better off outside the realm of legislation and having to prove that every time some contractor might say that that agency isn't adequately representing him there would have to be some procedure by which we could judge whether or not a majority truly—

Hon. B. Stephenson: The Labour Relations Board.

Mr. S. Smith: —were in favour of the organization. The Labour Relations Board would have to get involved. What do they need this for? They can have all the co-ordination they like without having to go through the nonsense of being able to wave a useless piece of paper which would somehow or other in their minds bring certain errant contractors into line, which it would, in fact, have no power to do anyhow.

So we see the Act confers nothing but trouble upon the contractors and, in any case, it gives them no benefits they wouldn't have without the Act.

Let's look at it from the point of view of the union people. They have, as you can well understand, a fair amount of concern about how this new experimental approach to bargaining is going to work. Nobody knows what the future holds in this case. All of us hope in good faith that the best interests of the people of Ontario will be advanced by this bill, and that's why the bill will pass, but naturally there's nervousness on both sides.

It's terribly important, it seems to me, therefore, that this bill start in an atmosphere of acceptance and a willingness to co-operate and a willingness to show a certain degree of trust and acceptance on both sides of the bargaining table.

The labour unions feel, and with some justification, I suspect, that the co-ordinating agency issue, the issue of trying to legislate a co-ordinating agency, is to some extent either the thin edge of the wedge or—

Mr. Foulds: To coin a new phrase.

Mr. S. Smith: —a remnant of some kind related to the desire on the part of the employers to have multi-trade rather than single-trade bargaining. Many of the unions have spoken on this matter—the minister is aware of this—and the unions have a fear that this is some effort to try one way or another to bring about a multi-trade situation instead of a single-trade system, because most of the contractors are very frank in the fact that they would have preferred multi-trade, and it's the unions' reticence to go any further than single-trade bargaining at this time which has brought about Bill 22 and its many previous incarnations under different numerical designations.

Our feeling, therefore, is that the unions have shown good faith in this matter. There is no similar legislated group on behalf of co-ordinating unions one with the other. The unions have shown a willingness to try this. The contractors have shown a willingness to try this. It's, to be colloquial about it, a new ball game, frankly. I think the contractors are still a trifle nervous about this because of their past experience. I think they should give the new ball game a chance.

We believe this bill is basically a good bill. We believe the work that's gone into it in the committee has basically been constructive and excellent work among members of all parties on the committee, and we are very pleased about that.

With regard to sections 137 to 140, however, we think the labour people are correct from their point of view of not wishing to see inscribed in the legislation a somewhat one-sided piece of work, as such sections would be; and from the point of view of the contractors, we frankly think that their desire to see this in the law is understandable but, in my view, misguided. I think their own interests and the interests of working people and the interests of all Ontarians will be far better served by leaving that out of the legislation and allowing the contractors, among their bargaining agents, to work out their own means of co-ordination and communication which, I'm sure, would be quite acceptable to everyone in Ontario. That's why we will support the deletion of sections 137 to 140.

Mr. Pope: As I understand the arguments that have been raised with respect to the deletion of sections 137 through 140, particularly the last comments by the hon. Leader of the Opposition they are that in the absence of a systematic agreement between employer and employee with respect to compulsory multi-trade bargaining there should be no legislated agreement between employers and employees with respect to single-trade collective bargaining throughout the province.

I might say that that is not my understanding. I believe that the hon. Leader of the Opposition stated his position that those employer agencies, or organizations, that submitted to the resource development committee their support for the concept of a co-ordinating agency to deal with province-wide collective bargaining on a single-trade basis were misguided. I believe that was his comment. He also indicated that he felt that contractors have shown a willingness to try a voluntary system.

All I can say with respect to the Leader of the Opposition is that the reading of the brief submitted to the standing committee with respect to this matter has not shown that the contractors have a willingness to try a voluntary co-ordinating agency. In fact, the majority of their briefs submit that there is need for a mandatory co-ordinating agency. These are people who have been dealing with the problems of province-wide collective bargaining, or the lack thereof in Ontario, for a period of years now. Their submissions and their problems were brought before the committee. It was their feeling, based on their experience, with some exceptions, that there is need for a mandatory co-ordinating agency to provide some balance and to provide some system of order in the collective bargaining relationships between employers and employees.

The comments that I heard and I read on the briefs with respect to some contracting associations which did not support the concept of a mandatory co-ordinating agency had to do with the fact that they felt that, to some extent, their own specific trade, or their own specific area with respect to multi-trade bargaining was sufficiently organized as it was. I would submit that, on balance of the submissions made to the committee by the employers, there's no basis at all for saying that the contractors have indicated a willingness to try a voluntary co-ordinating agency system. In fact, exactly the opposite is taking place.

I think that any reasoned analysis of the submissions shows that if we are to have an effective single-trade, province-wide, bargaining system in Ontario with respect to certain sectors of the construction industry, that we will need to have the type of agency that has been envisaged by sections 137 to 140 of the Act and, therefore, that the amendment proposed is not in accordance with the wishes generally, or the type of bargaining relationship that is desired in Ontario. Nor is it in accordance with the wishes of the majority of contractors who have made their feelings known to the committee. For that reason, I think that this amendment should be opposed.

Mr. Charlton: I rise in support of the amendments. Sections 137 to 140 of the Act provide for me, at least, and I think for most of us on this side of the House, the one major contradiction in this bill. When we are going through it, it was said over and over again that many of the sections were silent on the structure that the bargaining agents would take on both sides—the union side and the employer side. It was said that they were silent because the ministry didn't want to interfere in the internal structures of those organizations—that the organizations should be able to establish them and make them workable on their own.

Then we get to the end of the bill—sections 137 to 140—and we find exactly the opposite view. Because the contractors have complained that they haven't been able to co-ordinate voluntarily, we are going to legislate it. We are going to interfere in the internal structure.

During the committee hearings, I heard from the minister and from the ministry officials conflicting points of view about the union side in terms of co-ordination. Some felt that the unions were doing an effective job of co-ordinating and others from the ministry felt that they weren't. But whichever the case, there is certainly nothing in the bill which sets up a mandatory co-ordinating agency for the employee side, and that's a contradiction. The bill is supposed to be providing balance in the construction industry in Ontario.

It seems to me, as has been suggested by a number of the speakers, that this is a new ball game. To a large degree, in the bargaining agencies on both sides, there is going to be a smaller number of people involved—20 or 25 bargaining agencies. In a much larger situation there are some serious questions in everybody's mind about exactly what direction the negotiations are going to take—in terms of local appendices and all of the other things we have talked about. Here both sides will find co-ordination almost absolutely necessary in their process. They are not going to be in a position to not talk to each other, as they have been in smaller groups at the local level.

The one thing that frightens the trade union side about this mandatory co-ordinating agency is not only their own internal fear of what legislating a co-ordinating agency will mean, but it is a fear that's born from having sat in on the hearings and listened to a number of the contractors' side saying quite clearly and emphatically that the co-ordinating agency had to be there and had to be mandatory so that very definitely they could control the mavericks on the contractors' side and bring them into line. And that's not what the bill says that co-ordination should be about.

Co-ordination, according to the minister and the ministry staff, is supposed to be an exchange of information. But it was made quite clear to me, and I think most of the members of the committee, that the contractors felt quite strongly that the influence would be great and that the ability of, as they called them, "mavericks" to flee the fold would be lost.

For those reasons we are very happy to see the opposition party move these amendments as we very strongly felt the position ourselves and moved these amendments in the committee ourselves. We feel very strongly that not only are we going to support these amendments, but that if these sections remain in the bill we will find ourselves in the position of not being able to support the bill.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of sections 137 to 140, inclusive, as set out in section 3, will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

This will be stacked for a vote at 10:15.

Sections 4 and 5 of the bill agreed to.

SUCCESSION LAW REFORM ACT

House in committee on Bill 60, An Act to reform the Law respecting Succession to the Estates of Deceased Persons.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I would point out to the members of the committee that at a previous sitting we carried through to section 53, the end of part II.

Is there any further discussion, comments or amendments on this bill?

On section 54:

Mr. Lawlor: I want to talk about section 54, and part IV, having to do with survivorship. Just before I do, and in line with an alteration that has been made, I want to mention for the record and in Hansard that part IV on survivorship was formerly part III with respect to the next preceding earlier bill. There have been so many of them that it is somewhat difficult to keep track.

This is the new edition and it has been added to. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Attorney General if those brand new sections in part III in the designation of beneficiaries, which I know we are over—just one question if you will—had been properly presented to, let's say, the wills section of the bar association and thoroughly perused—because to date, apart from the work in this House, it hasn't been canvassed or analysed. Has that received full approval?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, I can't give the member for Lakeshore any specific assurance in respect to the wills and trusts section of the bar association. As I think the member for Lakeshore appreciates, what we're concerned about is the uniformity of legislation throughout the Dominion of Canada, and these sections are really based on the recommended Act that has come from the uniformity law commissioners.

I'm confident that the bar association will support these particular sections, but I can't give you any specific assurance that it has given its specific approval. Again, it's based on the recommended uniform Act, and I think the member for Lakeshore would agree it is certainly in the public interest to make these sections as uniform as possible throughout the Dominion.

I know that these sections, for example, have been adopted by the previous government of Manitoba and the present government of Alberta.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, it would be an abuse of procedure if I pushed it very much further. I have just, if you will, one further word on these designations. When you, by a piece of paper which is not a will, designate for the purpose of an insurance company or a pension fund a new beneficiary without shrouding it in sufficient safeguards with respect to fraud or with respect to alteration, I would have thought that that would be a matter of fair contention. It is a shame, in a way, that the particular sections which are completely new and inserted into the last edition were not given greater approval.

If the Commission on the Uniformity of Laws in Canada finds that acceptable, then who is the mere member for Lakeshore to take umbrage? Nevertheless, I find it very questionable and I think you should look at it. That is too easy a way to change the designation. You surround the will with all kinds of safeguards to see that it is done properly with the witnessing and where the signature goes, but with a slip of paper you can alter where your insurance money is going to go.

I'll go on, Mr. Chairman, if I may. We're on to survivorship, section 61, the old section 54. This is a commendable change. I can't spend a great deal of time on it. Previously, if, in a common accident, the two parties died, it was deemed that the younger spouse would survive the elder and that led to a whole series of great faults because the estate would go over to the younger and the heirs at law, next of kin of the younger would be the beneficiaries if there were no children, if there were no issue, and the older, whoever that might be—usually the husband—his next of kin would get nothing.

They now say it works back and forward whether there's a will or not or whether it's an intestacy, that the estate then, both being dead, will go off to their separate next of kin in the absence of issue. That's a fairly complicated but beneficial change. I have just one question on section 63—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Just as a matter of information, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to section 57.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Could you hold that for just a moment?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It is just really as a matter of information for the member for Lakeshore that I wish to amend that section. And I am hoping my amendment may alleviate some of his concerns, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lawlor: It would be mere niggling to say "no" wouldn't it? But it has been passed hasn't it, Mr. Chairman?

Section 54 agreed to.

Sections 55 and 56 agreed to.

On section 57:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. McMurtry moves that section 57 except subsection (b) of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "Where a participant in a plan has designated a person to receive a benefit under the plan on the death of a participant:

"a) the person administering the plan is discharged on paying the benefit to the person designated under the latest designation made in accordance with the terms of the plan in the absence of actual notice of the subsequent designation or revocation made under section 55, but not in accordance with the terms of the plan."

Mr. Lawlor: I think I would require further clarification, Mr. Chairman.

The section as it now is states that in substance. It goes on in subsection (b) and says "the person designated may enforce payment of the benefit payable to him under the plan but the person administering the plan may set up any defence that he could have set up against the participant or his personal representative."

I don't quite understand why, if there is a defence against the payment out on whatever grounds there may be, is that adequately preserved then in the legislation as it has been amended, and, in effect, why did you think there was a grave necessity to amend the section in a fairly thorough way?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, subsection (b) remains as it is, but I think what we are concerned about here is, of course, where there is actual notice of a subsequent designation or revocation made under section 55. And while I think it is quite obvious that the trustee in these should have some protection, it is important that where there is actual notice of a change then that notice have some effect.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, it's okay.

Mr. Foulds: I don't want to appear niggling on this point but the opposition has been informed that we were supposed to get our amendments on the Friday before they were presented to be discussed in the House. It would be appreciated if the other side would do the same. Is this a new one you just thought up over the weekend?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No. That is certainly my understanding, Mr. Chairman. I thought we had advised the opposition parties of this amendment. I may be mistaken in that respect. Yes, I am advised that the Clerk was advised of this amendment on Friday.

Mr. Foulds: That's the error. Would you be good enough to also inform the House Leader?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That's fair enough, Mr. Chairman.

Motion agreed to.

Section 57, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 58 to 68, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 69:

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Chairman, we gave notice of this motion last week to the Attorney General. It is a motion to delete section 69, subsection 1, clause (a), subclause (xii), which reads: "where the dependant is the spouse of the deceased, a course of conduct by the spouse during the lifetime of the deceased that is an obvious and gross repudiation of the relationship."

I would like to speak to that if I could, Mr. Chairman.

I discussed this with the Attorney General and his advisers last week and was assured by the Attorney General that this clause was necessary to the implementation of the bill because it meant that the court could have regard to conduct of an applicant under section 69 which otherwise the court would be lacking. But I would draw to your attention, Mr. Chairman, the fact that in clause 69(b) which reads: "In addition to the evidence adduced by the parties appearing, [the court] may direct such other evidence to be given as the court considers necessary or proper," which means, as far as I can understand it, that the court may ask for any kind of evidence it considers necessary or proper.

I think there is a principle involved in the kind of clause we see in section 69(1)(a)(xii) which I would like to question and this is why I move for deletion.

At the very least this clause, in this context, it seems to me, should spell out that the course of conduct by the spouse that is to be considered should be confined to the period during cohabitation, and not the lifetime of the deceased. I move for deletion because, although I inquired of the Attorney General on this point and was assured by him that there were English precedents on the question of "obvious and gross repudiation" involved in this clause, the cases which he subsequently cited to this House involving English precedents talked of "obvious and gross conduct," and the clause we see before us is a clause that refers to "obvious and gross repudiation."

If the Attorney General has any knowledge of English precedent that deals with obvious and gross repudiation of a relationship, I haven't heard it. I think this is a very dubious kind of element to be raising in our law and I would simply like to see it deleted.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: In reference to the member for Carleton East's reference to section 69(1)(b), which she points out allows the court to ask for evidence, again inherent in that is that the evidence must be related to a relevant issue. The conduct, in my respectful submission, could only be considered relevant if it is listed in section 69(1)(a). One of the illustrations that I gave to the member and I appreciate her concern—is, for example, a dependant might for example cause the death of the deceased and it may not be during cohabitation, and that—I think it's trite to say that that would amount to a rather gross or obvious repudiation of the relationship.

I think what we're concerned about here, and I appreciate we're going to have confront this issue in relation to the family law reform bill, but when we're dealing with an application for support of a dependant, we are, in effect, being asked to deprive the testator, the deceased, of his or her wishes in relation to who are the named beneficiaries. The clause is in the interest of the named beneficiaries who should not be prejudiced by an application brought on behalf of someone who qualifies technically as a dependant, but who by reason of their conduct should not be in a position to interfere with the expressed wishes of the testator.

Last week I referred to some English authorities, hoping to assist the members of the Legislature in demonstrating the very narrow area that this language was intended to deal with so far as the nature of conduct is concerned. We're satisfied that we're only dealing with conduct in the most extreme cases.

Ms. Gigantes: Extreme repudiation. That's a difference.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That's right—but in the most extreme cases. I think we're dealing with a much narrower area than the area I know is of some concern to the member for Carleton East in relation to our family law reform bill, where we are talking about issues between living spouses.

Here we're dealing with a deceased spouse who has indicated his or her wishes with respect to who their beneficiaries are going to be. We're simply concerned that the court be given the opportunity to deprive a technical dependant of making a claim on an estate and therefore possibly defeating the interests of the designated beneficiaries. Someone who, considering these circumstances—and we're talking about pretty extreme circumstances—should not be given that right.

I don't think I can assist the member for Carleton East or anybody else in indicating why we support the section as it stands and are not prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. Will there be any further discussion on this section?

Ms. Gigantes: I would like to say—

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. I believe there was an agreement with the House leaders that the division would take place on Bill 22 at this time. So we will continue the debate on this particular section when the committee again reconvenes.

Call in the members.

The committee divided on Mr. O'Neil's motion to amend section 125 of the Act, as set out in section 3 of the bill, which was negatived on the following vote:

Ayes 22; nays 73.

The committee divided on the question that sections 137 to 140, inclusive, of the Act, as set out in section 3, stand as part of the bill, which was negatived on the following vote:

Ayes 44; nays 51.

Mr. Chairman: These sections of the Act shall be struck from the bill.

Section 3, as amended, agreed to.

Bill 22, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendments, and asked for leave to sit again.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion: Bill 22, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the House adjourned at 10:40 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1977

The House met at 2 p.m.
Prayers.

QUEBEC DOCTORS

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege to clarify a statement attributed to me in a Globe and Mail editorial this morning and in an article yesterday.

Mr. Deans: Is somebody saying nasty things about you?

Mr. Speaker: Can we have some order, please? May I remind you that this is a point of privilege?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I was quoted as having said, and I quote from the article and the editorial: "I don't know if we will have to restrict the flow of doctors from Quebec." My remarks were taken out of context and then further distorted in the headline to imply that I may restrict the flow of doctors.

The oversupply of physicians is a current concern of most provinces, including Quebec. It was that concern which I was addressing. You will recall that my predecessor succeeded in getting some federal immigration controls implemented on physician manpower. The subject was again addressed at the recent federal-provincial health ministers' conference in Ottawa last June, where it was agreed to examine and strengthen the mechanisms for ensuring that no post is offered to a potential immigrant physician if a suitable Canadian is available. Further, there was agreement that there is an oversupply of physicians in Canada. No specifics have as yet been addressed as to how this problem will be solved.

When I speak of the flow of physicians, I refer to the production as well as the supply, which includes the flow into and out of medical schools, and the necessity for inter-provincial agreement in this area. Obviously, then, this is a matter on which further discussion will take place between the provinces.

I am a Canadian first, and my federalist stand is well known. I have addressed the subject of national unity on more than one occasion—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, what a splendid chap, a splendid fellow—if ever one wanted a Canadian, there he stands.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Thank you very much. The suggestion that I would discriminate against any other Canadian is as offensive as it is ill-considered.

Mr. Lewis: Are you going to compile a dossier on Doyle?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

BRUCE NUCLEAR PLANT

Hon. J. A. Taylor: On Tuesday, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) suggested that I resign because he alleged—

Mr. Deans: We accept, we accept.

Hon. J. A. Taylor:—that I stood in this House "day after day" declining to provide information in regard to the Lummus construction of the Bruce heavy water plants.

Mr. Lewis: Good Lord, do you have to give credibility to his every statement?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Further, he has stated and impugned on three occasions, October 17, October 18, and Tuesday last, that I, as Minister of Energy, was not familiar with the facts concerning this matter.

Firstly, as Hansard will document, I have answered every question put to me by the Leader of the Opposition, or by any other member of this House, in regard to the construction, costs and progress of the Bruce heavy water plants. Twice on October 17 the Premier advised the Leader of the Opposition that I was both fully knowledgeable about the matter and quite prepared to provide the information.

In his arrogant assumption of absolute knowledge, the Leader of the Opposition declined to ask me about construction of the Bruce heavy water plants.

Mr. Lewis: You must be on the Liberal Party payroll.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: On Tuesday, October 18, the opposition leader did raise the Lummus-Bruce matter and I was able to report that the board of Ontario Hydro—

Mr. Reid: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: There is nothing out of order. It's a ministerial statement and the hon. minister may continue uninterrupted. I would like to remind hon. members that everybody in this chamber has a right to be heard. This is a legitimate way in which the minister can explain the policies of his ministry.

Mr. McClellan: Especially ministers.

Mr. Speaker: Do him the courtesy of allowing him to be heard.

Mr. Sargent: He is being very controversial.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: On Tuesday, October 18, the opposition leader did raise the Lummus-Bruce matter and I was able to report that the board of Ontario Hydro had reviewed the entire matter on the previous day; that Hydro had authorized Lummus' completion of plant B; and had conditionally approved Lummus' continuance of their contract on plant D, subject to review on August 1 next.

I confirmed that the initial $1 billion estimate of 1975 had been revised this past summer to $1.3 billion. Further, I clarified for this House that approximately half of the increased cost was within the Lummus area of responsibility and the other half was within the area of Hydro's responsibility and I offered to provide additional information if he so requested. The Leader of the Opposition then erroneously concluded that Hydro's costs on this project had increased by 100 per cent, an arithmetic error which I was obliged to correct.

Mr. Sargent: How much was it?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: In reply to further questions from the leader of the third party, I further elaborated the decisions of the Hydro board on the previous day.

Mr. Lewis: What is this third party stuff?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: On Tuesday, October 25, the Leader of the Opposition asked whether I would give my approval that the board chairman of Ontario Hydro provide information that he had requested personally of the Hydro chairman. I replied that the Hydro chairman did not require my approval and that I had every confidence that the information requested of the chairman would be forthcoming. Moreover, regardless of my approval, which was neither necessary nor requested, the Leader of the Opposition had, in fact, been in repeated communication with the Hydro chairman between August 9 and October 18, when he profusely thanked the chairman of Ontario Hydro for his helpfulness and frankness.

Mr. Lewis: Obsequiously—not just profusely.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: But let the record show that the Leader of the Opposition was never, by letter or by phone or in person, in contact with either myself or the Hydro chairman prior to August 9 in regard to the construction of the Bruce heavy water plants.

Mr. Reid: This is a statement.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Let the record show—and I table the correspondence—that in April, 1976, Hydro was well aware of problems at Bruce.

Mr. S. Smith: Were you?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Moreover, tradesmen engaged on the project made allegations of inefficiency—

Mr. Sargent: When are you going to resign?

Hon. J. A. Taylor:—and my predecessor, the member for Don Mills (Mr. Timbrell) pursued these allegations with the Hydro chairman. It was in May, 1976, in consequence of Hydro's own audit procedures and those allegations, that Ontario Hydro ordered a complete review of the Lummus-Bruce project.

Let the record show that in July this year I discussed at length with the Hydro chairman the allegations then raised by a former Lummus cost control employee. On August 9, in furtherance of these discussions, I wrote to the Hydro chairman asking for a full report on this matter.

If the Leader of the Opposition had bothered to contact either myself or the Hydro chairman prior to his press conference on July 25, he might have saved himself the embarrassment of such irresponsible claims as "Hydro is uninterested in controlling costs," or that Hydro should have built the heavy water plants itself, let alone his need to apologize for the intemperate attack on the Lummus-Bruce labour force which was made at that press conference.

Mr. Ruston: Is this a budget speech?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Indeed, it was not until two weeks after he bought cheap headlines with rumour, innuendo, imputation and allegation that the Leader of the Opposition bothered to write the chairman of Hydro to find out what he, the Leader of the Opposition, was talking about.

Mr. Lewis: Tom Coleman never wrote this kind of stuff for me, I will tell you.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: This letter of August 9 gratuitously began by thanking the Hydro chairman for "Hydro's rapid response to my questions of last month."

Mr. Conway: We want Norris Whitney.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: This puzzled the Hydro chairman, who had not previously had any correspondence or conversation with the Leader of the Opposition. It was subsequently revealed that the opposition leader was referring to the flow of questions and answers emanating from press conferences.

First the Leader of the Opposition milks headlines with rumour and allegations. A fortnight later he makes his first attempt to confirm or substantiate his charges. Then, having been in communication with the chairman of Hydro for more than two months—

Mr. Ruston: Are you going to resign?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —without ever contacting me on the matter, he asks my authorization for Hydro's response. At the same time he abuses the time of this House by pursuing answers here that he had already received from Hydro.

Mr. S. Smith: Do you actually believe what you are saying?

Mr. Breithaupt: What are you doing?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: In documentation of all this, I am tabling herewith my letter of August 9 to the chairman of Ontario Hydro and the chairman's comprehensive reply to me of August 26, together with seven documentary attachments. I may say that I would have provided this correspondence at any time, but the Leader of the Opposition, in assuming his own breadth of knowledge and my ignorance of the matter, did not bother to ask.

Further, let me table a copy of the Leader of the Opposition's letter to the Hydro chairman on August 9, asking elaboration of press conference replies, together with the Hydro chairman's reply one day later.

Next, I table the Leader of the Opposition's letter of September 16 requesting a copy of the Hydro-Lummsus agreement on the Bruce heavy water plants, together with Hydro's compliance, which was hand-delivered on September 29.

Further, let the record show that the Leader of the Opposition met with the Hydro chairman, at the latter's invitation, for one hour and 30 minutes on the afternoon of October 13 to discuss the Lummsus-Bruce matter. It was at this meeting that the opposition leader asked further questions which Hydro staff are now in the process of responding to. I table herewith the board chairman's memorandum of that meeting.

And further, let the record show that on October 18, the Leader of the Opposition wrote again to the Hydro chairman, thanking him for his hospitality, acknowledging "the helpful discussions," appreciating the chairman's "frankness," and stating that it was "our desire to scrutinize Hydro . . . not to attack you personally."

Mr. S. Smith: That's right.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Since this correspondence clearly refutes the opposition leader's entirely unwarranted criticism of my discharge of ministerial responsibilities, I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the Leader of the Opposition be obliged to withdraw his statements, allegations and imputations of October 17, October 18 and October 25—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, you are too much. You are just too much.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —with regard to my conduct in this House—

Mr. Lewis: Why are you doing this? Why are you setting him up?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —my knowledge of the Lummsus-Bruce matter and my discharge of ministerial responsibilities in that regard.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Give him a radio program.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Moreover, I ask that the Leader of the Opposition acknowledge the willingness of both myself and the chairman of Hydro to provide all relevant information requested. And finally I ask that the Leader of the Opposition apologize to this House for the abuse of its time in asking questions for which he had already had the answers.

Mr. Cunningham: That was silly.

Mr. Reid: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I don't know that there is anything out of order.

Mr. Reid: You haven't heard me yet.

Mr. Speaker: I have checked our standing orders. Obviously the only order of business that has been heard up until now is statements by the ministry. We have heard a statement by the Minister of Energy that seems to me to be four-square within ministerial statements. You can disagree with the content, if you wish, and you will take up your objections to it at the proper time. It is not a point of order.

Mr. Reid: Abuse of the House, that is what it is.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations has a statement.

Mr. Reid: It is to our advantage to hear him; I will tell you that.

[2:15]

RENT REVIEW

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Jean Chretien, federal Minister of Finance, announced last week that the basic guideline on wage increases will be six per cent for the coming year.

As the minister responsible for the rent review program, I am concerned about the effect this guideline will have on the maximum permitted increase in rent. Under the provisions of section 5(1) of the Residential Premises Rent Review Act, the maximum permitted increase in rent is the lesser of eight per cent or the rate of increase as determined under the Anti-Inflation Board guidelines, which uses the consumer price index, or any lesser amount as may be prescribed by regulation.

Because of the present upward trend of this index, the maximum percentage increase allowable under the Act would, in all likelihood, be eight per cent, while wages are frozen at six per cent.

In view of this, the government of Ontario is concerned with the protection it is giving tenants for the remainder of the rent review program. For this reason, we have today passed a regulation to limit maximum rent increases allowable, without rent review, to the same percentage as the federal guideline on wages, which is six per cent, effective immediately.

Mr. Breithaupt: We had an election over that.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you, thank you. Maybe we should fight an election over it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We feel that this action is necessary to protect the interests of the tenants of the province on such a basic necessity as accommodation.

Mr. Lewis: You are too much.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. S. Smith: This was worth an election a few months ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We also appreciate the hardships this could cause for some landlords.

Mr. Reid: Called a flip-flop.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We acknowledge, specifically, that the program impacts most severely on small landlords, especially those with four units or less.

Mr. S. Smith: It is our amendment to the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Premier (Mr. Davis) and the Leader of the Opposition de cease? Desist! Desist!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: The only person who is out of order is the Speaker, and he has taken note of it.

Will the hon. Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations continue with his statement? And will hon. members of the House do him the courtesy of hearing him?

Mr. Deans: What he was telling the Premier was to drop dead.

Mr. Lewis: That is the first public sign of the Speaker's party affiliation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, we feel that this action is necessary to protect the interests of the tenants of the province on such a basic necessity as accommodation. We also appreciate the hardship this could cause for some landlords.

We acknowledge, specifically, that the program impacts most severely on small landlords, especially those with four units or less, I have, therefore, directed the executive director and staff of the rent review program to give high priority to applications from these small landlords.

For all persons applying to rent review, we will assure that there will be quick access to our program and cases will be dealt with efficiently.

I want to reaffirm the government's intention to achieve an alternative to the rent review program by way of a complete package of tenant protection, while recognizing that the government's stated position is to withdraw from government-controlled rental programs.

Mr. Sargent: In other words, you called the election for nothing.

INDUSTRIAL MILK REGULATION

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I had intended to make a somewhat lengthy statement today on the Canada bulk conversion program for industrial milk, and the objections which have been raised by the Old Order Amish. However, Mr. Speaker, the Amish have today launched an appeal to cabinet for exemptions from the conversion regulations. Under the circumstances, and in fairness to them, I am announcing that implementation of the regulation which was to have taken place November 1 will be postponed until cabinet has reached a decision on this appeal.

Mr. Lewis: You should change your policy now, today.

Hon. W. Newman: The member's party was contacted, and they made their own decisions. It's on the record.

Mr. Lewis: Don't even meet about it, just rescind the regulation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, the Minister of Agriculture and Food has completed his statement, I take it.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You're going to decease too, if you're not careful.

Mr. MacDonald: There is going to be a mass burial around here.

Mr. Martel: Just getting rid of some of the dead wood.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, it was the intent of the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) to make a statement today relative to a statement made by the federal Minister of Transport. Unfortunately, he's been detained at a function in his riding and I'm wondering if at this time we could take note of that, and once he returns we could have consent of the House to revert to statements, in order for him to make his statement when he gets here.

Mr. Speaker: Is it understood that the hon. Minister of Transportation and Communications will be heard with a ministerial statement on his arrival, and if it happens during the question period we'll deduct that amount of time from the question period.

Mr. Foulds: Add it.

Motion agreed to.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Mr. S. Smith: I will direct a question to the Minister of Energy. What was the price that Ontario Hydro contracted to buy uranium for from Gulf Minerals Limited in 1974? Will he now confirm that Ontario Hydro, in fact, paid $2 more per pound than even the recommended cartel price for uranium, and what escalation factor has been added to the base price due to the provisions of this contract? Will he tell us exactly how this contract will affect hydro costs to consumers?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: The contract that was entered into between Hydro and Gulf Minerals in 1974 does not provide for delivery until 1980. So that, first of all, there will be no impact on current hydro rates. The base price at that time was $12.50 a pound. If you carry that forward in terms of the escalation clause, because the contract provided for escalation, based on increases in costs of materials and wages, royalties and taxes as well—

Mr. Kerrio: Profit.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —that price, if the uranium was being delivered today, would be $17.50 a pound. I remind the Leader of the Opposition that the current world price is $42 a pound in American dollars.

There isn't any impact on hydro users at the present time, and I would expect that these contractual arrangements would, in fact, provide lower hydro costs for hydro consumers in the future because of the arrangements that were made in 1974 for deliveries of uranium between 1980 and 1985.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary question: Would the minister direct his attention to my first question which was whether in fact Ontario Hydro paid $2 a pound more than even the recommended cartel prices at the time? We're all well aware that by buying in 1974, they are doing better than had they bought in 1980 for 1980 delivery. But we're talking about the conditions prevailing in 1974. Can the minister also tell us whether anyone in the Ontario government approved that contract, and will he table the contract?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: May I say that according to the Nuclear Exchange Corporation—there is an index, as you may or may not know—the world price varied between $7 and $15 a pound in 1974. Again, I repeat that the price wouldn't impact—

Mr. S. Smith: Cartel price.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —because the delivery hasn't been made yet. It won't be made until 1980. I don't have the information on whether there was an order in council in connection with the execution of that contract. I would surmise that there may very well have been. I would be happy to get that information and, as a matter of fact, I invite the Leader of the Opposition to pursue the matter as much as he wishes with the chairman of Ontario Hydro.

Mr. Mancini: What are you doing there? You're the minister for it.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: The hon. member is at liberty to do that, as he very well knows.

Mr. Conway: You're redundant.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Maybe he has that information already.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Carleton East with a supplementary.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, it's not a supplementary really, except in the sense the minister did not—

Mr. Speaker: If it's not a supplementary don't ask it.

Ms. Gigantes: That being the case, Mr. Speaker, it is a supplementary. I'd like to ask the Minister of Energy whether he will table the contract.

Mr. Lewis: Come on. That's the crucial question.

Mr. Breithaupt: We already asked that.
Interjections.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: As I indicated to the Leader of the Opposition, I will get particulars of the contract and will—

Mr. S. Smith: Table the contract.

Mr. Grande: Table it.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: As far as I'm concerned, I'd be happy—

Mr. S. Smith: But?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —I'd be happy to table the contract—

Mr. S. Smith: You are the Minister of Energy, unfortunately.

Mr. Lewis: Well then, do it.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —as we table all the contracts. However—

An hon. member: No, just one.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —I am not giving my undertaking today to do that. I will pursue that and give a reply to the hon. member another day.

Mr. Lewis: Come on.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: While the Minister of Energy, in charge of energy in this province and representing the government that apparently approved the contract, is deciding whether some other force or high permits him to table the contract, could he also at the same time simply answer the question, yes or no, is that contract for $2 more a pound than even the recommended cartel price at the time?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Your Prime Minister says there is no cartel.

Mr. Martel: Say yes or no.

Mr. Kerrio: Your Tories are talking differently in Ottawa.

An hon. member: He's not sure.

Mr. Ruston: Always passing the buck.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. Leader of the Opposition has asked a question. If members want an answer, please allow the minister to make a reply.

Mr. Eakins: Yes or no?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: First of all, Mr. Speaker, may I clarify for the House that I did not approve that contract. I have some knowledge in connection with the figures, which I've given to the House today. I also indicated earlier in reply that I'm not aware as to whether or not there was an order in council in regard to the authorization of that contract.

I undertook to pursue that matter and also to pursue the matter in terms of the request for tabling.

Mr. Lewis: What does he mean "to pursue the matter?" Supplementary: Why in this Legislature must there also be a touch of conspiracy whenever uranium is discussed? Why can the minister not guarantee today to direct Hydro—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, come on, Stephen.

Mr. Lewis: That's true. Why can the minister not table the contract that this government, through Hydro, entered into? Why is the minister equivocating?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, there's no conspiracy except in the mind of the member for Scarborough West.

Hon. Mr. Davis: This government didn't enter into a contract.

Mr. Lewis: Sure, you did. Ontario Hydro did.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I've been open and frank about these matters. I don't think there is anything to hide. What I've indicated today is that—

Mr. Foulds: We want to find out if there is anything to hide.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —because of the purchase arrangements of Ontario Hydro, and the facts make this apparent, the cost of electrical energy in Ontario is lower because of that.

Mr. Warner: Table the contract.

Interjections.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: The Premier told the House the other day he would think about putting before the House the contract pending between Denison Mines and Hydro, a $1 billion contract for uranium.

Mr. Yakabuski: The member wouldn't be in business if it wasn't for Kincardine.

Mr. Sargent: I didn't ask the minister this last time because I didn't think he had any answers, but does he have any answers to this point: Is the minister going to bring this pending $1 billion contract before the House, or is he going to allow the negotiations to go on, or what point are we at now? Is it in the hopper now, or what's going on?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: If the hon. member had asked me that before, I would have responded similarly. The contract has not been finalized as yet. That contract will go to cabinet and an order in council will, in fact, authorize that contract when it's settled. At that time, a determination will be made in terms of tabling the contract or examination of it by anyone. Until then, I don't think it's accurate to speculate in regard to its terms.

Mr. Sargent: Does the Premier understand what the minister is saying?

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary, just to clarify this point: The minister has conceded that a contract like that signed by Hydro in 1974, and now the one under negotiation and hopefully approaching finalization with Denison Mines, has finally to be authorized by an order in council.

Mr. Lewis: Precisely.

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the minister not table the contract as quickly as the order in council has been passed?

Mr. Lewis: That's right. It's your contract.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister can do that now, can he not, for the 1974 contract, and will he assure us that he will do it as soon as he has finalized the Denison contract?

Mr. Lewis: You are playing the cartel game. That is what you are doing.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, if the member for York South had been attentive, what I said was that I did not authorize the 1974 contract.

Mr. MacDonald: The government did.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I was not Minister of Energy at that time, I was not in the cabinet at that time—

Mr. Grande: You won't be much longer either.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —and I do not know whether an order in council authorized the execution of that contract.

Mr. MacDonald: You do. You are hiding it. You should be deceased.

[2:30]

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I said I would determine that, I would find that out for the hon. member. So don't jump to confusion.

Mr. MacDonald: I can't match the minister's.

Interjections.

Mr. Reed: Supplementary: Considering that so far in this discourse the minister has not answered the original question about the $2 over, and considering the publicity that has been connected with this contract in recent weeks, would the minister support the idea of having this question examined by the anticipated select committee on Ontario Hydro?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I have no objection to any of this being examined.

Mr. Conway: I think the minister should be examined—and not by this House.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Again, the question which has been repeated seems to assume that the price to be paid by Hydro on delivery of uranium in 1980 will exceed the world price by $2 a pound. What I'm saying is that is not the fact. There is a base price that is provided for uranium which, of course, escalates year by year. If we look at what the price is today—we can't look at a base price; we must look at the price per pound—we will find that the price per pound today is in the same area of $17 a pound. What I am pointing out is how can you say that is $2 above the world price when the world price of uranium today is $42 per pound in terms of American dollars?

Mr. Breithaupt: World price?

Mr. S. Smith: The cartel recommended price.

Mr. Speaker: We've had sufficient supplementaries on this. The hon. Leader of the Opposition has a question.

Mr. Lewis: On the basis of his performance today, does the minister not think he should resign—in the public interest?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: No, that doesn't require an answer.

LAYOFF OF NICKEL WORKERS

Mr. S. Smith: Regarding, once again, the matter of Inco layoffs, has the Premier attempted to obtain an explanation from his Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) or from Inco executives as to why the layoffs were not discussed in advance with the Ontario government when it is reported that Inco was meeting with the federal government to discuss contingency plans two weeks before the news was made public, as it was so dramatically just a little while ago?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I really can't speculate on why or even if, in fact, discussions were taking place between Inco and the government of Canada. I know that the information that was given to me, came on that Wednesday afternoon about 4:30 to 5 o'clock. While I read a great deal in the press about many issues, I really haven't had it confirmed to me that in fact Inco discussed it with some federal officials two weeks prior to that date.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of a supplementary, accepting the Premier's answer, of course, and in view of the article in the Financial Post, which says, "Trudeau says Labour Minister John Munro began discussing 'contingency measures with the Inco people' two weeks before the news broke," can the Premier assure the House that he will look into this matter and find out why he was not consulted earlier, and can he tell us what steps he will take to be sure that he is consulted from now on before any major layoffs of this kind occur in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am not going to raise any legal problems that emerge in situations of this kind. I expressed my concern at the time that we hadn't had somewhat longer notice. I am not sure actually what would have resulted by us knowing a few days earlier. A concern expressed by some involves what will be found under our own securities legislation. When matters occur of this significance, that will have some impact on the financial community, our legislation requires that disclosure is to be made by way of a public disclosure. This is so that no one is privy to information for a period of time which might give that person or persons some advantage in terms of the market or share value of that particular organization.

I think in general terms that is very wise legislation. If memory serves me correctly, some members opposite even voted for it. This may come as a surprise to the Leader of the Opposition, but the concept of disclosure I think is relevant. I will endeavour to confirm for the Leader of the Opposition whether there were discussions which indicated the extent of the layoff, or that there were in fact to be layoffs, between Mr. Munro and officials of Inco some two weeks before it was made public.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary, if I may, Mr. Speaker: In the context of the Premier's discussions with Inco, can he report anything further to the House?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I really had anticipated this would have been the first question but we all have our priorities I guess.

Mr. Laughren: You know what your priorities are.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I must say that we had a very lengthy meeting this morning.

Mr. S. Smith: I would have thought there would have been a statement.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I say with great respect, we met until nearly 1 o'clock. It has required a great deal of attention on the part of a number of us, and I quite genuinely anticipated, in the light of the interest expressed, and I think properly so, that the first question would have been, "Is there anything to report?" So I am now answering.

We had our discussions on this matter that gives us all very great concern. I raised with the officials of Inco some of those questions that have been raised by the members opposite, some that we raised as a result of certain press reports and so on. There is a meeting scheduled tomorrow morning in Ottawa. I believe that either three or four ministers from here will be attending that meeting. I have personally invited, I believe it's the chairman of the region, the mayor and union representatives to meet with me on Monday morning. I don't want to come to any conclusions as yet.

The one point I think is essential—I have expressed this to some members opposite and I know what politics is all about—but I just will not be part of any approach which might raise any level of expectation in the minds of those people who are very directly affected that is not realistic.

I think it is also important to point out to the Leader of the Opposition and to the leader of the New Democratic Party that part of my responsibility as Premier of this province also has to relate not just to the several hundreds of employees whose employment will be terminated but to the security and the protection of the jobs of those 14,000 people who continue to be employed by the largest nickel producer in the world.

If I can offer any advice—and I hope it's understood in the way I am suggesting it—I hope my discussions with Inco have been along these lines. Inco is geographically located here, and there are thousands of Canadian shareholders of that organization and an awful lot of them with 100 shares or less who are very dependent on the future of that company. There are also people in the money markets and elsewhere who are watching pretty carefully the discussions that are going on and what is being said.

I will not in any way create any impression of false hope in terms of those specific jobs. But the one thing I was reassured about this morning, the part that to me is important in the long-run, was the assurance from the chairman of the board of Inco—and I know there will be people in Sudbury who are concerned about six months from now; a year from now, and two years from now—his very firm statement to me that any suggestion on any press speculation that Inco was moving out and that it did not have confidence in the Sudbury basin, the work force and its ability to compete in the world market was totally and utterly ludicrous. Inco is in a position to be and will continue to be a viable operation, providing thousands of jobs in the Sudbury basin.

At the same time, it is evident there are bright spots. I am sure this will emerge in the discussions which I hope will be held in a constructive way and in a way that is worthy of the members of this House because Inco will come before the standing committee. They will not need to be subpoenaed or summonsed. They will come because it is my view they want an opportunity to share with members opposite the problems with which they must contend.

There are one or two bright spots, not as they relate to Sudbury, but in terms of the potential of job opportunities for those people who are directly affected. Inco has already had inquiries—these are very bona fide inquiries—as to the availability of men who will no longer be employed by Inco. There will be discussions between the union and the company as to the questions of seniority, if a person does leave the employ of Inco to go to work somewhere else for a period of time. These are matters that I think properly should be discussed between the union and the company.

I hope the members for Sudbury (Mr. Germa), Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) and Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) will understand that I am not saying what I am going to say next as being a solution in the terms of the problems of Sudbury. I am also concerned, as we all are, as to the job opportunities that are available for those people who have been affected. The company has already had requests for some 400 people for immediate employment—at least between now and March, but some of it immediate from Syncrude, some 280 at Rio Algom, some 130 at Denison, and some from Cominco. In fact, there is a fairly long list which I think at this point in time is far from complete as to job opportunities that will be available to those employees.

I also discussed with Inco the situation at Thompson, Manitoba, not in any way interfering with that great new government that is now there—

Mr. Swart: Transitional.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —but on the basis that the rate of attrition at Thompson apparently—

Mr. S. Smith: This is a statement.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am trying to anticipate as many supplementaries by trying to tell the members all I can. The Leader of the Opposition says that this is a statement, Mr. Speaker. I will be guided by you and I will sit down at your suggestion any time you say. I am really just trying to share as much as I can with you.

Mr. S. Smith: It is appreciated, but it should be a statement.

Hon. Mr. Davis: All right, all right. If the Leader of the Opposition thinks I am taking too long, I can't help it.

Mr. S. Smith: I didn't say that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I discussed the Thompson situation; they initiated it. Apparently the attrition rate at Thompson is much higher than it is in Sudbury. I believe the company is prepared to suggest to the union that there will be jobs in Manitoba. I don't say this is palatable to a number of the workers and I am not going to argue this, except to say there will be jobs. There will be over 800 jobs—I may be low on that figure—available over that period of time in Manitoba through attrition. The employees of Inco in Sudbury will be given the first opportunity to move to those jobs.

This doesn't solve the problem of Sudbury. But, at least to the extent one can be optimistic at any of these situations, there are job opportunities in other places. From our standpoint, because to me it makes sense, I hope that, in our meetings tomorrow, on Monday and at what other further meetings take place, the potential of Rio Algom and Denison is explored first and foremost, because I guess if one is being relocated it is better to be relocated 100 and some miles away rather than several hundred. From our standpoint we shall be prepared to do anything we can do to expedite those discussions or negotiations.

I will be getting further information for members of this House. As I say, the company is quite prepared to come before the standing resources development committee. I would like the understanding of the House that I would like the meetings tomorrow and Monday to be concluded to see if there is something new or perhaps something that might be included in the committee's deliberations, and some time early next week we would frame a resolution that would enable the standing resources development committee to deal with this issue in what I urge—and I say this most sincerely—be a constructive, appropriate way for members of this House.

I'm concerned about this year and I'm concerned about February, but I'm very concerned about two years from now and five years from now in terms of not only Sudbury but the perception of the mining industry, the perception of this province and this country in the outside world, because while we may not always like to deal in that way, the fact of the matter is we must.

I can assure the members of this House that other people are watching these discussions and these debates as closely as we are and I hope we approach these discussions with that in mind.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Since I agree with the Premier that the Sudbury basin is, in fact, competitive with the rest of the world and shall remain so, can he confirm that in his discussions with Inco the officials of Inco did, in fact, confirm with him—as is suggested in the Financial Post as well—that the Sudbury basin could produce nickel as cheaply, or more cheaply, as nickel being produced next year from Inco's plant in Indonesia for entry into the Japanese market?

Hon. Mr. Davis: These are matters of judgement, but certainly I gained the impression, and perhaps partially because I wanted to be persuaded, that in terms of Inco's competitive abilities, in terms of the work force, in terms of the technology, in terms of the plant that is available and in terms of the ore body itself, that Inco can compete effectively—maybe I'm a little prejudiced—with any other part of the world. That may not be totally accurate—

Mr. S. Smith: Absolutely. I agree with you. You are right.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —but certainly can compete with Indonesia.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: Is the Premier not telling us, in his own inimitable fashion, that, in fact, Inco is not prepared to alleviate the problem of the job loss to the Sudbury area—in other words, is not prepared to stop the layoff? Furthermore, did the Premier put to the company the request by the union which would alleviate the problem to some extent, did he support the position of the union, and what was the response of the company?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I had a list of some 10 or 11 matters that were raised, primarily, I think, by the union in the discussions yesterday. I understand that two or three of those matters are presently under discussion between the company and the union. I would anticipate that these matters will be part of the discussions tomorrow and with me again on Monday. I gave to the company the best information that I had that emerged from the discussion yesterday. I think there were some 10 or 11 points—they may not all have come from the unions—and suggested that these be considered, and that I expected these same points would be raised with me on Monday.

So I think it's fair to assume—unless I didn't have knowledge of all of the matters that were raised yesterday, and I think I did—that these matters were placed before the company in our discussions this morning.

Mr. Haggerty: Supplementary: I'd like to direct a question to the Premier concerning his remarks about the meeting this morning with Inco. I believe he said he was going to have a meeting next week with the mayor of Sudbury and union officials. Would he not include the same representation from the city of Port Colborne and from the local union at the Inco refinery at Port Colborne? I can tell the Premier that the layoff of personnel at the Inco refinery in Port Colborne is just as important there as it is at Sudbury or any other community in Ontario, because it has reduced the work force there by 30 per cent. I would suggest consideration should be given to those groups.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether at this moment I can tell the hon. member that I can arrange it so that they are part of Monday morning's discussions. But if the hon. member is asking me whether I would meet with the mayor of Port Colborne and union representation from that community, the answer to that, of course, is yes.

Whether we can schedule that, or whether it makes sense to have the two at the same time; and whether there is any different set of circumstances whereby they might prefer to have a separate discussion, are things I will explore. But the hon. member can rest assured that I would be more than prepared to meet with representation from that community.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary; the hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. Germa: On the long-term projections for the future of the city of Sudbury, is the Premier aware that Inco now has two ships on the Pacific Ocean exploring the seabed nodules and that they are scheduled to start coming ashore in 1983? Was it part of his discussion as to what will be the future of Sudbury when seabed nodules start coming ashore?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It was impossible to cover every area this morning. I would only state to the hon. member that while there is a certain exploration going on—and I think this is something that would be very appropriate for the committee to discuss with Inco—the impression I have is that no matter what further exploration is going on, their commitment to the Sudbury basin—and we are probably talking about a $2-billion capital investment; in fact in today's dollars, it will be substantially higher than that, and that is already based in the Sudbury area.

I just repeat that this is an area that I think is worthy of discussion. Without knowing the first thing about it from a technical standpoint, I think one has to be optimistic that the demand for nickel will continue to increase over a period of time at—who knows—four, five or six per cent a year. Obviously new sources are going to be found over the next 10, 15 or 20 years but, in this total process, the plant—and, just as importantly, the work force—in Sudbury is such that it will remain competitive.

I think it is a very valid question. I don't think it is immediate in terms of the present situation, but perhaps it could have some impact in the longer term although, if the hon. member wants an uneducated guess, I would say, knowing very little about it, that it would not affect the long-term prospects for the community of Sudbury.

Mr. Speaker: It had been agreed that we would hear a ministerial statement from the Minister of Transportation and Communications when he arrived. We will hear that now and I will add this time to the question period.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

URBAN TRANSPORTATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Hon. Mr. Snow: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. members of the House for agreeing to hear this statement at this time.

I have now received a letter from the Hon. Otto Lang, Minister of Transport, Canada, informing me that the federal government has approved an urban transportation assistance program. It is one of the most unresponsive and disappointing transportation programs put forward by the federal government in years. Because this new proposal seriously affects Ontario's plans for transportation development, I would like to take this opportunity to outline the situation for the members.

Over the past three years the federal government has indicated that it would be willing to support the development of urban public transportation. These were not casual or "maybe" commitments. They were public statements of the federal government's intent to give its full support to this important program. In fact, in 1974, just prior to the last federal election, they promised $100 million for this purpose. They repeated their expression of support again in 1975. In fact, I believe it was included in two Throne Speeches.

Specifically, Ontario had verbal assurances that they would share in the financing of 80 bi-level coaches, soon to be delivered for GO Transit, and in the cost of the Toronto transportation terminal redevelopment project which covers improvements to Toronto Union Station and its rail corridor for both GO services and inter-city rail services.

Then in August, 1976, the federal government began to back away from their promises. Their first move was to propose the lumping of the urban transit related programs with the railway relocation and crossing programs within one fund. At that time I voiced my objections quite strongly, to both Mr. Lang and his colleague Mr. MacDonald, on the basis that it constituted a federal withdrawal from their commitment to the program.

Mr. Conway: Just Darcy's arithmetic.

Hon. Mr. Snow: At that time I also felt that we had reached a clear understanding that the two programs were totally different and should be funded separately. I also expressed my concern to Mr. Lang that the federal government's hesitant attitude placed the entire Toronto transportation terminal project in jeopardy.

Last July 4, I again met with Mr. Lang to discuss this project and I came away with the impression that enough Ottawa funds would be available, over and above announced programs, to cover interim improvements to both commuter rail facilities at the Toronto terminal and to inter-city rail service.

It was my understanding that these funds were over and above allocations for rail relocation and grade crossings.

Ontario had agreed to pay for the Union Station improvements and the federal government agreed, in principle, to share the first stage of improvements to the rail corridor. The basis for the share costs was to be calculated on the percentage of use by—and the benefit to—inter-city rail services which share the use of the tracks with GO Transit.

We were so confident an agreement was inevitable that staff from my ministry met with their counterparts from the Ministry of Transport, Canada, and drew up the final details for the design and cost sharing. I concurred with the agreement that was reached at this level, and in discussions with Mr. Lang I felt certain that he did too.

Now I have received the federal government's latest proposal regarding the urban transportation assistance program. I find this rather stunning in light of our negotiations with Mr. Lang and his associates.

Mr. Mancini: You said that last time.

Hon. Mr. Snow: First of all, it reverts completely to the same proposals that were made last August; that is to lump urban transit related programs, and railway relocation and crossing programs in one fund.

Although Mr. Lang states that funds from the newly-announced program could be used for the Toronto transportation terminal project, this is unrealistic in light of Ontario's provincial and municipal needs for railway grade separations, which are required for the safety and convenience of the travelling public; and Mr. Lang is very much aware of this situation.

What they do propose is the allocation of $2 per capita to each province each year for five years. For Ontario, this will represent a total of $16.5 million per year. These funds are expected to cover: Rail grade separations on provincial and municipal roads; rail relocation studies; implementation of these studies; commuter rail assistance; urban transportation assistance.

As far as Ontario is concerned, this is expecting too much from too little.

Let me explain for a moment. In 1976 Ontario and its municipalities received over $14 million in federal assistance under the railway grade crossing program alone. In 1977, this current year, this assistance should total approximately $18 million. Priorities at the moment for new grade crossing work indicate that the province and its municipalities expected to apply for federal funding of approximately $20 million in 1978, $24.4 million in 1979 and $28.2 million in 1980. This totals approximately $72.6 million for a three-year period. This is for grade separation alone, and I must say this is a conservative figure. The new program would provide a maximum of only $49.5 million over the same three-year period.

[3:00]

Without any extensive discussion, it is obvious that this offer falls far short of the amount that Ontario will require to meet its needs for grade crossing work alone. Also, it is disappointing, because this is an area in which the federal government has participated for over 60 years, recognizing its responsibility for, and jurisdiction over, railways.

Obviously, the federal government assumes that the $16.5 million a year will also cover the implementation of rail relocation studies. We feel this is an unrealistic expectation. There are currently three of five proposed pilot studies approved and under way. We need an opportunity to examine the results of these studies before we can come up with a meaningful estimate of implementation costs. We have pressed for an opportunity to base funding responsibilities on a sound knowledge of the facts. Obviously we are not going to get it.

In the light of the present announcement, we will have to consult with the municipalities to review the advisability of continuing with the rail relocation studies now under way, and under these circumstances it would appear unlikely that any new studies could be initiated. As a consequence, the future of the railway relocation program is seriously in doubt, to the detriment of our urban transportation program, Ontario municipalities and the people of this province.

In addition, the grade separation program will be more difficult to administer. Federal approval on specific projects will still be required, and more municipal programs will have to be reviewed by the province to establish priority.

The new program announced by Mr. Lang is far too typical of the federal government. It does nothing to recognize the different needs and projects of each of the provinces. Perhaps the only good thing about the program is that it clarifies the federal government's commitment to urban transportation in this country, and that's no commitment at all.

Mr. S. Smith: Like your Edmonton commitment.

Hon. Mr. Snow: They must realize that the funds offered will mean that we will fall even further behind in improving rail grade crossing safety and efficiency.

Mr. O'Neil: Blame it on the feds.

Mr. Eakins: Darcy likes the budget.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Why has the federal government taken this stand? Mr. Lang states that it is fiscal restraint.

Mr. Conway: They read your charter.

Mr. S. Smith: That's what Darcy says about the municipalities too.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would ask the questions: Is it an attempt to save funds for other federal projects; is it an attempt to pull back from recognized areas of federal responsibility for rail; or is it just an attempt to bail Mr. Trudeau out of some of his 1974 election commitments prior to his next consultation with the people of Canada?

Mr. S. Smith: One hundred thousand jobs; two trees for one.

Mrs. Campbell: The Edmonton commitment.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I don't know which of these reasons it is.

Mr. Sweeney: They have been reading your budgets.

Hon. Mr. Snow: What we do know is that the federal government has committed itself to undertake a national upgrading of inter-city rail services through VIA, its newly established Crown corporation. By their own studies this undertaking will require the expenditure of billions of dollars.

I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that on the 90 miles of commuter rail operated by GO Transit there are twice as many passengers carried daily as on all the inter-city rail services throughout Canada, on over 14,000 miles of rail line.

Mr. Lewis: Incredible.

Hon. Mr. Snow: With this comparison the federal government's order of priorities defies understanding.

This announcement forces us to continue to go it alone on commuter and urban traffic transportation, and on improvements to Union Station. The need for these programs has been clearly demonstrated. Therefore, we see no other solution but to proceed, particularly with plans to improve Union Station and the rail corridor so that the bi-level cars will be able to operate as part of the GO Transit operation.

Mr. Haggerty: They go around corners.

Hon. Mr. Snow: But we will have to cut back significantly on our plans for this program. Therefore, I am authorizing the Toronto Area Transit Operating Authority to take the necessary action to carry out limited improvements. I expect to be in a position, in a few weeks, to give the House a detailed report on the extent and scheduling of these improvements.

These limited improvements will upgrade commuter rail service facilities at the Toronto terminal and the present GO rail network to allow for the introduction of the Richmond Hill and the Streetsville-Milton GO rail services. We also have a commitment to improve our GO Transit services along the lakeshore. As part of this improvement, 80 bi-level coaches will soon be delivered, at a cost of some $40 million. They will be going into service on this route in the very near future.

We have done it by ourselves, without a penny of assistance from the federal government.

Mrs. Campbell: For once.

Mr. Conway: Where were the cars made?

Mr. Haggerty: There should be a tunnel in Port Colborne.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Not that we wouldn't have welcomed federal assistance in a very innovative urban transportation program, but we did not get it, and it doesn't look as if we or the other provinces are going to get any real assistance in the future. The choice is very clear. We must proceed with the job of meeting the transportation needs of the people of Ontario as best we can, in spite of the federal government.

Mr. Conway: He sounds like Rene Levesque in a blue suit.

An hon. member: I think he's running federally.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are 28 minutes and 39 seconds left in the question period.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ANACONDA LAYOFF

Mr. Lewis: I will try to be brief. I have a question for the Premier. Given the accelerating pattern of layoffs in Ontario, of which Inco is only the most dramatic symptom, is it possible for the Premier to summon the energies of his office to intervene in the case of Anaconda, which, it appears at the moment, may die within a matter of days, causing unemployment for 870 workers.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The minister and the Ministry of Industry and Tourism are already dealing with that potential problem. We will keep the House informed as those discussions continue.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: Is there any realistic possibility at all of Atlantic Richfield selling the entire plant to someone else? Has the Premier heard whether or not the parent company has agreed to grant an extension, keeping the Canadian operation open while the ministry is in the process of negotiation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will be delighted to get as much up-to-date information as I can. I don't want to deal in rumour or speculation. As the leader of the New Democratic Party points out, this is not of the same size or magnitude as Inco, but it still involves the welfare of some 875 people.

Mr. Foulds: It is still pretty devastating.

Mrs. Campbell: It is symptomatic.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member for St. George can say it is symptomatic. I'm not going to argue that; nor will I be provoked by her, because I'm never provoked by her, but I could reply in a way that could be provocative.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier is certainly way-laid and distracted by her, however.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No.

Mr. Lewis: Can the Premier come back to the question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would never acknowledge being distracted, that would not be the right way to phrase it.

Mr. S. Smith: Attracted?

Mr. Wildman: We can see it, we don't have to be told.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What was I saying?

Mr. Martel: Where were you?

Mr. Samis: Would you prefer to be distracted or deceased?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have now been distracted by the leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Samis: You are worse than the Argonauts.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will get as much information as I can for him. The Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett)—

Mr. Foulds: Do you remember who it is?

Mr. Nixon: Do you remember where he is?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, yes. Not only do I remember who it is, but I tell you, thank heavens we have somebody working hard, at least at the provincial level, trying to stimulate the economy of this country and province abroad.

Mr. Sargent: Especially in Paris; that's not in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Now you're going to ask me about the new Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: Order; just answer the question please.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the hon. member would like to address a further question to the Minister of Industry and Tourism to the extent that he is in a position to—

Mr. Kerrio: The only action we've seen so far is to increase our debt.

Mr. Sargent: Send him back to Japan.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—share the information with the hon. member, I'm sure he would.

An hon. member: Send him somewhere.

Mr. Samis: In other words, you don't know.

Mr. Speaker: A new question?

Mr. Lewis: I think perhaps we should pursue this, because it's pretty imminent. I'll take the second question on this and drop the other I intended. Can I ask the Minister of Industry and Tourism what are the reasonable prospects for the survival of Anaconda? How many days are left for those 870 employees?

Mr. Breithaupt: It shouldn't affect the market much.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I will be meeting this afternoon with the president of the Canadian operation. I expect later on, if we have been able to confirm the meeting with the union representatives, to discuss jointly with management and union the prospects of this particular firm, Anaconda, staying in production.

I met yesterday with the federal Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Horner, and discussed with him the problem. He has been in touch with the president and chief executive officer of the parent company in the United States. We have not, at this time, secured a definite position—as I understand from Mr. Horner—by the parent firm. Mr. Horner was to be speaking with them again this morning, after they had a board of directors meeting to deal with the request that he'd been making as the federal minister.

I hope that tomorrow I might have something further to report to this House on this firm. May I only go on to say that there is a very great chance that a Canadian firm, or a consortium of firms, could very well come in to purchase Anaconda and its assets. We have no definite word on it, but there have been several inquiries. I understand that as recently as yesterday, and again this morning, they were negotiating the possibility of sale to two different firms.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Lakeshore has a supplementary.

Mr. Lawlor: A few days ago I asked the minister in this chamber as to whether he is prepared to lend his good offices to the formation in this country of such a consortium in order to keep that company alive.

Mr. Speaker: There is no question there.

Mr. Lawlor: What has he done about it?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Very clearly, the ministry has for some period of time been working with various purchasers from the province of Ontario, men who are presently in the automotive production industry and are some of the substantial purchasers of the copper and brass coming from that firm. We have worked very closely with them.

I have worked with Mr. Horner on the situation, as I indicated, yesterday. We'll meet with the union and with the management of the firm today, trying to arrive at some understanding as to the long-range potential for this company.

Mr. Lewis: What's the short range?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Let me not hesitate to say very clearly to this House how important this firm is to the automotive industry. If it goes out of operation, the copper and brass supply stops coming from Canadian companies—

Mr. Lewis: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Bennett:—and it will revert entirely to an American operation. So it is important from a long-range point of view that it remains here, both for the manufacturing of the product—brass and copper—and also for the 800-odd employees who are presently retained by this firm.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Algoma has a supplementary.

Mr. Wildman: Will the minister comment on the statement that has been made that perhaps the parent company doesn't want to sell the subsidiary because they don't want the competition for their upgraded plant in Buffalo?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I do not believe that statement to be correct at all. My understanding is that they've also set a price on the firm; which at the moment has not been made public, but in their negotiations with two or three firms they've indicated what the price would be.

Mr. Speaker: We'll have one final supplementary. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: The government has set a precedent in going into a consortium with $100 million towards Syncrude. Why couldn't the minister take the same approach for these failing industries to set up $500 million of our funds to protect the labour market of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, there's no indication at this time that there's any need of the government going in financially, because there has been a very apparent interest by others in the private sector who would like to purchase the assets.

May I conclude by saying in respect of the parent company in the United States, to answer the member's previous question, there are no conditions, to my understanding, which have been placed on the sale that would restrict whoever purchases the company, to limit them from exporting into the United States.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing has the answer to a previous question.

OHC LAND SALES

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh) asked a question on Monday last concerning land purchase in Kitchener. He inquired as to the price paid by Ontario Housing Corporation for 307 acres of Kitchener land, the cost of developing the land; and the prices we expect to charge when the land is placed on the market.

The land was purchased in three parcels between 1969 and 1971 for a total price of $1,001,162—$3,261 per acre.

We propose to develop the land in two phases. The first phase is currently being serviced in preparation for the marketing of the first 200 lots for construction in the spring. The land and development costs for the 126-acre first phase are as follows: Raw land, $410,575; appraisal, legal and other costs, $14,817; interest paid to August 31, 1977, $286,437; additional interest until all lots are marketed, estimated at $140,000; for a total of $851,829.

Development costs of $4,350,000 include internal services, park improvements, utilities, engineering costs, municipal imposts, OHC contribution to external services, et cetera. The combined land and development costs for the first phase amount to $5,201,829, the book value.

Based on today's market situation in Kitchener, but subject to the changes of the market over a two- or three-year period, we anticipate a return of about $8 million on this land. This will represent a difference of about $2,800,000 between book value and market value; and I remind the hon. members that we sell our land at the lower end of the market range. A private developer would expect to get a greater return on his land.

A number of members have criticized the fact that the government may benefit from the sale of this land; I am surprised they would attack a program that is not only self-sufficient but makes home ownership possible for a wider range of buyers.

It is anticipated that nearly half the first offering of the 200 lots will be made available for construction under the AHOP home-ownership program. In Kitchener, the maximum house price under this program is $37,000, so it should be apparent to our critics that the land is being made available at prices that will result in affordable housing.

I think it's also important to note that any financial benefits accruing to the government from this program help to offset the costs of other housing programs. OHC's net operating loss in 1976, for example, was in excess of $74 million.

I would also remind the hon. members that the federal government is our partner in some of these land transactions, and in some instances is certainly entitled to as much as 75 per cent of any benefits resulting from sales. I am unable to comply with the request for development cost figures relating to the second phase of development, which is still years off in the future.

We have not done an engineering design for the remaining land, and until this is carried out any estimates of cost would be purely speculation. I also wish to point out that we would not move to develop that land until such time as the municipality were prepared to incorporate it into its planning process.

Mr. Breaugh: Supplementary: Could the minister clarify for us; first, how much of the profit money will go to the federal government as opposed to the province of Ontario; and secondly, how he intends to clarify how that profit will be used for housing programs; or will it go into general revenue? Does he have an agreement from the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) to use that amount of money for specific housing programs?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: First, Mr. Speaker, I have not got a detailed breakdown as to what the federal involvement is in that particular land. I am not sure whether it is involved in all of the parcels or in one or two of them; I would have to get that. Secondly, the discussions I had with my colleagues when this program came into being suggested that money realized from the sale of land would certainly be applied towards housing projects.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary has two parts to it and concerns the answer the minister just gave. First of all, if we use the minister's figure of $4.3 million as the cost of servicing for 126 acres, that would work out to $33,000 an acre. How does he match that with the fact that all of the other developers in that area are paying approximately $19,000 an acre to service land in the same vicinity? His ministry's figure is almost double. That's the first question.

The second point is that the minister gave us a range of sales per acre of $75,000 to $95,000. If he is going to sell 126 acres—we will use his lowest figure of $75,000—that comes to $9.5 million. Where does he get his $8 million figure?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The hon. member is well aware, I think, of the fact that the price of land, as you go into the market, will depend upon what the zoning is, what sort of densities can be applied to the use of that particular land. When I answered the question of the hon. member on Monday of this week, I said to him at that time I was guessing as to the particular figures because I didn't have them with me. We do anticipate that the lower end of the market, as it relates to single-family unit development on the type of lot size we were talking about, will be about $75,000.

Those prices are not going to stay in the same range throughout that whole development. They may certainly come down. When I say $8 million, I am estimating the total price at $8 million. I said that at the beginning. I can't tell the member what those prices are going to be; they may fluctuate considerably in the market over the next two or three years. Our estimate is roughly $8 million. That is the figure we are working on; and considering our costs, we are going to realize from that around $2.8 million in profit.

As far as the price per acre is concerned, all I can give you, sir, are the figures that I have had provided for me, including all of the costs that were involved in the acquisition of the land, the interest charges, plus the costs that have accrued to the Ontario Housing Corporation in the development of that land, remembering that we, as a corporation, do make considerable contributions in communities in the way of land, in the way of road allowances, in the way of parks, in the way of school sites—all of which have to be totalled into what the total cost of that particular development would be.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary, if I may: How many lots does the minister expect to get in that first $8 million; what will it cover in total?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Two hundred.

Mr. Lewis: Just 200 applies to this $8 million? Two hundred lots out of 125 or 126 acres? I am sorry, I am seeking clarification. Maybe I can phrase the question another way, which will stimulate an aggravated response and, therefore, an accurate one.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: My apologies, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member. I said 200. What I was referring to is that the first offering will be 200 lots. I don't have the exact figures as to how many total lots there will be in 126 acres. Our first offering, in that first phase in the spring, will be 200 lots.

Mr. Lewis: The minister can't estimate the number of lots?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I can't. I can get the figures for the member.

Mr. Sargent: Why not have a liquidation sale; you are going out of business, anyway.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Take off your mask.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Colleges and Universities has the answer to a question previously asked.

NUCLEAR OPERATORS

Hon. Mr. Parrott: On Tuesday of last week the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) asked me if I would agree to: "1. Convening a meeting between the ministry, Ontario Hydro and Canada Manpower to accurately determine the manpower needs of the nuclear program in the next 10 years. 2. Institute a crash program to train chemical operators."

I am advised, subsequent to my answer then, that such a meeting did take place on May 4 of this year. At that time, at least, my ministry was informed by Ontario Hydro of the need for chemical operators.

The meeting was attended by representatives from the Ministry of Industry and Tourism, the Ministry of Colleges and Universities, the federal government's employment and immigration commission and Ontario Hydro. It was agreed by all parties that they would consider the situation and bring forward suggestions at a subsequent meeting.

That meeting was then held on May 27. My staff at that time explained that the 16 colleges of applied arts and technology offered programs that related to chemical operators and their training. A training program using the graduates of these programs was suggested for Ontario Hydro.

A crash program was also suggested; however, when the various safety factors connected with any nuclear program were taken into consideration, it was decided that such a course of action would be unwise. It was therefore decided that the federal agency would give Hydro the authority to recruit overseas, on the condition that they stepped up their own training program.

I want to reiterate the caution I expressed that day when I first answered the member's question. The caution is simply this: in filling manpower needs of this nature we realize that some staff shortages do occur; frequently, however, not because of the lack of trained personnel, but because those personnel who are available to do such work have not the necessary experience to carry out the work that is available. It would be unwise, therefore, to assume that we must cope with the situation by training vast numbers of personnel, only to face the possibility of redundancies in future years.

As regards Ontario Hydro's needs for chemical operators, I can assure the House that by 1979 Ontario Hydro's own training program, together with the growing experience of the current junior operators, will meet their needs and eliminate the necessity for overseas recruitment.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: Could I ask the minister what community colleges in the province are giving courses for chemical operators and how many students are enrolled at the present time? Secondly, has Ontario Hydro indeed fulfilled its commitment to step up its own training program in this respect? I suppose the second question should more properly be directed to the Minister of Energy (Mr. J. A. Taylor) but, since the Minister of Colleges and Universities has been involved, perhaps he could answer that.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The last question is of some technical nature, Mr. Speaker, and I would be prepared to submit the reply to the member in writing if he would concur with that method.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: We can assume, then, that at no point in the last five years has Ontario Hydro ever come to the Ministry of Colleges and Universities with a specific, concrete set of proposals for a definite nuclear training program within the community college or university systems in Ontario? That is a proper deduction, I assume?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No, I don't think that's necessarily a proper deduction. But I think the member opposite probably should realize that Hydro has extensive training programs of its own and under normal conditions is able to meet the needs as it expects them, and normally proceeds in that manner.

Mr. Conway: Their program is called immigration.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I listened to the hon. member the other night in the House and I heard a bunch of trash when he spoke on this subject. I don't think he should add to it now.

Hon. Mr. Davis: When he says it, you know it's true.

Mr. S. Smith: The sun is setting on you guys.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: What are the specific programs that Ontario Hydro has brought to the executive council in general or to the Ministry of Colleges and Universities in particular?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I said to the hon. member that I believe that Hydro basically trains its own personnel. They have extensive programs.

Mrs. Campbell: No, they don't.

Mr. S. Smith: They import them.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: At this moment I can't give the hon. member an understanding of those programs for which Hydro has asked for help.

Mr. Sargent: They contract them out.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think that the hon. member opposite should realize that in any educational program, the essential component is to train people with generalized education. The specialization of those programs frequently should be done on site by any industry.

Mrs. Campbell: Or abroad.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: In this system of ours we are doing just that. We are graduating those with a generalized education and we expect industry to take upon themselves the fulfilment of specialized education which is rightly theirs.

Mr. S. Smith: Bringing them from England.

INCREASE IN EDUCATION ESTIMATES

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, my question will have to be directed to the government House leader in the absence of the Premier (Mr. Davis), the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) and the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough). I would like very much to ask whether there is an explanation that can be offered to this House for the increase in the Education estimates, which were debated and approved—at least by committee; an increase, between the end of June and the end of September, of some $103 million? What does the government House leader have to tell the House on that amount of money?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I'll take that question as notice and I'm sure the Minister of Education can respond to it when he's next in the House.

Mr. Van Horne: Supplementary: It would appear to me that the exercise of debating these estimates is a lot of time spent futilely and, in light of this, therefore, I would ask if the cabinet is considering any change in the method by which it does its budgeting?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I'll add those comments to the reference to the minister. However, I would point out that the estimates are considered in the House and the rules provide for the tabling of Management Board orders and warrants and that sort of thing, for special expenditures in any ministry that are required over and above the estimates to provide some opportunity for this type of question. But I'm sure the Minister of Education will have some explanation.

[3:30]

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary: If there has been any added appropriation to the estimates since they were considered by the committee, is that not to come before the House in a supplementary estimate? Isn't that the normal procedure?

Hon. Mr. Welch: That doesn't necessarily follow. I think there are supplementary—really I think we should await the explanation of the Minister of Education to find out whether there has been anything like this.

Mr. Van Horne: I am not sure the last question I asked was properly answered; or if it was perhaps it wasn't understood. Let me try again. I would ask, is the cabinet or the government planning any change in its budgetary process; that is, is it considering a new budgetary process, such as zero-based budgeting?

Hon. Mr. Welch: What has that to do with the original question?

Mr. Kerrio: Control your spending.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The hon. member has asked a question which I have taken as notice. I said I would refer it to the Minister of Education for response. I will do the same with all the supplementary questions to which he has made reference. The last one I heard was a very general question with respect to the budgetary practice of the House. If he wants to ask as a new question, I will refer it to the Treasurer for comment. That is the point I am making.

RENT REVIEW

Mr. Breagh: I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations regarding his statement today on rent review. I want to welcome his reluctant and belated acceptance of our position last spring on the matter. I am interested to know, in coming to this conclusion, how did he solve all of those problems put by his predecessor? I believe he used the words that a six per cent guideline would bring about the destruction of the entire rental accommodation sector?

Mr. Lewis: Precisely.

Mr. Breaugh: How did the minister solve that?

Mr. Lewis: Precisely. How did the minister handle it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We plan to solve it, if the member will read the entire statement—

Mr. Wildman: Bought a lot of house insurance.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —by dealing now with some alternatives for the conclusion of the program at the end of 1978, so that the industry can have some indication of what lies ahead. Now that the party of never-ending controls has moved back out of the opposition, we plan to indicate to them that they can operate in some security that controls are not here for ever and that they won't be choked off by this program or any other program unendingly.

As well, members will note I have taken steps to indicate that during the review process from now until the end of 1978, applications that are made will be dealt with as expeditiously as possible, with special attention to those areas, that is small landlords, who are most especially affected by the continuance of the present program at six per cent.

Mr. MacDonald: Is that an invitation for them to catch up after the controls go off?

Mr. Swart: Expect an election in 1978.

Mr. Breaugh: Supplementary: Can I ask the minister to clarify, then, his directive? Does he in effect, mean he has directed rent review officers to set aside all other hearings, save and except those on small buildings, or does he intend to hire some more staff?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The answer is no, they will not be setting aside all other hearings in favour of the small ones. I have asked them to give some priority. Secondly, I hate to disappoint the member but, no, we won't be hiring any more staff. We think we can do it within the existing staff.

Mr. Lewis: That is why the member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman) stepped down.

INCREASE IN CULTURE AND RECREATION ESTIMATES

Mr. Kerrio: I have a question of the Minister of Culture and Recreation. Will the minister tell the House why, in these days of alleged restraint, his spending estimate is $29 million higher than what the budget said it would be, which increase appears to have occurred entirely between June 30 and September 30?

Mr. Lewis: He needs it personally.

Mr. Martel: It is in the bank in Switzerland.

Hon. Mr. Welch: As the hon. member knows, my estimates will be before the estimates committee shortly.

Mr. Lewis: Take a look at his clothes.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Is the member talking about the current estimates or the annual report?

Mr. Kerrio: You will find it in Ontario finances.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think the member will find most of that related to Wintario, the payment to Wintario, because it comes out through the consolidated revenue fund. I think most of that increase would be attributed to Wintario.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a point of information.

Mr. Speaker: There is no such thing as a point of information.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Do you want some or are you going to give some?

Mr. Speaker: You can give a personal explanation.

Mr. Sargent: I would be glad to.

Mr. Speaker: Try it.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The alarming thing before the House is—we have the greatest respect for the position the Premier (Mr. Davis) is in with all the economy—but the fact is that he does not know—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sargent: —that there is a billion-dollar contract—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is not a personal explanation. It's a personal opinion and you can express it at the opportune time. Will the member take his seat.

REPORTS

Mr. Havrot from the standing resources development committee reported the following resolution:

Resolved: That supply in the following amounts to defray the expenses of the Ministry of Labour be granted Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1978:

Ministry of Labour

Ministry administration program	$ 7,205,000
Industrial Relations program	2,316,000
Women's program	601,000
Occupational health and safety program	15,227,000
Employment standards program ..	2,801,000
Ontario Manpower co-ordinating committee program	230,000
Ontario Human Rights commission program	1,377,000
Labour Relations Board program	2,011,000

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Speaker: I would like to remind hon. members that there are 20 private bills to be introduced today. In order that we do not take more than is necessary from the debate on the private members' business, would it be agreeable to all members having private bills for introduction that they send them to the table and the bills shall be deemed to have been introduced and read for the first time and they will appear in Votes and Proceedings.

Can we have that agreement?

Agreed.

Ordered for standing administration of justice committee.

Mr. Speaker: I'll just remind hon. members to send those bills to the table.

PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION AND HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 84, An Act to amend the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, this bill is largely of a housekeeping nature. The one item which will have some direct impact on the public is in section 4.

At present, parties who have been injured in motor vehicle accidents must bring a court action in the jurisdiction in which the accident happened if the claim is based in any way on alleged failure to maintain the highway. This rule can result in parties who live in Toronto having to go to Kenora with their lawyers and doctors and other witnesses involving great inconvenience and unnecessary costs.

The amendment in this bill will permit the trial to be held in Toronto or other suitable location if the parties agree and an application is made to a judge to have the venue changed to an appropriate location.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 85, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, this bill contains 18 items of essentially a housekeeping nature. This particular bill is not intended to deal with vehicle waste, which will be the subject of another bill which I expect to introduce shortly; nor is it in response to the final report of the Select Committee on Highway Safety, of which you will be hearing more in the near future.

One item of special interest in the bill is being brought forward by myself in association with the Attorney General (Mr. McMurry), namely the elimination of the gratuitous passenger rule, as recommended by the Select Committee on Company Law. This change is in line with this government's objective of simplifying legislation and its impact upon the public. The amendment should eliminate or reduce unnecessary litigation and inequities in the law of motor vehicle negligence. It will also remove an impediment to the successful encouragement of car and van pools.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES OF ONTARIO ACT

Mr. Samis moved first reading of Bill 86, An Act respecting the Official Languages of Ontario.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Samis: M. l'orateur le but de ce projet de loi est d'établir la langue française et l'anglais comme les langues officielles de l'Ontario. Le bill définit les mesures par lesquelles les deux langues officielles seront employées dans l'Assemblée législative, par le gouvernement de l'Ontario et dans les procédures judiciaires et quasi judiciaires.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Cassidy moved second reading of Bill 68, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to speak for up to 15 minutes now and reserve five minutes for the end of the debate.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill 68 is to preserve the collective bargaining rights of employees of a business that relocates within Ontario. The bill also provides that employers must give reasonable notice of a relocation to their workers and that they must give workers a 60-day period in which to decide if they want to relocate with the plant or with the operation that moves.

This bill is presented in a non-combative spirit, as a constructive proposal to plug a loophole which now exists in the Ontario Labour Relations Act. At present, if there is heavy turnover in a plant over the life of a contract—say over a couple of years' period—the bargaining rights are kept, despite the fact that 70 or 80 per cent of the employees covered by the bargaining unit have changed in a period of two years.

If a plant is sold to a new employer, then section 55 of the Act, which is amended by this bill, provides for successor rights, so that both the collective agreement and the bargaining unit are preserved; and the new employer must honour the agreement entered into by the old employer.

There are provisions for melding by the Labour Relations Board where a takeover results in two unions having jurisdiction, and this melding is echoed in subsection 4 of my proposed amendments.

There's another loophole which we intend to plug during the course of this session of the Legislature, and that is where an operation now carried out by the Crown is transferred to another employer; or where an employer transfers an operation to the Crown. Under Bill 4, transfers of undertakings to or from the Crown will also involve a succession rights provision to protect bargaining rights and to ensure the maintenance of existing contracts.

The situation is that if a company is sold, if it's transferred to the Crown, if it's transferred from the Crown, the bargaining rights which employees have fought to win get transferred. The situation, however, in the case where a company gets moved outside of the boundaries of the municipality where the union certification applies, is that there is no such protection. The workers lose the protection of having a trade union, of having a bargaining unit and of having a collective agreement.

Normally, when the Labour Relations Board defines a bargaining unit, there is a scope of contract provision, a geographical definition of where the bargaining unit lies. This is, for example, the boundaries of a particular plant or of a particular municipality. They say, for example, that all the employees of ABC manufacturing company within Metropolitan Toronto are covered by this particular bargaining unit and by this particular collective agreement. If the company moves outside of those boundaries, then the collective agreement of the bargaining unit stops; that's the situation that this bill is trying to correct.

There's nothing wrong with the existing law but it leaves the loophole which some companies, I'm afraid, have exploited—in certain cases inadvertently and in other cases in a deliberate way—to get away from their responsibilities to unions which have organized under the law of this province and exercised the right to collective bargaining, which is a right to which all parties in this province subscribe.

I want to give a few examples because this is a problem which is widespread and has existed for a long time. A friend in the labour movement recalled to me that back in 1965, Perfect Circle, the people who make piston rings, transferred from Toronto to London. They closed on a Friday and reopened the following Monday in London, giving no notice at all to their employees. There was a clause in a collective agreement, with the Steelworkers in that particular case, whereby the union would have the right to transfer its workers if the company ever moved, but that was abrogated unilaterally by the company. They moved to London. One hundred workers were affected. Only a year later, through arbitration, was the union able to win any redress. They won redress in dollars, but no redress in getting people to the jobs that had been transferred. That was the beginning of this kind of situation.

Not long ago the union was knocked out when Ajax Plastics moved the great distance from Whitby to Scarborough. Just over one municipal line, but the union contract was knocked out and the protection the workers had in that case was lost.

The former member for Peterborough, Ms. Sandeman, has raised a couple of recent situations. One was the transfer of jobs from Regal Stationery in Omeme to the company's plant in Toronto, which took place over a period of about a year and which seemed to have come as a consequence of the certification of employees in that plant in April of 1975. About 100 jobs were taken out of the bargaining unit because of that transfer and the people involved could do nothing about it.

There was another case in Peterborough where a company named Tellus Instruments informed its employees on a Friday afternoon that it was moving and they would have no jobs; it gave them all of one week's pay in lieu of notice under the Employment Standards Act. There were seven female employees. They had just been certified under the United Electrical Workers, when lo and behold the company disappeared off the face of the province—or so it seemed. That company had a contract for 6,000 smoke detectors a month from General Electric in Peterborough, but they moved out of Peterborough in order to break away from the jurisdiction of the union.

It seems to me that the feelings of all parties is that that is not something which should be tolerated in the province at this time.

Not that long ago, Miami Carey company, which is a subsidiary of a multi-national based in Florida, moved its plant from Rexdale to Barrie. There were 120 production workers laid off in that case, and 50 office jobs. The union, electrical again, lost its bargaining rights. That meant the workers lost the protection of a union. Not one of them was moved to the new location in Barrie. The company refused to transfer the workers, the unions, or the pay rates they were paying in Toronto. The move was a deliberate one to get away from an organized situation.

It's been suggested that if a company is acting in order to do its union in, there are provisions under existing law which would cover the situation. It would mean that the amendments that I have presented today are not required.

My experience, Mr. Speaker, is that, at the very least, that's questionable. In fact, there's a case which I will cite in a minute which indicates quite clearly that the Labour Relations Board is both a difficult and expensive remedy, and also one that is not always efficient.

There is a case of Humpty Dumpty, the potato chip people, who had a central warehouse in London, Ontario, from which they distributed potato chips to the surrounding area. One day they informed their employees, who were organized, that they were planning to decentralize to six satellite warehouses in Middlesex county and the surrounding area. The consequence of that decentralization was that the union's agreement would be abrogated and they would be back to a non-union situation.

The union complained to the Labour Relations Board, and in that case the Labour Relations Board found that the company had deliberately and consistently been trying to break the union. It found that this was a lock-out and a form of industrial action by the company; it ordered the company either to return its operations to London or to extend the bargaining unit to these new satellite warehouses.

In that case, although it was very expensive, there was protection under existing law. However, in March of this year, the Labour Relations Board ruled on a comparable case that affected 100 service men working for the John Inglis Company here in Metropolitan Toronto.

In early January of this year, John Inglis announced to the workers, without even working through their union, that it was transferring its operation to Mississauga and to the township of Vaughan, which are just outside of the Metropolitan Toronto boundaries.

The operation for these service men consisted of a radio dispatch office and a parts depot, but the people involved in the bargaining unit, who had been organized under the Steelworkers for 30 years and had had the protection of a union for 30 years, worked doing service calls within the boundaries of Metropolitan Toronto on a radio dispatch system and they checked into their office once a week or thereabouts. The company moved their radio operation, just the dispatch office, to Mississauga and to the regional municipality of York, and thereafter, it acted as though the union agreement was dead.

The union complained and said that the company was acting in a fashion to try and break the union. However, the Labour Relations Board considered the case very carefully and decided—despite the complaints of the union, despite evidence that included the fact that the union stewards and union officers who were among these 100 service people had not been invited to work for the company when the radio dispatch office was moved—the Labour Relations Board found there was no binding contract there. The bargaining unit did not extend outside of the boundaries of Metropolitan Toronto and, therefore, these men no longer had the protection of a union.

I say this to all members in the House—I'm glad that several are here—that this is the kind of situation that these amendments to the Labour Relations Act would cover. They would ensure that if John Inglis moved from Toronto to Mississauga, the bargaining unit would travel with it and the men would be able to have the collective agreement they had before, rather than being forced to start again from scratch.

In this particular case, the Steelworkers signed up the workers again, got them ready for certification and, just as they were about ready to go to certification, the company intervened directly, in a fashion which certainly appears to have been illegal, and asked the service people if they would take this particular set of offers the company had and petition against certification. I'm afraid that the workers in that particular case did. They were open to that kind of interference by the company. I don't think that's a good way to carry out labour relations in the province.

This bill has been circulated widely in the labour movement. I have not consulted to such an extent with business organizations, but I have been in touch with several of them in the last day or so. I am telling my friends if they have a bill which affects a number of parties, a number of interest groups in Ontario, we should all make sure on private members' bills to consult widely, because these things will have a chance of becoming law.

The bill has been supported strongly by the labour movement. For example, I have had a letter from Local 89 of the Canadian Paperworkers Union saying: "We feel that this bill is in essence so logical we are surprised it has not yet been incorporated in the Labour Relations Act." The Steelworkers and the Auto Workers have both indicated support, as has the Ontario Federation of Labour. I had a telegram today from the rubber workers union, Local 113, in Hamilton. The international vice-president for the Service Employees International Union of Canada, Mr. Albert Hearn, has written to a number of government ministers in support of the bill.

The reaction from business organizations has been a bit more mixed. One would expect that. They may want to make some comments on certain parts of this bill when it goes to committee. However, in general, they accept—I am talking about people like the Chamber of Commerce and the Canadian Manufacturers Association—that it's responsible to ensure that where a company is transferred and has a union, then the bargaining rights of that union should be transferred and should not be destroyed because the company relocates. They also accept that it's responsible practice, it's reasonable to put it into law and it makes sense that employees should have reasonable notice of a relocation and that employees should have the right to a transfer to a new location if a company happens to move its shop.

I have talked with a number of members in the Legislature about the bill. I think the reaction in general has been favourable, although several people have said some of the concepts in the bill need to be looked at closely in committee. I agree with that. I hope the bill is sent to committee so that it can be studied and so that some of these groups can consider it in more depth, since it was only tabled in the Legislature a couple of weeks ago. It has been suggested to me that the concept of relocation is vague and needs to be better defined. That's something I think the committee could do.

I have had questions raised about the amount of discretion granted to the Labour Relations Board under this bill in the case where there are certain matters to determine, like the nature of a bargaining unit. However, that provision in this bill parallels what is in the Labour Relations Act for other situations already.

I repeat that I think some of those matters that people may not agree completely about are matters of detail and can be ironed out in committee where we all will have our say. But it seems to me the basic point of the bill is one with which nobody in this Legislature can disagree, that employees should have a reasonable notice if there is going to be a relocation or plant transfer; that employees should have a reasonable chance to decide whether or not they want to transfer with their plant—that's particularly so when we are at a time of very high unemployment, as at present; and that where employees have fought to have bargaining rights established under the Labour Relations Act they should be able to have those bargaining rights moved with the company, rather than being into the position of having to start from scratch, getting a certification and first contract, just because a company has happened to move across a municipal border.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Cassidy: I see my time has expired. I hope very much that members on all sides will see fit to support this bill and to send it to committee. It's a good bill, it fills a loophole which should not have existed for as long as it has.

Mr. Pope: I would like to thank the hon. member for some of his clarifications on the consideration of this bill by the House.

As I understand it, the bill provides three major points. What I would like to do is deal with the concepts and suggest for the hon. member's consideration some problem areas I might see in some of these concepts; and perhaps these may be more aptly dealt with in committee, I don't know, or perhaps the hon. member may want to deal with them in his reply.

As I read the bill, I think it provides that, where a union shop is relocated, the bargaining unit description in any Ontario Labour Relations Board certification, as well as the recognition clause in any collective agreement, is deemed to be amended to include the new location. I believe the bill also provides that employees are entitled to reasonable notice of the relocation and the right of first refusal to accept employment at the new location; and that's a 60-day right. I believe, also, that after relocation any person may apply to the board to determine the appropriateness of the new bargaining unit; to amend the certificate, if any; and to certify a trade union applicant.

There are other aspects of the bill. One of the principal problems that we may be faced with—and perhaps the hon. member could consider this problem—is how to deal with an extraprovincial relocation and how to deal with relocation to different parts of the province where, for instance, there may be different unions representing traditionally the same nature of workers in one area and not in another. We have that situation in Timmins, for instance, with some of the miners being represented by certain unions, some of the trades being represented by certain unions, and perhaps not the same nature of representation by the same international union or any local thereof in southern Ontario.

What I am worried about is both territorial jurisdictional disputes and jurisdictional disputes between internationals. I understand that may be the reason the member has included in his amendments "that any person may apply to the board to determine the appropriateness of the new bargaining unit." If that is to resolve jurisdictional disputes, it may be that the determination of appropriateness should take place before any automatic deeming. In other words, in a relocation perhaps there should be an application immediately to the Ontario Labour Relations Board for a decision of that nature before deeming automatically a jurisdiction upon the existing local.

I don't know if that's the answer, but it may be a way to avoid the kind of jurisdictional disputes that I can see forthcoming from the bill that the hon. member has proposed. The application should be made immediately.

Secondly, I am also wondering if the application should not be made immediately in terms of an actual certification vote proceeding. I am worried, for instance, about the consequences of a plant not only relocating but expanding. For instance, if a company were to construct a large plant in another location and then to hire additional employees—I am aware of the double-breasted company and that kind of problem, but in the context of those problems—

Mr. Cassidy: The what? A double-breasted company?

Mr. Pope: —if another company, a related company, establishes a plant in another location, assumes some of the existing purchase orders and hires new staff, should those new staff automatically be covered by the existing collective agreement without the right to a certification vote?

Mr. Martel: That happens anywhere when you take on new employees.

Mr. Pope: I perceive it as a problem, and I think that the whole nature of the right of new employees to determine whether or not they shall be represented by a bargaining agency, namely a local of a union, is one that should be considered very carefully in terms of the possible consequences of his bill.

Another problem that I see is that the bill may completely negate the single trade union status of various locals within a single national or international trade union, and again could provide some problems with internal jurisdiction: for instance, if the labourers' union local operating out of Sudbury was suddenly usurped in its authority by another local from another area. That's the kind of problem I can see evolving. Perhaps the hon. member could address his remarks to those kinds of problems.

The hon. member referred to the Humpty Dumpty case. It was my understanding from the ruling of the Ontario Labour Relations Board that I saw, that given the history of the bargaining relationship between the employer and the union, the board was satisfied that the move to relocate was motivated by the desire to compel or induce its employees to refrain from exercising their rights to collective representation. I believe that is the most recent case available. In that case the Ontario Labour Relations Board has indicated that if it can be established that there was that kind of intention behind the relocation moves, that it would intervene and either force—as it did in this case—the employer to return his distribution warehouse to London or to amend the recognition clause of the collective agreement to cover the employees at the new location.

I understand that an application for judicial review was made by the employer with respect to that case. The information that I have is that within the last week that application for judicial review was withdrawn and the company has opened up its plant in the old location.

So I take it that the Humpty Dumpty Food case is now good law or a good precedent in terms of the Ontario Labour Relations Board.

Mr. Cassidy: It is contradicted by the Inglis case, though.

Mr. Pope: I understand that that was what the hon. member said. The only thing I can say is that the Humpty Dumpty Food case is the current precedent that now exists, the one that the Ontario Labour Relations Board has to take notice of. If that is an established principle and their ruling of July, 1977 is now the established principle under which it will make rulings on relocations in the future, the Inglis case may, in effect, have been overruled by the Ontario Labour Relations Board.

It may be that an application for judicial review will be taken at some future date, and that may be what is concerning the hon. member. The only protection that can be given there is that the Ontario Labour Relations Act has recently been amended to give wide remedial powers to the Ontario Labour Relations Board with respect to unfair practices. I assume this was the reason the application for judicial review was withdrawn and a settlement finally arrived at.

So those are some of my comments. They're meant in a constructive light. Perhaps the hon. member could have a look at these matters and address himself to them. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. O'Neil: I also am pleased to have a few comments to make concerning Bill 68, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act, and I was very interested in some of the comments that were made by the member for Cochrane South.

We also have a few reservations concerning some of the aspects of the bill, but in the true intent of private member's bills, I think that several from our party will speak concerning it, and, as it should be, I think we'll have a free vote of members rather than a party stand on it.

As far as some of the background goes, we're aware—as I think everyone is—that the Labour Relations Board normally certifies industrial unions with respect to all employees of a given employer working in a given municipal area. We're also aware that should a unionized employer sell his business, the purchaser generally remains bound by that collective agreement.

An employer who relocates outside the municipal area covered by the collective agreement is no longer subject to that particular agreement. Also, as I think we're aware, in a few cases unions have negotiated clauses requiring employers to grant union recognition if a plant is moved or expanded within so many miles of the original location.

Under the present rules or regulations, as in one of the recent cases before the Labour Relations Board, it was held that where an employer relocates solely for the purpose of evading of collective agreement the agreement will be amended to include the new employment site.

So as I say, there are provisions under the existing Labour Relations Board that I think cover some of the problems that the member for Ottawa Centre has anticipated. We have consulted fairly widely, both with members of the labour movement and the business association. There are some major problems, we feel, first of all in the drafting which would have some consequential implications.

It may be, as the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Pope) mentioned, that if this does go to committee some of these things can be dealt with at that time. But as I mentioned, not all of our members are in total agreement with the bill, nor are we all against the intent of the bill.

Further discussions have revealed additional problems with the interpretation and the possible effects it might have as far as the bill goes. Also, the proposed section 55(4) would give the Labour Relations Board the discretion to determine whether the employee of any employer who relocated, whether or not previously unionized, should be certified. This would result in a considerable change from the existing practice, whereby a proportion of employees must indicate their desire to join a union before the Labour Relations Board can make a determination; and would reduce the voice of the individual in determining the question of union representation.

Even if the bill were limited in its implications to unionized employees, problems could arise. In some cases the majority of employees might choose not to move, yet the entire labour force at the new location would be bound by the existing collective agreement, at least until it expired.

Also, we have some worries concerning the concept of the word relocation, which we feel is vague. If an employer opens a new facility with new employees and it is considered a relocation, employees would be organized without their consent; or could be.

It appears also that an employer relocating, from say Toronto to one of the other areas of the province, would be bound by a Toronto wage rate and vice versa. This could possibly have some really important implications, and possibly might mean that some of these industries might expand outside the province.

As far as can be determined, no other jurisdiction in North America has a provision in its labour relations such as this new bill would propose. So, as I say, there are many things that would lead us to lean in favour of the bill; there are some that would certainly tend to make us lean the other way.

Some of our other members will be making some comments on that. I look forward to hearing both those comments and some of the comments from the members of the New Democratic Party, and also some of the other Conservative members.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, I rise, of course, in support of this bill presented by my colleague from Ottawa Centre.

It is simply a bill which says that when there is a relocation the employees will have an opportunity to relocate, and because this is an amendment to the Labour Relations Act, and therefore speaking of organized employees, that they will carry their benefits to that new location with them.

This, of course, has been obtained in master agreements before in the province and for quite some time. The Ford company, in its move from Windsor to Oakville back in 1953-54 had that already in the master agreement so that employees moved directly, having been offered the chance to move; and more important, when they did, retained their seniority. This has been true of other operations; for example various operations of Chrysler Corporation. Back some four years ago when another UAW plant, Duplate, moved from Windsor to Hawkesbury they carried their seniority, their pensions and so on.

However, not all unions have these provisions, or have been able to get them in their contract provisions so that when a relocation occurs the employees move with seniority retention and with pension, and other provisions intact. What happens is that there are instances of companies relocating, purely and simply for the reason of getting out of their unionized contracts at the location which they are in.

It is for those reasons that a bill like this is very badly needed. In the case of Rockwell International in Windsor, whose operations were closed out last April, at three other locations in the province in which they operate—Parry Sound, Bracebridge and Tilbury—they were under no obligation, because it wasn't covered in the union contract, to offer any sort of jobs to those unemployed workers in the Windsor area. They indicated they would offer some preferential hiring to those workers who were thrown out of work by the closure of the Windsor plant, but of course were under no obligation to offer it to them all as the openings arose over the months at those other plants.

Those who were offered jobs, of course, went there at the rates that applied there; and even though they were organized in some of the other locations, they lost their seniority entirely because they started as new persons in those other plant locations. Those few that were offered a job invariably went. A job is a job these days. Irrespective of their seniority at the other Rockwell plant, and even though they were moving into another organized plant, their seniority was zero at that other organized plant.

This does not occur when you have it in the master agreements and there is a relocation of plants that have those agreements, as with the Ford, Chrysler and Duplate agreements. This it is simply saying to a long-term employee that when there is a relocation you can move and at that new location you have the seniority you had previously. At that new location, if there are new hirings they will start, of course, at the zero seniority; but this should not apply to the person who is being transferred there, who in some cases has vast seniority.

In connection with some of the remarks of the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Pope), I would say that the proposed section 55a (4) of the Act is, I think, designed to cover precisely some of the points he raises. If it is an entirely new plant, which has not as yet been organized by the union and the members move from an organized plant to that location, which is what this bill talks about, that's what the new subsection is there for. At some point the Labour Relations Board must take a certification vote at that plant; but until that vote is held the people transferred will hold their seniority rights and still be part of that union.

If it's a case of a different location, mixing of the employees from two unions, that, again, is what the subsection is to do. The board simply sorts out that situation and ensures, if it is necessary, that a vote be held. That's what the subsection is there for.

Subsection 2 of the proposed section 55a simply lays out a reasonable length of time for the company, which has announced a relocation to expect to hear from its employees that those employees are willing to accept a relocation when the company relocates. The employer will then have a very good idea as to how many employees will be moving to the new location.

It's a very straightforward bill, very worthy of support, so you simply don't have unionized employees in the work place, when a plant relocates, simply thrown out of work as has occurred in the past, and to a certain degree has occurred in the Rockwell International situation in April of this year in Windsor.

It's an amendment to the Labour Relations Act and therefore we are dealing only with unionized employees. Really, what we would like to see would be another bill, or a wider bill. It wouldn't be dealing with seniority rights and so on. It would be a bill which would say that whenever an employer relocates a plant, including the non-unionized sector, he must follow provisions of this bill and offer relocations to the employees at the previous location and continue the same benefit provisions, pension funds and so on, that exist in that unorganized environment. There wouldn't be perhaps very many privileges which a non-union employee would take with him, but whatever small ones do exist those would carry over with him to the new location. That should be what's operating in the province of Ontario as well, and I strongly urge all members in this House to support this bill.

Mr. G. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in speaking to this piece of legislation which the member for Ottawa Centre has introduced. I've listened to the member for Quinte (Mr. O'Neil) who has outlined the background of labour relations to this point in time. The member for Quinte has suggested that there appears to be a body of legislation that takes care of the situation to date. Is this, then, plugging a loophole, as the member for Ottawa Centre says; or is the law that way because that is its desired position?

The negotiating of contracts is there, and as they have mentioned there are many agreements of labour unions and management that include this particular item in their contracts. Are we, then, just inserting more government intervention into the free marketplace of management and labour negotiations, by inserting for them a portion of the contract that they are now negotiating? So what gives me concern in this bill is that such and such is being done under the guise of plugging a loophole, but is it not there by intention? Is this not, therefore, something that should continue to be negotiated, and that should be there to leave the parties with the opportunity to exercise their own free will?

After we get by what the present legislation is, and then we insert this bill as it is, I get the same concern as other members in this House do, about the terms themselves. Naturally I concede that that is a part for committee discussion, but when you get down to "relocation of business" and the definition of relocation; and then when we describe "part thereof"; how do we determine what part thereof? As the member for Ottawa Centre said, there was one business that went from Toronto to Barrie. If he had continued the story, it ceased operation after it went to Barrie because of what it considered at that time union difficulties. They were trying to remove themselves and to get the favourable markets from the Toronto region into the Barrie region. They could not get those more favourable union-management relations, and then the firm departed to the United States. Will this increase that type of operation, where the firms will relocate elsewhere when we insert more into the labour-management relationship of free bargaining?

When you describe "part thereof," what and how are we going to determine that? Does that not lead to further Labour Relations Board hearings and further litigation to discover what "part thereof" is? We all know of situations where you start up a new unit and you nearly always send people from your existing unit—one or two—to start it up.

Is that going to be considered a relocation the minute you send somebody there; or is it going to be considered a relocation where you send a physical part of your plant—be it machinery, bricks, mortar or other things? I can see great concern being given to what constitutes a relocation.

Then as we all know, we have today, in our system, bargaining for a geographic area. But there are franchising operations to be considered. If there happens to be one bargaining unit, will that apply to each and every franchise that opens up in that geographical area? We all know of many operations that fall into that category. Are we negotiating a state contract that is going to cover and eventually involve province-wide bargaining by this little insertion of a disguised cover, as we say a loophole? That gives me some concern when we put this forth.

Have we already got it taken care of in the existing legislation, where reasonable notice is given—and again that term “unreasonable notice” bothers me. Where you have a termination, there is already the Employment Standards Act to take care of some of those provisions. When you get into reasonable notice—another term that has to be defined—is the 60-day period going to be sufficient; or are we going to have further litigation to discover what reasonable notice might be?

These are the problems I put forward to you on this bill. I fear that it may produce more problems than it is trying to stop in trying to plug the loophole. So that when you get into areas where you cause more grief than that which you are trying to compensate for, would we not be better to take a very definite, very precise look at the legislation when it comes before committee?

It's laudable, that which the member for Ottawa Centre is trying to cover, but is it something that is just a shade ahead of its time because of the provisions of the Ontario Labour Relations Act as it presently stands, and the Labour Relations Board and present jurisprudence on the subject; is it not already taken care of? Has it not already been looked after, and can the present situation not take care of the problems that this legislation appears to be trying to correct? Can we not let the normal process look after it?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise and enter into the debate on Bill 68 introduced by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre. I will start off by saying that I support the principle of this bill. I think it is a good principle. I think it is one that should be adopted by the members of this House.

I also have to agree that the bill does need some refining and it should go to committee. I think the purpose of the bill, which is to continue to give hard-won bargaining rights to the working class when they are forced to relocate, is a very good, sound and basic principle.

Secondly, I am in favour of the 60-day period which the employer has to give to the employee as a notice of relocation. I think it's only fair. I see that some industries, like the automotive industry and also I believe Ontario Hydro, already do this type of thing. So I'm not so sure if it's as new as some members are making it out to be.

I also respect my colleagues in the House who do not support this bill, being that it is a private member's bill and it is a free vote.

Basically, those are my comments and I urge the bill to go to committee.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief. I rise in support of the bill. I am a little bit surprised at the comments from across the way, that it might be a shade ahead of its time. It certainly is long past its time, not a “shade ahead of its time.”

I'm not going to go into the individual sections of the bill, but I want to deal with exactly what is happening in the real world out there. First I recall, and it's been mentioned so I'll just state that, talking of the workers at Ajax Plastics when they were moved from Whitby to Scarborough West, while there was not a lot of seniority in that particular operation, some of them did have better than seven years. When you sit across from people with seven years seniority who were offered the opportunity—they were lucky, they were offered the opportunity to move to the new operation—but to move as brand-new employees, without either the rates or any of the benefits they'd built up; when you realize that was the “opportunity” they were offered, you begin to realize what's happening.

We have a slightly different twist, but I think a classic case, going on right now in the Hamilton area where a long-operating plant, Kennametals on Sherman Avenue, put up a notice on their bulletin board back in July which said, and I'll read the notice: “To strengthen the position of our company in Canada and to provide better service to Canadian industry, Kennametals Incorporated has recently reached an agreement with John Brown and Company of London, England. Under this agreement, Kennametal will buy out all of the shares of A. C. Wickman Limited, Toronto. The acquisition is subject to the approval of the Canadian and British governments. Transfer of ownership is expected to take place on or about July 1.”

The first reaction of the employees was: “Well, we're strengthening our company. We get an opportunity to have a better, a bigger operation. Sounds pretty good.” They began to smell the proverbial rotteness when, a couple of weeks later, another notice went up that said that the manager of the plant would be moving to the Toronto plant. Then, two months later, another notice went up on the bulletin board at Kennametal:

"Date: August 30, 1977; Effectively approximately November 15, 1977, Kennametal Tools Limited will cease to carry on its business. Under the Employment Standards Act, employees are entitled to notice in writing of the termination of their employment. The amount of this notice depends on the period of employment with a maximum of eight weeks' notice to employees with a period of employment of 10 years or more. So that we can be fair to all employees, we have decided to give you this preliminary notice which will be formalized by individual letters to each of you. As you can see, we are attempting to give more notice than the requirements of the legislation.

"I am sure there will be many questions generated by this announcement, however, we do not have answers as yet but we'll try to keep you informed as time passes."

It's a great pat on the back to the employees of that particular operation.

They went one step further in a further notice saying that they would allow an extra week—or was it two weeks—severance pay on the basis that the employees stayed until the very last day before the plant shut down.

At an open meeting they were questioned by employees—some of the employees asking questions had had 25 years in the plant—who asked, "If we get a chance for a job are we going to forfeit the one or two weeks?" They were told they certainly were. Some of them asked, because for some of them it was going to be difficult getting relocated, if there was any chance that they could go to the Toronto operation which was going to be producing exactly the same products. They were told at that meeting that there might be an opening for two or three of the some 50 employees involved but as brand new employees with none of their benefits, none of the security and wages that they'd built up over the years of operation.

That particular situation is under some pretty critical and crucial negotiating right now with the union involved. They have not been able to resolve it. There is no change in attitude as yet. And, as it stands now, they're within their rights in doing that. If that's a fair system, then there's something wrong with our industrial relations system in this province.

Another example, which is a little different, it may or may not come exactly under the protection of this bill but Anchor Metal Products in Bramalea actually went belly-up into receivership. What did we find? They had never stopped operating. They've now moved to a smaller plant out of Bramalea into Weston. They're back up to 60 or 65 employees, operating under some kind of a holding arrangement.

In the meantime, they've got rid of the union that was there. They've got rid of all of the benefits to the employees. The employees who are coming to me are largely Italian, Portuguese, Spanish, and really don't know what rights, if any, they had. And we have another real problem starting to develop because, I think, this is going to be a case the union is going to make a major issue out of in the province.

I think a bill like this, which is only a small step forward but does give protection through this amendment to the Labour Relations Act to employees who are moved, deserves to be passed. It is long overdue, not a shade ahead of its time, and I would urge the members of the House to support the bill.

Mr. Williams: When the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) had his name selected from among the members to have an opportunity to speak in the early stages of the private members' debates here in the fall session, I think it aroused a great deal of speculation and expectation that, because of the stature and senior position of this front-bencher, we would have coming before us a meaningful bill, dealing with either social or labour legislation.

Mr. Mackenzie: This is not meaningful then?

Mr. Williams: While the member for Ottawa Centre may not be known for his wit and charm he is certainly well known for his verbosity and well-enunciated social views. I think there was a great deal of anticipation that he would come forward with a meaningful piece of legislation, which he appears to have done today.

While the bill is meaningful, what we have to analyse is whether or not, in its present form, it is also practical and constructive, as suggested by the sponsor of the bill. I think it is this that we have to objectively assess with great care.

The sponsor has suggested, I think fairly, that this is in effect almost a housekeeping piece of legislation that is set up to plug a loophole, which I think my colleague from Simcoe Centre (Mr. G. Taylor) also commented upon. If I were satisfied that was simply the case—that here was an area in which an injustice existed that would be corrected by this piece of legislation—then I think it would not only be a meaningful but also a constructive piece of legislation.

But what concerns me is that the bill is indeed more than a housekeeping measure. It is much more substantive and carries with it much more significant ramifications than one would anticipate at first blush.

Mr. Mackenzie: It protects people.

Mr. Williams: I am certainly anxious to hear the response of the member for Ottawa Centre, and have him point out where the legislation may not be establishing a whole new method of certification. I think that essentially is what subsection 1 brings us to. We have the traditional certification board procedure and the voluntary recognition, but here, by establishing what in effect is a provincial-wide bargaining process, we have opened up a whole new area or method for certification. If that is fair comment, then I think it gives a whole new dimension and perspective and importance to this legislation which may have been glossed over in considering it as simply a housekeeping measure.

So I think that bears a great deal of emphasis and consideration. I certainly have yet to be satisfied that it is less significant than what I'm suggesting.

In endeavouring to support his arguments the member made reference to a number of cases of which he had personal knowledge. He referred to the Perfect Circle situation, Regal Stationery, Tellus Instruments and, I think, in his remarks about those particular cases implied that the moves have been made with intent to circumvent the protection that was being afforded by the unions that presently have agreements with the companies, rather than by reason of any legitimate circumstance. In other words, I don't think the member has spelled out to the members in the House, in using these examples, whether the companies were acting in good faith or with intent to break the union.

In the same way he made reference to the Humpty Dumpty case, which has been referred to by a number of members. Again it was what was left unsaid that gives me some concern, because the very thing that he suggests is lacking today in Ontario—and by reason of which there is need for this legislation—I think is refuted by the results of the Humpty Dumpty case. Even in the short period of time since it was dealt with, it has become a landmark in labour matters in this province as far as the board jurisprudence, as I think the member for Simcoe Centre alluded to it, is concerned. The sponsor did not point out that the board exercised its discretion and determined that the Humpty Dumpty company had in fact acted in bad faith. As I understand it, it ordered that the company therefore had to return to the London area where the facility had been located, and that they could not circumvent the union by simply going to other locations. I think that defuses the argument that the member makes that there is no protection under the existing legislation.

Another point is that the member did not point out to us what the ultimate long-term end result was with regard to those companies where some of their employees were put in a position of having to relocate because of moves by the company, or seek employment elsewhere when those companies move to other locations, if they had any difficulty, as far as the employees were concerned, in becoming newly certified with regard to the availability of other unions in the area to which those companies had moved.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I would point out to the hon. member for Oriole that we do not have sufficient time for him to have 10 minutes. We have to give the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) five minutes to sum up. You have about one more minute.

Mr. Williams: The last point, I think of equal importance, is that in my judgement the bill would also cause conflict among the unions themselves. Not simply conflict on a labour-management basis, but over the territorial prerogatives that exist with regard to local unions in different parts of the province where there are different economic conditions or where there are traditionally different working agreements that exist in some areas as contrasted to others. I think this could create a great deal of strife and difficulty between the unions.

Mr. Foulds: That's a self-serving paranoiac statement if I ever heard one.

Mr. Williams: While it is suggested that there is provision in the Act to resolve those differences as set out in subsection 4, again I am not satisfied it is so simply resolved. I suggest that that seems to be a simplistic solution—

Mr. Foulds: Time.

Mr. Williams: —but I don't think it is necessarily a practical solution.

In conclusion, these are the significant concerns that I think the members of the House have to take into consideration, to determine whether the bill goes much further than that of being simply a housekeeping bill. While it is meaningful, I think it warrants a great deal more consideration.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre for five minutes.

Mr. Cassidy: I welcome the support for the bill the other members have expressed and the position taken by other members, because while they had reservations, they believe that the bill should be considered in committee.

I also welcome the fact that the member for Oriole accepts that the bill is meaningful, even if he has more differences with me about it.

Yes, the bill is a bit more than a house-keeping bill. But it seems to me that is of the same essence and the same nature as the successor rights legislation, which was passed in the Labour Relations Act—in 1969, I believe it was—to cover a case where a company was sold to a new owner; or, as Bill 4, the successor rights on the transfer of an undertaking to or from the Crown, which was going to be adopted I presume by this Legislature some time during the course of this session.

Both of those provisions are amplifications of the spirit of the Labour Relations Act and I suggest that this bill is also to simply put into legislation a further amplification of the spirit of the Labour Relations Act and ensure that the loophole, as I described it, which now exists is not exploited by employers, whether by inadvertence in certain cases and convenience in other cases, or deliberate anti-union intent.

The cases that we cited generally did indicate bad faith. As was pointed out by the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Pope), there is recent jurisprudence by the Labour Relations Board in the Humpty Dumpty case which would indicate that where bad faith can be demonstrated because of a pattern of anti-union activity by the company the union may, after lengthy hearings before the Labour Relations Board and an enormous expenditure of money, perhaps get some redress before the Labour Relations Board.

I don't think that's a good way to proceed, though. As I understand it, the Labour Relations Board is not bound by case law, in the way of the courts and the jurisprudence that preceded that.

The Inglis case was exactly the opposite. Because there, even though the union stewards and the union executive members had not been allowed to keep their jobs when the head office of that dispatching unit moved out to Mississauga, the Labour Relations Board found that there was no anti-union intent and therefore it refused to confirm the bargaining unit once it moved outside Metropolitan Toronto, even though the people were still in the same job in the same locations.

I would suggest, therefore, that the Labour Relations Board is unreliable and it is much better for us to decide, as legislators, what the policy should be, to lay it down in a way in which it can be interpreted clearly, and positively, both by labour unions and also by managements.

The member for Cochrane South asked about relocation outside the province. As he's aware, that's a real problem, especially these days. We can't deal with it with legislation here, but only by interprovincial and maybe international agreements. I'd like to see those kinds of agreements, but for the time being we have to do only what we can.

Both the member for Cochrane South and the member for Oriole talked about the possibility of jurisdictional disputes or territorial disputes between unions. The possibility where you get two unions landing on one another obviously exists. That's why subsection 4 is here, in order to allow the Labour Relations Board to determine what is the appropriate bargaining unit.

That would also cover the case which a couple of members have raised about what happens if a bunch of unionized workers move in and are added to a plant which has some non-union workers. In that case, the Labour Relations Board already has established procedures of melding or intermingling, which it has to have developed because of successor rights legislation. If one firm that's unionized is bought by another that's not and the plants are joined, then the Labour Relations Board normally determines on an application whether there should be a certification vote or whether the collective agreement should automatically be extended.

The question of having a certification vote at once on a relocation I think is very difficult. Suppose you get 50 people from Toronto landing up with 30 or 40 new employees in Barrie in a plant which has just been established. That's a bad time to have a certification vote. It's better for the employees to get to know each other. It seems reasonable that if there's going to be that kind of thing, if anybody doesn't really like the union, they can always apply for decertification.

I don't think the burden should be put on the unions and continue as at the present time, that they have to get the bargaining unit established from scratch if the company moves. That is not a fair burden, it seems to me, and that's why this Act is being put forward to amend the Labour Relations Act and make relocated firms act in the spirit of that particular Act.

I hope very much that this bill will go to committee where some of the detailed points that have been raised can be discussed in detail.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The time for debate on this matter has expired.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST THE CROWN AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Kennedy moved second reading of Bill 33, An Act to amend the Proceedings Against the Crown Act.

Mr. Kennedy: The amendment provides a change in the Proceedings Against the Crown Act. This is to plug a loophole in the legislation and in a way is housekeeping.

Mr. Mackenzie: Did you check with the member for Oriole?

Mr. Kennedy: Housekeeping is a word that makes everyone raise their eyes or tense muscles.

Mr. Lawlor: I think it is meaningful myself.

Mr. Ruston: There is a lot of that.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kennedy: At the present time, civil servants who are paid out of the consolidated revenue fund are subject to having their wages attached by the Treasurer. For the record and for the members, I'll put in a few remarks, quoting section 26 of the Public Service Act.

It provides in essence: "Where a debt or money demand of not less than $25 is due and owing and the wages of that person are paid from the consolidated revenue fund, then the Treasurer at his discretion may make an order ensuring the payment of that debt." But it's in his discretion that this is done. Information from legal services is that in the case of a community college employee who owed a debt an application was made to the Treasurer and he refused to make this order because it was not within his jurisdiction. Those individuals are paid from their own funds. Hence, this was not applicable. There are other agencies of government which also could come under this amendment but which are currently exempt; for instance, the compensation board and community colleges. Perhaps there are others; I didn't check them all out.

Mr. Foulds: Hydro?

Mr. Kennedy: Hydro has its own legislation. I did check that.

I also want to mention Bill 59, The Family Law Reform Act, which received second reading a week ago. Section 27, subsection 3, provides for an execution or garnishee to be issued against the Crown for maintenance. This applies to family breakup and isn't pertinent in this instance, except this might have picked it up under certain employee circumstances.

The intent of this bill is to ensure that everyone who is an individual employed by the government—a civil servant—or any of its agencies receives equal treatment.

I checked back, and it may be interesting to members, that garnishment proceedings were first started in 1854 at Westminster.

Mr. Foulds: A bad year.

Mr. Kennedy: Prior to that there was no method of collection, at least in law. Whether there were other techniques used, I wouldn't know. But that is when it first came into being under Halsbury's Laws of England. Over the years, of course, there have been many amendments and extensions of this until we have reached the present stage as it stands in Ontario now. Community colleges, of course, came into being just in recent contemporary times; consequently, they weren't included in whatever legislation provided for those, and this again is an amendment to bring it into the 20th century.

There really isn't a great deal more to be said. I do know of other instances, one of which was a very complicated matter. The person owing the debt was sheltered under the exemption that was provided, and the result was considerable hardship to his family. Such legislation as this would tidy up such things.

In the public sector, too, employees have more job security insofar as that goes—that it is too pertinent to those in the private sector; employees in the private sector, of course, have no such protection.

I think we should all be treated the same and all in the same bag, as long as we have garnishment proceedings at all; I know some people are opposed to that. But this bill really isn't to deal with that. If there ever is a change made, let's change it altogether; I think we could bring this all in and perhaps it would strengthen any change. Maybe we should go to that caveat, "Let the vendor beware."

This leads me to the situation which I have known for many years; that is, federal Crown employees are exempt totally from garnishment. I had a case just a month or so ago where someone attempted to get a garnishee against a federal employee, and of course they couldn't do it. I would hope that the federal people would have a look at this so everybody is treated equally.

It is a fairly straightforward amendment, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to participation by other members and their consideration of supporting this amendment.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, when this bill was introduced in caucus and discussed in caucus it was almost with the unanimous consent that this matter be consented to and supported.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill represents a closing of a gap that has existed in law, and particularly as a lawyer I have heard time after time of private businessmen who have been jeopardized, particularly in the economy as it exists today, trying to collect their debts. Although the proposer of this bill indicates that it is not really a garnishee bill, it in fact does close an area that has been open to much abuse. As the courts today are taking a harder line, particularly in the family division where a delinquent husband or supporter has built up a debt, and in the event that a judgement is obtained against such an individual, this bill will allow the department, or whoever, to collect the debt that is owing and is perhaps paid by the rest of the taxpayers.

I just wish one thing, that the proposer of this bill did have the courage of his conviction in extending the right to garnishee beyond just Ontario Hydro, for instance; that we be allowed to go against any Crown employee for the very reason that I stated—that in today's economy, except for those who are paid out of the consolidated revenue fund, there is a built-in protection. It seems to me that we should extend it right across the board.

We support this bill in its principle, because I am a firm believer that before you can walk through a door you have to have it open. And in fact, this is exactly what this bill is doing. It's opening a door to protect the business community. It's opening the door to extending the principle that each person in his own private life cannot hide behind the veil of a Crown agent, and being paid out of the consolidated revenue fund, to prevent his being garnisheed and to prevent payment of just debts entered into by him.

So insofar as this bill represents a step in the right direction we have no hesitation in supporting it.

On that note, I do indicate my support of this amendment, as short as it is. It is worthwhile, and in principle it does require and get our support.

Mr. Warner: In response to the member for Mississauga South, he uses the term "equal treatment" in his presentation of the arguments of why I and others should support the bill. We could also describe it as being the equalizing of inequities.

For a very long time, it has always seemed to be much easier to attach portions of wages that are paid to workers as opposed to the worker trying to get his wages. Too often—and I have had several cases at this point—there are cases where a company goes out of business and the worker is left without wages. A few months later the individual—the good old lively entrepreneur—reopens under another name and the worker is still not able to get his money back. And the only way he can do it is to go through a long legal process in the courts involving a lot of money. But he is still without his wages.

I've got files where these individuals have been owed $700, $800, even $1,000 of their wages, which they worked hard for, but they can't collect them. Yet the good old entrepreneur is back in business under another name and is doing quite well, thank you. Should that worker default along the line somewhere, on a payment on an automobile, whatever it happens to be, or Reader's Digest or whatever kind of little goodies come through the mail now and then, it sure is easy to grab part of his wages.

So now to close the gap, and equal the inequities, we have this bill. The mover of the bill made mention of the fact very proudly that this concept of garnisheeing a portion of the person's wages instead of using the legal process to collect any debts was introduced in 1854. That we should extend the thinking of 1854 into 1977 bothers me somewhat.

I had hoped that we got away from the business of debtors' prisons and workhouses and the like. Maybe what this bill is doing is leading us back to that. I do have some questions that perhaps the member for Mississauga South (Mr. Kennedy) can answer. I gather from his remarks earlier that there are Crown agencies whose employees are paid from the consolidated revenue fund and, therefore, their wages may already be garnisheed; that option is left open. I think perhaps that's where Mr. Stong had it confused.

I take it that most of the Crown agencies already fall under that kind of description. What we are talking about is a very limited number of people, namely, those who are employed in the community colleges and by the Workmen's Compensation Board. I just hope that doesn't include Mr. Starr. He doesn't need any more breaks.

Mr. Foulds: No, this will get him.

Mr. Warner: Maybe this will get him.

Mr. Foulds: Is he liable for non-payment to injured workers?

Mr. Warner: Yes. On the other side of the coin, I'm very disappointed to hear that the mover of the bill didn't go through the following argument, because I think it's the one point in favour of the bill, that is, the case of the deserting husbands, those people who are supposed to be making maintenance payments. Because of the laxity of laws in the province of Ontario, if the husband chooses not to make the payments, then that's exactly what happens. If anyone wants to pursue it, all he does is move to somewhere else in Canada, and let them try to get the money.

There are just too many women left with children to raise who have been abandoned by the husband and who are not able to make ends meet. The maintenance payments don't come through and that woman has to find some way of getting the money. At this point in time, it's difficult enough. I'm surprised that the mover of the bill didn't put this forward. It's the foremost reason that this bill should be in front of us because it seems to me to be the only redeeming feature of this legislation.

I hope the mover of the bill, despite the fact that he did not put forward the argument I've just outlined, none the less understands very deeply the situation that many women in this province face, namely, that husbands who do decide to abandon their responsibilities do so easily. Without an expensive legal procedure and without being able to find those husbands, the mothers are left without the necessary support payments. If the law begins to close in on the person, then all he needs do is to go somewhere else in Canada and he is freed from his obligations.

I've had too many of those cases, quite frankly. I've had them into my office. They are soul-wrenching experiences. What can you say to the mother who is there? "I am sorry but the laws of Ontario are inadequate." "I'm sorry but this government just doesn't seem to be terribly interested in your plight." "I'm sorry but you're going to have to struggle along as best you can. When you reach the very bottom, we'll give you some welfare. We'll hand out a few crumbs so that you and your family can try to survive."

In the face of all of those inequities, perhaps it makes sense to equalize the inequities and add one more little bridge to it all. But I do so only in the case of it being for income maintenance. My suggestion to the mover of the bill is that if this bill passes second reading and goes to committee that the mover consider very seriously amending the legislation to read that it apply only in the case of income maintenance—support payments for deserted mothers. On that basis, I would be very happy to support the bill, but on no other basis.

Mr. Williams: I am pleased to support the bill being sponsored today by my colleague from Mississauga South. This is legislation that is long overdue. It is meaningful legislation, it is constructive legislation and it is legislation that brings an existing situation, as the member has said, into the 20th century.

I've listened carefully to the arguments put forward by other members of the House and the view expressed by the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong) reflects almost totally the views of myself in this matter. As one who has—

Mr. Foulds: You are in trouble.

Mr. Williams: —practised in the courts, I'm well aware of the fact that many people are unable to recover the money judgements that have been awarded to them in civil litigation because the judgement debtor has no visible assets other than his income. I think that is the perspective that has to be laid before us in making the argument for or against, that a garnishment proceeding is simply to provide the means by which a person who has been aggrieved, as determined by a court of law, can recover that to which he has been entitled by way of a monetary judgement and award in the courts of this land, so that a person who has been proven to be entitled to recompense, in accordance with the judgement of a court, now has a means of recovery from a person who does not have these other tangible assets, other than his or her income from his employment.

I must point out—and this point, I think, has been missed in the debate so far—that the garnishee order is one made by a judge bearing in mind all of the circumstances of the ability of the judgement debtor to pay. I have yet to have seen a case where the garnishee order has imposed an amount that exceeds that which a person could reasonably be anticipated to afford based on the other needs of that person to meet his basic living requirements, whether it be his rent, food, clothing for his family or whatever. It's determined that under the garnishee order a reasonable sum will be set aside, that, in the judgement and discretion of the court, that person can well afford to pay, but which heretofore he has been avoiding payment thereon to a person who is entitled to that payment, as determined by a court of law.

What in the world is wrong with that? This discrimination exists only through historical circumstance, whereby the protection was given not to the Crown employee but to the Crown. It is history that back in the 1700s the Crown was determined to be above the law and could not be sued, nor could its assets be attached for any reason at law. Therefore, the protection afforded the government employee or the civil servant wasn't for his benefit, it was because the Crown was deemed to be above the law in those days.

Mr. Foulds: Let's extend it to the Crown.

Mr. Williams: Now we have come back to a more realistic situation and the province in itself over the years has enacted legislation that has done away with this fiction. The Crown too is subject to be brought before the courts and to account for its wrongs and errors that bring about civil wrongs to individuals or groups.

So why, under those circumstances should a person who is in the public service be given this particular protection, that was not devised originally for that purpose at all, but through circumstance? Why should that person have this type of protection when he or she owes a debt to another innocent person who has obtained a judgement under a court decision? Why the salary of an individual working in the private sector can be attached, and not that of one in the public sector, defies logic. Therefore, it's long overdue that this type of legislation should be brought forward.

I certainly do support the point made by the member for York Centre that perhaps the only weakness of the bill is that it doesn't go far enough and that it should cover any other Crown agencies or special-purpose bodies under the jurisdiction of the Crown which may not be covered by this legislation.

A glaring gap that still exists, as pointed out by the sponsor of the bill, is that no federal government employee can be garnisheed. There are thousands of people who are thereby enjoying this special privilege of freedom from garnishee when it has been determined at law that in fact they do owe a debt, if not to society certainly to their fellow man who they have wronged. Why therefore, should this fiction continue and give a certain privileged protection to one segment of our society and not to others? In fact, it's a form of subversion of the laws that we have and the procedures under which a person can be rightfully compensated for the wrong that the person has experienced.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, it's without hesitation that I rise to support this bill. It is good legislation and, in fact, it has a very strong social aspect to it that corrects an inequity that has existed for too long and should be corrected at this stage. I strongly support the bill.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, I also rise to support the bill. I want to make a few comments. I think one reason I have for making a few comments is that I wouldn't want to go over the same ground the socialists did, because it didn't make any sense at all. Suggesting the entrepreneur goes out of business and beats people out of wages, then sets up in business tomorrow, is so far from the truth that it's ridiculous; and it's a shame that it should be recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Foulds: They record your speeches too.

Mr. Kerrio: There are many instances where, when an entrepreneur happens to go bankrupt, there are many other entrepreneurs who lose a great deal of money as well. It's not that I don't feel sorry for the individual wage earner, but certainly any time there is a bankruptcy in small business, there are many people who are hurt.

Witness the fact that in Ontario this August we've had more bankruptcies than we've ever had in the history of this province. The people to my left might decide some time to realize that they had better start helping small business and not running them into the ground.

Mr. Foulds: How many of the wage earners got their full wages?

Mr. Kerrio: In any event, I'll address myself to the bill in another fashion.

Mr. Foulds: How many got their full wages?

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kerrio: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. He is adding nothing to this debate.

The point that I wanted to make already has been made by two previous speakers. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the same sort of thinking that prevailed in excluding Hydro exists here. Many small business people are confronted with at least two different sets of rules, one for the government and one for the businessman. In this particular instance, I don't think anyone who is a wage earner should be excluded from the bill. I hope the member for Mississauga South will take that point into consideration and extend the bill to include everyone because, when we garnishee someone's wages, in reality we are garnisheeing something that that individual has earned. It in no way belongs to the government. It in no way belongs to us in the Legislature or anywhere else. It's something that we're attaching; the debt has already been proven in court to be illegal and that it should be collected.

I support this bill wholeheartedly and I hope that the member for Mississauga South will see fit to consider that kind of an amendment.

Mr. Davidson: Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of difficulty in speaking to this bill, because I'm still not sure in my mind as to whether I'm for or against. I am against the practice of garnishments. As the member for Mississauga South pointed out earlier, there are those who oppose garnishments on wages I am one of those because I feel that they are very demeaning and degrading to the person who is being garnisheed. Let me explain why I say that. I would say to the member for Niagara Falls that I am not going into the diatribe that my colleague did.

[5:15]

Mr. Kerrio: Go ahead.

Mr. Davidson: I am quite sure that even he is aware that there are those who are in the practice of lending money and selling goods, knowing full well that the person they are selling their goods to or lending their money to cannot afford to make any more payments out of the wages that he or she is earning at that time, and who continue to lend them money and continue to sell them goods on a payment basis. Then, when because of the actions of these people, the purchasers cannot afford to make the payments, they go and ask to garnishee their wages.

However, having said that and having to live with the fact that there is such a system in existence today, I suspect I will speak in support of the bill, at least on that point, because if you are going to have wages garnisheed, then it should be that everyone's wages can be garnisheed. The one thing I am glad to see is that this bill brings in Crown employees who have, over the years, as has been pointed out by the member for Mississauga South, on some occasions been exempt from garnishee proceedings against their wages. If this bill does nothing else it at least puts Crown employees into the same category as the other working people in the province of Ontario, at least in this instance.

I, therefore, would like to follow along with what the member for Niagara Falls has just called for; that is, to ask the member for Mississauga South, if he would consider expanding this bill to include all Crown employees.

Mr. Pope: I rise very briefly to speak in support of the private member's bill proposed by my friend from Mississauga South for the reasons that have been capably put by other members, namely, to have some equality in the enforcement of judgements and court orders in the province of Ontario, irrespective of the employer of that particular person.

I notice that there were some comments made earlier on on perhaps related topics. I think there are provisions for priorities under the Wages Act and Mechanics' Lien Act of this province which do serve to protect workers to some extent. Granted there's no guaranteed protection of anything any more, there are some provisions that do help the working man. I don't think it's incumbent or that we have the authority to review the provisions of the federal Bankruptcy Act in terms of the validity or applicability of some of the provisions of that Act and how they affect working men. This is simply an exercise of provincial jurisdiction.

There are, with respect, expeditious proceedings that are available and will now be made available through certain amendments to the Small Claims Courts Act to dispute garnishee proceedings and to bring the individual concerns and financial problems of a judgement debtor before the small claims courts and judgement summons proceedings. I think if those are exercised, and they will be exercised now in an informal way, some of the problems with respect to the extent of wages available for garnishee may be overcome. Certainly in my constituency office I always urge workers who are faced with that kind of financial constraint to appear before a small claims court to make that kind of arrangement.

With respect to the problem of deserted wives, I don't think there is any way we are ever going to solve the problem of the husband who is owing maintenance payments escaping to another jurisdiction, other than trying to enforce our judgements in that jurisdiction. I would draw to the attention of members that the Deserted Wives' and Children's Maintenance Act acts as an order of the court. If payment is not made under the provisions of that Act, the individual can be summoned before the court for contempt.

Granted that does not always result in a financial settlement that is suitable, and it does not always answer the financial needs, but again these are other provisions that have to be considered in juxtaposition with what we are dealing with now in this private member's bill.

I also feel that perhaps it is time this Legislature, as well as removing the privileged position of Crown employees with respect to garnishee provisions, also has a look at the problems of the Public Works Creditors Payment Act vis-à-vis the Mechanics' Lien Act. Perhaps it is time that we settled that area of jurisdiction or dispute as well, because it has created other problems. However, we are dealing with an Act to amend the Proceedings Against the Crown Act, and I am pleased to speak in support of it.

Mr. B. Newman: I rise to make a few comments on Bill 33, An Act to amend the Proceedings Against the Crown Act, an Act presented by the hon. member for Mississauga South. I just wonder why it took so long for the introduction of such legislation, seeing that this did come from a government member. I would have thought that this would have been government policy quite some time ago.

Naturally, the recourse now is as a result of the new setup here, that the private members can introduce legislation and it can be voted on and eventually end up being accepted by this House.

The member for Niagara Falls is a man who has been in business for years and years, and he certainly knows the problems he has as far as employing individuals is concerned, and the difficulties he gets when various creditors approach him in an attempt to garnishee wages of those who have not met their financial obligations. I would assume that some of those employees may have been employees of the Crown.

I support the bill on the idea that it is the right type of legislation. It is overdue. I also support it because of the fact that it will present uniformity. I don't see why we should be treating one class of employee any differently than we treat any other class of employee.

Mr. Foulds: This has been, in a peculiar kind of way, an interesting debate. I came into the House with an open mind on the bill—in fact, I intended to vote for the bill. However, the debate has persuaded me otherwise, because no one in the debate so far has convinced me that the garnishment procedure is a procedure that we should encourage in the 20th century.

The member for Niagara Falls came closest to putting that case. But if I can articulate my concern, it is that he stated the case, but he did not illustrate it, or show me, or convince me. In other words, there weren't illustrations from any of the members thus far that have convinced me that this is a procedure that should have universality.

Mr. Kerrio: You can take it either way. You can either take it right off, or—

Mr. Foulds: Yes. That's the argument that I would like to put. I think, perhaps, we should be going the other way. Instead of extending it, we should be taking it right off. That is the principle on which I will vote against the bill.

I must say I have some reservation about that position, because I can see because of the way that current court orders are enforced—or the way that they are not enforced—in those cases of a deserted wife, that that is the one instance where I could see this procedure being a useful one. However, it is my information that in the percentage of garnishments that are in fact used in the province, that the percentage used to enforce support, is very, very small. In fact the garnishment procedure is largely used for other kinds of debts.

It does strike me that the procedure is a 19th century one, rather than a 20th century one. But I agree with the position that the member for Niagara Falls in particular put, that you've got to have it one way or the other.

I'd like to suggest, therefore, that one of the ways in which this very touchy area, where non-support occurs of a deserted spouse, is that perhaps, through another legal remedy, the court be the body that actually pays the deserted spouse and is responsible for collecting directly from the deserting person. In other words, the cheque would come regularly to the deserted spouse for the amount awarded and it would then be up to the court to recover that by whatever means it has at its disposal from the deserting husband, in most cases.

I was particularly struck by one of the arguments that was put by the member for Cambridge. There are, and they are rare I admit, but there are occasionally firms that are fly-by-night operations. In some instances, people who are encyclopaedia salesmen encourage families to overspend. I've had experience of this when I was teaching in a small northern community, Armstrong, Ontario. They sweep through the north occasionally where the resources, in educational terms or library terms, aren't great, and families who have a great interest in having their children well educated are encouraged to buy a whole encyclopaedia on which they wouldn't be able to make the payments in any logical sense. They get trapped into this position, then owe the debt.

Mr. Kerrio: Loan companies do it all the time.

Mr. Foulds: Yes, and this practice, it seems to me, is one that obviously there should be other legal remedies to stop. But it is one that occasionally the garnishment process is used to regain the debt, and while it's a legal debt, it's one that shouldn't have been incurred morally and was enticed from the person, so to speak.

The other grave reservation I have about the garnishment procedure is that, despite a judgement made several years ago, it occasionally is used by employers to either harass or to sometimes dismiss employees. It is, as one person in the debate so far has said, a demeaning procedure. It's one that I do not think should be extended and I would rather see it diminished.

Mr. Blundy: I rise to support this bill. I realize that most of the valid points in favour of the bill have been made and made quite well by previous speakers. However, there have been one or two points which I would like to reply to.

The point has been made by at least one and possibly two previous speakers of feeling great sympathy and attaching a great deal of importance to the position of the person being garnisheed and pointing out that this is really putting that person in a very difficult position. I have to admit that that is the case. But you have to look at the person who has provided the goods and services for which the garnishee is being made.

[5:30]

He or she or they have acted in good faith and have provided the goods or services that this person has got. I can put forth just as an appealing view of why they should be paid for their services or their goods. I just want to make the point that while none of us like a garnishee of wages, and I know that it is creating difficulties for people who are garnisheed and so forth, it is a fact of life and we have it with us.

Therefore, I come to my second point and that is that we can't make fish of one and fowl of another. If we are employees of private enterprise or any private group, or the Crown, we must be considered in the light of these things as being all the same. Therefore, I support this private member's bill and I hope that it will gain the support of the House. Because as long as we have a system of garnishee—and as previous members have said, it may not be the greatest—but as long as we have it we must treat everybody similarly under that system, and employees of the Crown should be included.

So I want to add to those other comments that have been made my support of this bill this afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Mississauga South. I would like to inform the member that he still has eight minutes remaining in his time.

Mr. Kennedy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to thank all the members who made contributions to this amendment to the bill. It was a very good debate.

I perhaps didn't make it clear at the outset and I should have provided a definition of a Crown agency, but I felt that this would be understood. Let me quote from the Crown Agency Act, and this is the key in answering some of the points raised, I think, by most of the members who participated.

Under the Crown Agency Act, a Crown agency means: "a board, commission, railway, public utility, university, manufactory, company or agency owned, controlled or operated by Her Majesty in right of Ontario, by the government of Ontario or under the authority of the Legislature, or the Lieutenant Governor in Council."

So those who ask that it be extended, this definition covers that very point. And it is across the board by virtue of that definition.

The other thing mentioned—I think I raised this myself—Hydro was not included. It is and it isn't. I'll define a Crown employee under the Public Service Act. Under this, a Crown employee means a person employed in the service of the Crown, or any agency of the Crown, the definition of which I have just given, but does not include an employee of Ontario Hydro or the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission.

Why this is the way it is I am not sure, except that Ontario Hydro has the authority, within their legislation, to render garnishees against their employees. I am not sure of the Ontario Northland railway. I presume it is the same. But if not, under the definition of the Crown Agency Act, the individuals who are affected would be included. So this amendment would make the legislation fully equitable, without discriminating in favour of any person employed in the civil service, those who are paid out of the consolidated revenue fund. All agencies are included.

I made reference in my opening remarks to the family law bill that received second reading, Bill 59, and in this quite a number of the family breakup situations are dealt with. I am not sure that it could be broadened under this bill to take in cases of deserted wives and so on. Certainly, an employee of one of these agencies who deserted and was not making payments, the wife can make arrangements to have a garnishee levied against him because he presumably would still be employed with that agency. If he takes off, of course, there would need to be some other piece of legislation take over, and this is what the hon. member for Scarborough-Ellesmere was bringing up. So I think it would take it beyond this. This deals with employees. Of course their wages can be attached under this. But the hon. member makes a very good point, but I doubt his suggestion would be an appropriate amendment to this piece of legislation.

I think those responses cover the situation. The member for Port Arthur mentioned encyclopaedia salesmen and such; and there was some concern expressed of the harshness of garnishee awards. But, as the member for Oriole stated and it's been my experience as well, if the ability of the person to pay is taken into account especially under the present arrangement where a civil servant is involved. Under the Garnishee Act there is a certain rigid assignment of salary. In dealing with public employees there is a broader discretionary power, which is exercised, and thus that could be done, taking all the circumstances of the individual into account.

I thank the members for their participation. I didn't know that it would evoke such a response and I appreciate very much hearing from all hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: That concludes debate on second reading of this bill.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that, in the name of Her Majesty the Queen, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to assent to certain bills in her chambers.

Clerk of the House: The following are the titles of the bills to which Her Honour has assented:

Bill 4, An Act to provide for Successor Rights on the Transfer of an Undertaking to or from the Crown.

Bill 22, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Bill 34, An Act to amend the Public Vehicles Act.

Bill 35, An Act to amend the Airports Act.

Bill 36, An Act to amend certain Acts respecting Regional Municipalities.

Bill 37, An Act to amend the District Municipality of Muskoka Act.

Bill 38, An Act to amend the County of Oxford Act, 1974.

Bill 39, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Bill 42, An Act to amend the City of Timmins-Porcupine Act, 1972.

Bill 44, An Act to amend the Toronto Area Transit Operating Authority Act, 1974.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to provisional order 35, I am required to place the questions before the House at 5:50 p.m.

Mr. Speaker suspended the proceedings of the House until 5:50 p.m.

On resumption:

ANSWERS TO WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might just beg the indulgence of the House for a minute, before we break for supper, to take advantage of our turnout here. I would like permission to table the answers to questions 23 and 24 standing on the notice paper. (See appendix, page 1234.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: In accordance with the rules, I would like to discuss next week's work. The committee work is as outlined on the notice board with respect to estimates and private bills being considered by the justice committee, so perhaps I will just draw attention to Tuesday and Thursday of next week.

We should stand ready on Tuesday, that being legislation day, to deal with bills 60, 61, 62, 65, 25, 40 and 70—not necessarily in that order.

On Thursday afternoon, of course, in private members' business, we have two resolutions to deal with, the resolution standing in the name of the member for York South and the resolution standing in the name of the Leader of the Opposition.

In the evening we have agreed to take into consideration the final report of the select committee on highway safety and, if time still remains, we will go back to budget debate.

With that notice with respect to Tuesday and Thursday, the rest of the week is committee work as generally understood.

The House recessed at 6:03 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See page 1232)

23. Mr. Ziembra—Inquiry of the ministry: Will the Minister of Revenue indicate: How many first time homebuyers grants have been reviewed; when the review of all grants will be completed, as recommended by the public accounts committee; how many investigators are assigned to this review; how much money has been recovered to date; what percentage of all grants have been audited to date; what percentage of these grants have been paid in error; what criteria are you using to determine which applications are to be investigated—for example the location, the age of the buyer, the purchase price, the riding in which the home is located or any other criteria? Also, kindly provide a breakdown of the second and third payments of $250.00 that have been paid out in error. [Tabled October 17, 1977.]

Answer by the Minister of Revenue (Mrs. Scrivener):

The answer to question No. 16 concerned this matter and was tabled in the Legislature on October 17, 1977. The figures provided were as of September 30, 1977 and have not changed since then in any material way.

24. Mr. Grande—Inquiry of the ministry: 1. What were the number of grants the Ontario Arts Council has made for the fiscal year 1976-77? 2. What are the number of grants to each established cultural group in the province and amount of total dollars funded? 3. What are the number of grants made to individual artists and the amount of total dollars funded? [Tabled October 18, 1977.]

Answer by the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Welch):

1. There were 3,145 grants made during the 1976-77 fiscal year.

2. There were 1,095 grants to cultural groups, totalling $7,753,807 during the 1976-77 fiscal year.

3. There were 2,050 grants to individual artists, totalling $1,514,652 during the 1976-77 fiscal year.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1977

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

BUDGET DEBATE (continued)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, obviously we have the cream of the crop here, if not in quantity at least in quality.

Mr. Turner: Thank you, Donald. Thank you very much.

Mr. MacDonald: I don't know why flattery won't even evoke some sort of response from the government backbenches.

Mr. B. Newman: Let's take it as read, Donald. You are not going to convince any of them.

Mr. Turner: We are suspicious.

Mr. MacDonald: In rising to participate in this budget debate, I want first to extend my congratulations and best wishes to the new team who have been given the onerous responsibilities of presiding over this House. I know a little about you, sir—

Mr. Ruston: He won't say anything—

Mr. MacDonald: —and I have a great deal of confidence that you will deal perhaps a little harshly on occasion, but at least fairly.

Mr. B. Newman: Tell us the other side.

Mr. MacDonald: I know that the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Edighoffer) and the new chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Wilson Heights (Mr. Rotenberg) will complete your team. Just one further word. This House has sometimes been described, not inaccurately, as the most unruly Legislature in this country. Sometimes it is difficult to deal with the business of the province in the fashion in which it should be dealt with, if there isn't at least that degree of decorum and firm direction which is needed. Quite frankly I am hoping that we can move into a new chapter. I repeat, I congratulate you on your appointment to that position, and my best wishes for your efforts.

Mr. Deans: You might also tell him to stop telling people to drop dead.

Mr. MacDonald: It has been suggested to me that you might stop telling people to drop dead.

Mr. Speaker: In the cut and thrust of a question period, sometimes it is quite difficult to get out cease and desist at the same time. Therefore we got decease.

Mr. Foulds: Not a bad contraction, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: That is what you call alliteration.

I don't intend to speak at length tonight, Mr. Speaker. I want to deal with only one topic. There are many other members in this House who will be having an opportunity for the first time to speak on the budget. I have had plenty of opportunities to speak on the budget so I shall be glad to leave the time for others between now and Christmas.

The scheduling of the parliamentary year in the Ontario Legislature, in my view, has reached such a nonsensical state that it is worthy of note and condemnation in the hope that it won't happen next year or ever again. That is the only topic I want to dwell on in 15 or 20 minutes.

What are the facts? Before the House resumed this fall we had sat this year from March 29, to April 29 and after the election from June 27 to July 12, a total of 32 days. There was no valid reason why the Legislature was not called until March was almost over other than to meet the convenience of the government. And having met only six weeks this year by the summer, there was no valid reason for delaying the fall sittings until after mid-October other than, once again, sacrificing the business of the province to the convenience of the government.

If this House sits until the weekend before Christmas, we will have met for about 76 sessional days in 1977. That's just over 15 weeks or less than four months of the year. Mr. Speaker, you have to go back to the early 1960s for such limited sittings and, considering the greater legislative load that we now have, the situation is much worse than it was 20 years ago.

What is the result? Quite apart from the unfinished estimates, the Legislature is faced with what we were told in advance was going to be approximately 50 bills. And from the outset, the government has had to resort to the plea that half of these bills should be passed before Christmas because of their urgency, while the other half are being put over for committee consideration in the new year before they can be finalized and put on the statute books.

That's no way to handle the people's business, the largest and most important business in this province. Despite all the study of the operations of this Legislature—by the Camp commission and by select committees—we are going backwards. As far as the legislative year is concerned the Premier (Mr. Davis) has taken us back to the days of Leslie Miscalp-bell Frost.

For purposes of comparison it might be useful to put this issue in a historical perspective. In his book, "Responsible Government in Ontario," the first substantive work on the Ontario Legislature, Fred Schindeler noted that the average length of sessions during the first century after Confederation was 44.5 days—less than nine weeks or a little over two months a year.

Twenty years ago, the story goes, Leslie Frost used to check the date for Easter on the calendar, count back 10 or 12 weeks and call for the opening of the Legislature. Everybody knew that, come what may, the Legislature would be adjourned by Easter. It always required morning, afternoon, evenings and sometimes long night sessions to cram the business in during the final week or so. It was a war of attrition. Everybody was worn to a point of exhaustion. In essence, it was the old Procrustean bed approach: what didn't get crammed in and was left over at Easter simply got chopped off.

John Robarts, in my view—I have said it in this Legislature before and I have said it elsewhere in the hope that it may be of note in the academic world—John Robarts brought this Legislature into the 20th century, not only by providing resources for opposition parties—they had been denied that prior to his premiership—and by experimenting with changes in rules and procedures, but in the length of the legislative sittings also. By 1968, the Legislature was meeting 126 sessional days or 25 weeks, just under six months. In 1969, it met 159 days or 31 weeks, between seven and eight months. In 1970, it met 108 days or 22 weeks, between five and six months.

Then we entered the Davis era. In 1971, the sessional days dropped back immediately to only 86 or 17 weeks, just over four months. From 1972 to 1976 inclusive, the length of the sessions were 99 days, 121 days, 118 days, 129 days and 104 days. They never exceeded six months. This year we have dropped back to the prospect of 76 sessional days, less than four months.

That retrogressive pattern doesn't tell the whole story, Mr. Speaker, as I'm sure you're aware of. As the sitting days increased throughout the Robarts years, many in the government became restive. The opposition was allegedly wasting too much time. With the exception of the one year, 1969, we never sat for more than six months in what is oft proclaimed as a full-time job, the job of an MPP. Obviously, the government considered that length of sitting as too long. So a number of limitation tactics have been resorted to. It is interesting to just note these.

First, a ceiling of 225 hours was fixed for consideration of estimates. I never agreed with it from the outset to be frank with you, Mr. Speaker. When, as happened in Ottawa and as happened years ago in Westminster, the business of the House ran out the end of the year, so to speak, then there became a necessity for putting on time restrictions. We had never sat for more than six months, with the exception of one year. So the imposition of a ceiling in consideration of estimates, in my view, was not valid from the outset.

The result, however, with that imposition of 225 hours was that they had to be squeezed into that time. Often the most important and/or controversial estimates were left by the government to the end when there would be inadequate time to deal with them.

That was bad enough but it has threatened to become worse. We adopted the practice of sending some estimates out to the committee. It was decreed that 10 hours would be deducted from the 225-hour total for each ministry's estimates so sent out. Last year 13 were sent out, for a total of 130 hours, leaving only 95 hours left for consideration of estimates in the House itself. That was so obviously inadequate that the total number of hours has now been boosted. In fact, it has been almost doubled to 420. That is perhaps adequate except that now we're increasingly getting into the pattern of two or three committees meeting while the House is sitting. A two-ring circus is bad enough, a phrase that has been used to describe this House on occasion, this Legislature. A three- or four-ring circus, I submit is absurd. It becomes impossible for members to be present for matters that are of intense interest and concern to their constituents, when they may be under consideration in three or four places at the same time.

The previous understanding that no more than one committee should be meeting while the House is sitting has been wiped out by the schedule imposed by the government this fall. It seems, no matter what improvement is made, some new technique is devised for nullifying in part or in whole the progress it has achieved. The result is that public business is getting shorter shrift in this Legislature than at any time in its history.

I acknowledge that the handling of the business of the House receives the reluctant approval of the opposition parties' House leaders. But under circumstances such as we've had imposed this fall, there is no alternative, other than refusing to co-operate altogether—a rather common charge that is levelled from the other side of the House—

Mr. Haggerty: They would never do that.

Mr. MacDonald: —with the result that even less business would be done. It's the devil's choice the opposition is faced with. That being the case, it's absurd that government spokesmen should periodically be laying the blame for delaying legislation on the alleged lack of co-operation of the opposition parties.

[8:15]

Mr. Foulds: Very good point.

Mr. MacDonald: For example, my colleague, the hon. member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes), inquired of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations about a proposed amendment to the Vital Statistics Act. Under the date of July 27 this summer the then minister, the member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman), wrote to her, and I quote: "The legislation is ready for introduction. Scheduling is, of course, a matter for the government and will depend greatly on the agreement between the House leaders as to the time allotted in the fall session. I understand that only 25 hours will be set aside for debate on legislation." What a distortion of reality.

Mr. Foulds: And truth.

Mr. MacDonald: Obviously, as far back as July, the government had decided that the House wouldn't be called back until so late this fall that only 25 hours would be available for debate of legislation. This was the grapevine gossip, apparently, within the cabinet. Having made that decision to box the Legislature into an inadequate time frame, the minister none too slyly tried to lay the blame on the opposition House leaders.

Mr. Foulds: Positively shameful.

Mr. MacDonald: That was bad enough, but the Solicitor General (Mr. MacBeth) was back at the same old game during the so-called "late night show" on October 18, just a week or so ago. He attempted to deflect the criticism of delay in bringing amendments to some of his legislation to a lack of co-operation on the part of the opposition parties during the brief summer sittings after the election. Rather coyly, he observed—I quote: "There was a period in there when we were not moving very quickly, and as I would remind the House, I had responsibility for passage of the legislation and the kind of House that we have at the present time depends on the co-operation of all three parties."

It is ludicrous that the government should be blaming the House leaders for not getting more legislation passed in those 11 days of sittings after the election. We were attempting to do in 11 sessional days that which should have been done in the couple of months of sittings earlier in the year. And I remind you, the House wasn't called until March 29.

It becomes even more ludicrous that the government should be paving the way for using the same excuse this fall when the Legislature wasn't called back until past the middle of October.

There's an answer to this problem. It can be simply put. This Legislature should be meeting, in my view, at least eight months a year. The rules and procedures should be restructured so as to make the most efficient use of the time. In the introductory chapter of the fourth report of the Camp commission, which I'm sure all members have had an opportunity to peruse, particularly those who have been here for some little time, it was observed, and I quote: "Early in its study, the commission had a clear opinion from the Premier that he was most willing to look favourably on suggestions for better planning of legislative business, even"—and I draw this to your attention, Mr. Speaker—"to attempting the establishment of a routine parliamentary year which would spread the sittings and the recesses more evenly over the 12 months." End quote from the Camp Commission.

I will acknowledge that there has been a vast improvement in the scheduling of business in the House. Enthusiastically, I give credit where credit is due. All the House leaders, and without any detraction from the efforts of my colleague from Wentworth (Mr. Deans) or from the Liberal Party, I give particular credit to the government House Leader (Mr. Welch) because he's in the driver's seat. Let us have no illusions about it. But what about this willingness of the Premier to consider, and I quote again, "a routine parliamentary year which would spread the sittings and recesses more evenly over the 12 months"?

The Camp commission took the Premier at his own words and made a general proposal that the Legislature should be convened early after the new year, that it should recess for a mid-term break in the school year, and adjourn for the summer on the last Friday of June, resuming shortly after Labour Day to sit for as long throughout the fall as is necessary to complete the year's business.

Why has that proposal been so completely ignored? In fact, not just ignored, but defied? Maybe the Camp commission anticipated the reason, for a later paragraph in that report read as follows—I wonder whether they had their tongue in their cheek when they wrote it: "The commission doesn't want to suggest, even vaguely, that the ministers in Ontario and their senior officials have any contempt for the Legislature, or view it as merely an inconvenience to be suffered or ignored. On the other hand, it seems clear that the Legislature and its business—"

Mr. Foulds: Let the record show it.

Mr. MacDonald:—"have nothing like the priority they probably deserve in the plans of those who draft legislation and prepare estimates. That is, we cannot conceive that the senior people in the ongoing government of Ontario give sufficient consideration to the time and purpose of the Legislature."

That puts it squarely. I submit that the challenge lies with the Premier. It is idle to seek and attempt implementation of ways and means for making the Legislature more efficient and the role of the MPP more meaningful—that was the whole objective of the Camp commission—if the work of the Legislature is to be crammed into sessions of only a few months' duration and the work of the MPP is to be turned into a rat race of activities which are simply not manageable.

Mr. Conway: The Tories want a county council.

Mr. MacDonald: We are stuck—my final word—and I accept it, with this nonsensical schedule of business for this fall. But let it never be repeated, for it mocks the government's pretensions at legislative reform. Most of all, it makes it impossible for the Legislature to do justice to the people's business.

Mr. G. Taylor: I applaud my colleague across the floor from York South for the comments he made. Being a new member here, I've had some difficulty myself figuring out the logic and methods that are carried on in the House and whether the procedures follow any logic or not.

Mr. Martel: They don't have any.

Mr. G. Taylor: I'm new at it. Naturally, I'm trying to learn. I even brought a copy of the budget down. If it's a budget debate, I assumed we would talk on the budget.

Interjections.

Mr. G. Taylor: The assumption was in error there. When the member for York South says we do the wrong thing, here I am not knowing what to talk about on the budget. You talk about anything under the sun, I understand. I hope the sun is shining this evening so that I can talk about everything under the sun and continue from there.

I've read the budget. It's an exceedingly good one, and I follow it. I think the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) has put forth the ideas of this government, put forth their ideas and philosophy of this party and put forth his ideas on how to get the province back on its economic footing again. We start with a budget that is trying to be balanced in 1981, albeit a hard and difficult task in these economic times. Then we get down to the budget in our area, how it affects my riding of Simcoe Centre.

Mr. Conway: Great riding.

Mr. G. Taylor: It's a fantastic riding. I'm glad the opposition recognizes that.

Mr. Martel: If it was a great budget there should be no problem.

Mr. G. Taylor: There are very few problems. Every time they send back a PC member, they get fewer and fewer problems in Simcoe Centre.

Mr. Martel: You know it's hopeless.

Mr. G. Taylor: I look upon this riding, and I'm very proud of the riding. It is a small Ontario because there are not many things we have in that riding that some portion of this government does not affect or lay legislation to.

Mr. Foulds: Unemployment, true. Inflation, true.

Mr. G. Taylor: Employment, true. There are exceptional areas for ambitious people, exceptional areas for employment and exceptional areas for those who want to progress in a good climate.

Mr. Foulds: Hardworking people.

Mr. Conway: It sounds like a family compact.

Mr. Foulds: All spoiled by a Conservative government.

Mr. G. Taylor: We start off when I come down from the north.

Mr. Foulds: You call that the north?

Mr. G. Taylor: We sometimes josh in Simcoe Centre that Ontario stops at Steeles Avenue, but I informed my colleagues on this side of the House that it does go further north, Mr. Speaker, and we start there.

Mr. Germa: Goes to Orillia.

Mr. G. Taylor: I have there, Mr. Speaker, an Indian reservation—fine people, industrious people. They understand the economy. They have applauded this budget. They have applauded the things that this government has done. So we start there and move down into the forest and park areas and beach areas and tourist area and recreation areas. This budget assists them. We have had the summer employment programs.

Mr. Germa: At $2.65 an hour. Tell us about $2.65 an hour.

Mr. Kerrio: Tell us about Reed Paper.

Mr. G. Taylor: I don't have a Reed Paper in my riding. I am pleased about that.

Interjections.

Mr. G. Taylor: I mentioned the tourist area. This budget has helped the tourist area. It has enlivened that area. It has given the people in that area—

Mr. Makarchuk: You are mad with excitement.

Mr. G. Taylor: —some cause to support this government in their programs. I have heard applause from all sides on this budget.

Then I move down into the forest areas. There we do have paper; with reforestation, some of it goes to pulp and paper. This budget helps the small industrious person. It helps the small business person, so we have had success in the economic livelihood of that area. Then as I move further south, we get down into the farming areas. Again—

Mr. Haggerty: What about the farm land?

Mr. G. Taylor: —there has been some assistance in this budget for the farmers of our area, so there again I can be supportive of the budget.

Then we move right into the urban heart of Barrie. There again the small businessman has been focusing upon the aspects of this budget, giving it its support.

The Ontario economic outlook is not good. We do not have all the problems solved but there in Barrie we have expansion of residential areas, expansion of industry, expansion of tourism. We have the problems that are faced by this province of environmental hazards that are looked for and we are trying to take care of in this budget. There are the labour-management problems that have to be looked after and there again, we are not unmindful of the problems that we have in Barrie. So as we continue and the growth of Barrie continues, this budget will assist them in that area.

As I flow further south and get closer to my Toronto colleagues down here, we have the township of Innisfil and all its problems in growth. There, again, we have a Treasurer who is mindful of that growth. The regional priority funds that have come forth for that area, which has been growing, take care of the problems of growth—

Mr. Conway: He's taking care of them all right.

Mr. Haggerty: Love them in Niagara.

Mr. Mackenzie: You must have a piece of that Innisfil action yourself.

Mr. G. Taylor: Yes, I love Innisfil. It's a great township. I am glad my colleagues from the other side there recognize the beautiful action that is taking place in the township of Innisfil, the expansion, the dedication of the people to the expansion of Innisfil. There again as we move further south, the farm land is being preserved. I remember during the election how people used to come in and ride buses all over the concrete that was going to pave the entire area of Simcoe Centre.

Mr. Kerrio: Greyhound buses? Gray Coach or Greyhound?

Mr. G. Taylor: We will get to Greyhound shortly.

Mr. Kerrio: The minister is listening.

Mr. G. Taylor: I can assure the members that minister listens—a fine minister. And when we get on the subject of Gray Coach, I might even talk about it in this budget debate.

There again, we get to the threat that Simcoe Centre was going to be paved over. The people of Innisfil were not taken in by those who came and said it was going to be paved over; they voted the proper way. They will be proud that the expansion and the annexation of Barrie eventually will give them the type of economic and residential life they are looking forward to.

When we come further south we have the township of West Gwillimbury, the Holland Marsh and the farmers there—good farm land, industrious people, people who have come from other nations and moulded a farming community. This past fall the schools, again in their industriousness and community spirit, have taken the students out on a learning project by helping the farmers in the area. They have picked the vegetables there in a time of need when, because of the rains, they were rotting in the ground.

That again shows the community spirit of a riding both from the north down to the south, where they get together and work and realize that the economy, the economy of the farmers and the economy of those people, rests upon all of the individuals of the riding. The educators there took the students out and helped those in the farming community when workers were not available and it was necessary to get the work done immediately.

I heard one of the opposition members mention Gray Coach. There again I have put forth a position during the election and have repeated my pleas to cabinet on supporting the Gray Coach position because it does affect the people in my riding.

Mr. Kerrio: I hope they are listening.

Mr. G. Taylor: I leave it at that because I do not want to interfere further with the decisions of cabinet. The minister is listening to that. I am sure when it comes time to make that decision, it will be one that will be for the good of the most people of the province of Ontario, including those in my riding.

Mr. Warner: You will be sitting in the fourth row.

Mr. Conway: Listening won't be good enough.

Mr. Foulds: Lots of luck, buddy.

Mr. G. Taylor: Then when I look at the different ministries that this government is made up of, I say to myself, "Which ones affect my riding?"

Mr. Makarchuk: I say to myself, "What hath God wrought?"

Mr. Conway: What do they think of the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Miller) up in Barrie?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Renfrew North has already participated in this debate.

Mr. Cureatz: We would not have known it.

Mr. Warner: We painfully remember it.

Mr. G. Taylor: We look at the different ministries, how they are represented and affected in the riding, and how this budget brings them forth in a time of restraint. We have the Ministry of Natural Resources in the forest areas and I know how they are looked after by the Ministry of Natural Resources. The minister makes frequent trips through my riding. Indeed, I believe once a week he comes out and checks my riding as he heads north. I am pleased that he is concerned and aware of what is taking place in the riding of Simcoe Centre.

Mr. Foulds: Is he planting any trees?

Mr. Mackenzie: He sleeps through it.

Mr. Conway: What you need is a Minister of Revenue.

Mr. G. Taylor: The Minister of Revenue (Mrs. Scrivener), speaking of him—I mean her, pardon me—

Mr. Conway: You were right the first time.

Mr. G. Taylor: —has also paid a visit. We have a superhighway going right up to Barrie and the riding, so they all make very many visits. We have a good cottage area and tourist area. My colleagues across the House can be well assured that they pay particular attention to the Simcoe Centre riding.

Mr. Mackenzie: I take it you have never driven back on a holiday weekend.

Mr. G. Taylor: I think one of the fine features about Simcoe Centre is that I am also protected on each side from colleagues from this side of the House on the ridings on each side. I have a nice comfortable path right up there. I don't need to worry about people overlapping and causing me problems on any of the boundaries.

Mr. Conway: It might hurt your cabinet chances.

Mr. G. Taylor: As I go through, I can mention further items about the ministry, how we are represented by the farm business in the area, and how the Ministry of Agriculture and Food has its farm and experimental station in the Holland Marsh to improve the crops and improve the features of the farmer in that area. These are provided for by the expenditures of the budget.

As I have mentioned, we have forestry which is both managed and there for the luxury and use of tourism. It provides a small industrial base. It also supplies a great deal of recreational facility for the use of the people of the large metropolitan areas surrounding the riding. I am very proud of the Ministry of Natural Resources and what it does for the area.

We have many other ministries represented, not least being the Ministry of Health, running the Penetanguishene hospital. Should my colleagues across in the opposition need any assistance there I am sure they have sufficient beds to take care of them too.

Mr. Makarchuk: Your colleagues would probably feel at home there.

Mr. G. Taylor: The tourism area is expertly taken care of in this budget. In the Penetanguishene area the forts—

Mr. Kerrio: Of course. You've got a tourist area and you haven't got any tourists.

Mr. Cunningham: Who does the advertising?

Mr. G. Taylor: —and naval establishment are well looked after.

Mr. Speaker, when I speak of Simcoe Centre, I speak of it proudly. I speak proudly of its residents and of the people who come there. It is an expanding riding. It takes in an enormous amount of territory. It is both an industrial base and a commercial base. It has expanding winter and summer tourism. It has an expanding industrial community, the heart of it being Barrie. It has farming. It is what is "small" Ontario and I believe that as Simcoe Centre goes, so does Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough-Ellesmere.

Mr. Warner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Conway: Stand up.

Mr. Warner: I am standing up.

Mr. Conway: Prove it.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to take part in the budget debate. Before I begin my remarks, I wish again to acknowledge as we did last term, the service which you continually and consistently give this House. You always do a fine job and I, for one, appreciate it.

In a certain sense I think the discussion of a budget of this government really should be done where the budget is set and to whom it's directed, that is, we should all move down to Bay Street.

This budget and all the budgets that went before it are directed in one direction only. The purpose of them is to sustain those corporate pirates out there who have for so long managed to take money out of the hands of the workers—

Mr. Conway: And what would you know about workers?

Mr. Warner: I've met some.

Mr. Peterson: You met one once?

Mr. Kerrio: Now that is a good question, Elie.

Mr. Warner: I've met some. He wasn't included.

Mr. Germa: Sock it to him, baby.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, the budget that we've been presented with and the ones that have gone before it over 34 years have been directed towards one segment of this economy. The consistent handouts to those who don't need them—the corporate pirates that I referred to earlier—

Mr. Martel: Robber barons.

Mr. Warner: Yes, and the modern-day robber barons—

Mr. Turner: Even your colleagues smile.

Mr. Makarchuk: Right on, Dave.

Mr. Warner: —those parasitic creatures such as Harold Ballard and others. You know, Mr. Beddoes always had a phrase, "the Carlton Street cash box," and that very aptly could describe those parasitic creatures who run those types of establishments.

Mr. Turner: Elie, is this for real?

Mr. Kerrio: You have been watching those Japanese movies.

Mr. Havrot: I didn't know this was Stratford.

Mr. Foulds: You wouldn't be able to tell the difference.

Mr. Warner: It doesn't bother either the government or their right-wing counterparts on this side of the House—or what was affectionately referred to earlier as the two right wings of a turkey—that those budgets are directed in one direction only, that they do not even sustain the average, ordinary person in this province, and that they do not have any relevance to the workers of this province.

That may not bother them one little bit, but I find it absolutely obscene when my colleague reveals a list of people who, during this so-called AIB period, garnered an extra $100,000 in salary above the $100,000 they were already making. I know that there are people in this city who are starving. I know that there are workers who are forced to work at $3,000 a year, $4,000 a year, $5,000 a year—

Mr. Conway: Warner for leader.

Mr. Warner: And while this is going on, the government over there says, "It is absolutely ridiculous that a worker should earn $8,000 a year."

Mr. Conway: Warner for leader.

Mr. Warner: The Premier of this province stated that it was ridiculous, absolutely ridiculous, that someone should be earning $8,000 a year.

Mr. Kennedy: Oh, come on. That is not right.

Mr. Warner: And the leader of the official opposition—not the real opposition, we understand the distinction—made the point that it was absolutely ridiculous. It would drive people out of work and create further unemployment. It would drive businesses out if people were allowed to make $8,000 a year.

Mr. Conway: Warner for leader.

Mr. Warner: You may like controlled poverty, which is what this budget does.

Mr. Cunningham: Now you are getting silly.

Mr. Conway: Warner for leader.

Mr. Warner: As I set out in a very fair and objective way the parameters for the discussion, I am putting it in the framework that I have because the people whom I represent in my riding are not related to this budget. This budget doesn't have anything to do with them—

Mr. Conway: Just what are they related to?

Mr. Warner: —except to make their lot in life worse. I resent that. To think that the Treasurer would have the nerve to bring in a budget that is directed in only one way to support his corporate friends; to think that a Treasurer could continue to hand out $160 million every year in those tax writeoffs while denying working men and women the opportunity to earn more than $5,000 a year.

Mr. Bradley: Now be fair.

Mr. Warner: I'll be fair. The submission by the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) back in September, 1976, to the cabinet said, "You should be increasing the minimum wage in this province and those increases should not come any later than February of 1977." She provided a table that showed Ontario was number nine in a list of 10 of the lowest paid workers in Canada by province. She drew it to the attention of the cabinet. That submission to cabinet by the Minister of Labour was turned down.

It is wise and fitting in the eyes of the cabinet, and this government of Ontario, that workers should only earn $5,000 a year. While that is going on it is quite all right, thank you, for some of those corporate creeps to earn $200,000 a year. Obscene, absolutely obscene.

Mr. Makarchuk: I like that term. That is creeping corporatism.

Mr. Warner: If this government has any ideas about strengthening the obscenity laws, that is a good place to begin.

Mr. Peterson: You are overpaid.

Mr. Warner: And you are under-worked.

Mr. Foulds: Corporate creep has a nice ring to it.

Mr. Warner: The first of the items I wish to turn to is one that affects my riding directly. I was entirely shocked when I learned earlier today that the Treasurer of Ontario has decided to act in the most irresponsible manner that I could possibly describe.

In my riding earlier this year 700 families experienced severe flooding. We had a storm, the intensity of which we had never had since Hurricane Hazel. My riding, and the other parts that lie in Scarborough, experienced over $500,000 worth of damage. The average was $1,000 per home—per family.

Those families whose homes were devastated by the flooding are not people who can afford to make the necessary repairs; those are working people who live in my riding, people on fixed incomes, people working at the minimum wage. And this Treasurer apparently has decided that there will not be a disaster relief fund set up.

Words fail to describe how irresponsible and how utterly callous that decision is. I cannot understand the insensitivity of the Treasurer of this province.

Mr. Foulds: You did it for Bette Stephenson and your rich corporate owners of condominiums last year.

Mr. Warner: Those people will first be shocked, secondly dismayed and thirdly very angry. They will react in the only way they know how—by pleading and begging to this government for relief. They probably won't get it, because of an insensitive Treasurer who can find $160 million for corporate friends but cannot find $1,000 for a family to repair the damage that was done due to natural causes. A shameful behaviour for the Treasurer—

[8:45]

Mr. Germa: Shame, shame, shame. Resign, resign.

Mr. Warner: —and a shameful behaviour for this government. The whole bloody lot of them should resign.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's the spirit.

Interjection.

Mr. Warner: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the part about the whole lot of them and just put in the cabinet.

Mr. Foulds: The back-benchers will agree.

Mr. Makarchuk: They always believe there is room for a promotion.

Interjections.

Mr. Warner: I think the latest reject has joined them. I listened very carefully to the announcement made this afternoon.

Interjections.

Mr. Warner: I listened this afternoon to the announcement by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations on rent review and how he was now going to move to amend it to be six per cent. He was now going to institute, one, what we had told him earlier should be done and was rejected; and, two, what was the purported reason for the election. Laughable it may be but in $20 million and a slight shuffle of six seats later we are back at the very point we began from back in the spring.

Mr. Havrot: Who got the $20 million?

Mr. Warner: We told him that that is what should be done. He ignored it, said we had to have an election over it, and then turns around and institutes the very thing today.

And what will happen? You will raise the expectations of people in my riding and others who think that they might get a bigger measure of protection now. What a joke.

From the time that the rent review legislation was implemented we have never hit an average of eight per cent control on rents. The provincial average, it seems to me, and my colleague from Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) could verify it, but I believe the provincial average is somewhere around 14 or 15 per cent, increases in rent. And do you know why? Because this government never drew up the right kind of guidelines. The guidelines are the same as the kind of guidelines that we see in the budget: protection for those big landlords who own those places.

When you go to rent review on behalf of the tenants you find that the tenants are there at their own expense and the landlord is there at the expense of the tenants, because he can hire high-priced help—lawyers, accountants and bookkeepers—and charge the whole thing against the rent review. And the rent review officer, because of the guidelines that are given to him, must accept those charges and build it into whatever rent decision he reaches.

What a system. What a system. Purposely designed. And the message is there. It's there subtly in those guidelines. It's there again in today's announcement. "Hang on fellows over at Cadillac Fairview. Hang on you guys; just a little bit longer. December, 1978 will come and then it breaks loose and you will have a field day."

Mr. Martel: The catch-up.

Mr. Warner: "You think you had fun before; wait until the lid is off in December 1978—"

Mr. Turner: Can't stand it, eh, Elie?

Mr. Warner: "—and you can gouge to your heart's delight." And will they? They certainly will.

When we started into the legislation over the rent review process there were a lot of cases that were trotted out by members and explained in passionate terms trying to convince the government that they had to act; they had to protect people.

One of the most interesting cases I ever ran across was one that was never even settled through that rent review process. It involved a building not far from here—I believe it is in the riding of St. George—and I know it was investigated well by the excellent member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell). She always has an open and compassionate heart for people. She met with the people in that building and those people told her, as they told myself, the story of how there were some corporate characters over on St. Clair who wanted to turn an apartment building into a luxury resting place. They were able, by pushing the rents up, to push the people out, and as they pushed the people out they renovated the place and turned it into a resting place for their executives. This was at a time when we desperately need affordable housing in this province.

This afternoon we went through a question and answer session with the minister without housing over the Kitchener-Waterloo deal—and admittedly we need all the figures on that. We don't know exactly how much money is being spent on that land; we don't know exactly what those costs are; and we don't know the precise profit the government will garner from that.

The interesting statistic that came out of that for me is that we spent a great deal of time arguing and squabbling over what amounts to probably 200 units of so called affordable housing—200 units. I suspect that last year's budget has probably produced not much more than 200 affordable units in the province of Ontario. Juxtapose that against a waiting list of 10,000 people in the city of Toronto for public housing and we get 200 units from the government. Shameful.

It reminds me very much of the fights that I've had with Ontario Housing Corporation.

Mr. Peterson: You lost them all because you are no good.

Mr. Warner: All of us here I'm sure understood and appreciated the situation of the family who had to pitch a tent on the front lawn of this place a few weeks ago, in a desperate attempt to point out to this government that they did not have housing. They did not have a place to live and the major reason for that was this government—

Mr. Peterson: That's where I pitch my tent.

Mr. Warner: —because this government has no responsibility, it feels, towards developing good housing. There should not be affordable housing for the people of Ontario, according to this government, and it never bothers to budget.

I'm willing to make a prediction tonight that a year from now there won't be any Ministry of Housing. You're getting out of the business.

Mr. Havrot: Oh yes. Shame.

Mr. Warner: You're dismantling the thing.

Mr. Peterson: You're against housing.

Mr. Warner: And you stop and look at it—

Mr. Peterson: That's where I pitch my tent.

Mr. Havrot: Pup tents.

Mr. Warner: The member for Timiskaming seems to feel—

Mr. Peterson: He thinks you're crazy.

Mr. Warner: He seems to think I'm crazy. I'll tell you you're not alone.

Mr. Havrot: I know, because everybody else agrees.

Mr. Warner: If you think that will deter me you're crazy.

Mr. Havrot: Thank you, very much.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Warner: While the member over there may not feel it's particularly relevant that we talk about the disappearance of the Ministry of Housing, I ask him to take a look at what has happened over the last couple of years.

Where was rent control put? It should have belonged with Housing. I thought we were controlling the rents of a form of housing. No, it was given to the minister of corporate protection.

What happens to the Ontario Housing Corporation? What are they doing? They're selling off the land. They are getting rid of the land that they presumably were land banking for the use of the people of Ontario.

Mr. Germa: Shame, shame.

Mr. Warner: They are now a developer and a speculator.

Mr. Makarchuk: Cougers.

Mr. Warner: What is happening to the Ontario Housing stock in Metro Toronto? You are turning it over to the trust companies to run for you. I ask you what is left for the minister without housing to do?

Mr. Havrot: Bring out the straitjacket.

Mr. Warner: I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what is left for the minister without housing to do. We're just lucky there's no Senate in Ontario.

What is so frustrating is that this government has never really recognized that decent, affordable housing is a right, not a privilege. They have never recognized that. That is why we see the dismantlement of the Ministry of Housing, we see a total disregard for public housing and we see an absolute non-commitment for non-profit housing. The member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot) will be enthralled to learn about non-profit housing.

Mr. Havrot: Tell us more.

Mr. Warner: In Sweden, for example, 40 per cent of all housing stock is non-profit.

Mr. Havrot: What about the taxes in Sweden. They are dandy.

Mr. Warner: Yes, I'm glad you raised that question.

Mr. Peterson: What are you doing here? They kicked that government out.

Mr. Warner: In the last survey that was done comparing six different jurisdictions, including Sweden and Ontario, it was found that Sweden had the highest per capita disposable income after taxes; higher than Ontario. Imagine that.

Mr. Havrot: They have the highest taxes in the world and the highest costs.

Mr. Warner: And the lowest taxes of the six jurisdictions; lower than Ontario.

Mr. Peterson: That's because they changed governments.

Mr. Warner: And the best stock of housing in the world. And, Mr. Speaker, we'll add to it. Do you know who out of those six jurisdictions had the highest per capita suicide rate—

Mr. Havrot: Sweden.

Mr. Warner: —among children aged five to 11? Ontario.

Mr. Peterson: Scarborough-Ellesmere.

Mr. Havrot: The NDP.

Mr. Warner: There's a good reason for that; children's services in this province are an absolute shambles.

Mr. Havrot: You're driving them all crazy.

Mr. Peterson: If you feel you want to assist, you have our blessing.

Mr. Warner: What are you blessing me on?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Peterson: I said if you feel you want to assist you have our blessing.

Mr. Ruston: You should have stayed in the classroom.

Mr. Warner: The government should take those kinds of surveys very seriously and it should take them to heart. Despite what other members over there might feel, I find it very disturbing when I look at a survey like that to discover that Ontario has the worst suicide rate of those six jurisdictions, which included—and I should name the other ones—the United States, Canada as a jurisdiction, Ontario as a separate jurisdiction—

Mr. Havrot: What about Russia?

Mr. Warner:—Sweden, West Germany and Great Britain. To think that out of those six industrial nations, Ontario should have the worst record in terms of child suicides is a very discouraging kind of thing and it needs some answers. It's up to the government to provide them. They are supposedly in charge.

Mr. Havrot: Yes, the government is supposed to prevent suicides.

Mr. Warner: Most of us wonder, but members over there are supposedly in charge. If they have an extremely high suicide rate among children, explain it please.

Mr. Havrot: It's up to the parents. It's not up to the government.

Mr. Warner: That will give us a place to start.

I tell you what I suspect. First of all, children's services are a shambles, and one of the reasons is that we don't fund the Children's Aid Societies properly.

Mr. Turner: Everything is awful.

Mr. Warner: When we get to a Children's Aid Society which doesn't function properly, such as the Metro Toronto Catholic Children's Aid Society, what do we do? We turn our backs and walk away. If you're the government, you turn your backs and walk away. The government doesn't bother bringing them under control, make them operate properly and give them the funds they need. It just throws up its hands and says it will sort itself out. Nonsense; absolute nonsense.

I'm glad that the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) is here this evening—

Mr. Havrot: Here it comes.

Mr. Warner:—because I have a few little goodies for him. I'm not going to ask that the minister should justify the policy, or what appears to be the policy priority, over the last 20 years. Since he hasn't been the minister for 20 years that's hardly fair. I will, before I begin those remarks, certainly acknowledge that the Minister of Transportation and Communications makes a good honest effort at running his ministry and trying to do a good job. I acknowledge that.

[9:00]

What seems to me is the difficulty—and if I'm unfair about this I want to hear about it—is that the priority of this government has for too long been with the building and construction of roads and expressways as opposed to the development of good public transit.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Hog-wash.

Mr. Havrot: Hire more donkeys.

Mr. Warner: All right. You say hog-wash, and maybe you're right. I'm giving you my perspective on that. I'm saying that that's so.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Do you know what hog-wash is?

Mr. Warner: I will readily admit—and the minister may or may not be interested to know that I have on public platforms pursued this issue somewhat on your behalf—that the federal government has a responsibility in public transit, particularly in large urban centres in this country.

In Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, Halifax, they have a responsibility, I think, towards capital costs. I think that's where they rightfully belong with their money. They made a promise that they would deliver $280 million to Metro Toronto during an election campaign in 1974, in the month of July I believe, and never kept the promise. Not one penny has come to Metro Toronto from that supposed $280 million.

Mr. Bradley: But they did put that in.

Mr. Warner: When I listened to the statement that was made by the minister today, he's absolutely right. I suspect that this so-called revelation that was delivered this morning by the minister—was it Otto Lang?

Mr. Mancini: I heard it last night. It was a waste of time.

Mr. Warner: That commitment could possibly mean fewer dollars for Ontario than what we have been getting. I suspect that's what we might end up with.

It bothers me that we haven't had a stated priority, and the dollars to back it up over the last 10 or 15 years, towards public transit. I know now that you're in a bind—and I speak of Metro Toronto here—and that it's very difficult to develop a good public transit system with the high capital costs unless the federal government is going to get involved.

I recognize that. I understand it, but one of the things that could offset some of that, particularly for people in Toronto, is if the government would hand the grants over without the strings.

If the government says we're going to pay 15 per cent of the operating costs, so be it; but where the additional 85 per cent comes from is surely none of your business.

Hon. Mr. Snow: It isn't. There are no strings.

Mr. Warner: With the greatest respect, when I hear the minister's friends, such as the Metro chairman and the mayor of all the people, Mayor Crombie, tell me that those are conditional grants and they understood they were conditional grants; and they in fact show me—

Hon. Mr. Snow: You're totally wrong. Whoever told you that?

Mr. Warner: They showed me a letter from the minister which they construed to mean that it was a conditional grant, that if they did not guarantee that 70 per cent of the operating costs came out of the fare box the province would not hand over the 15 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Snow: That is a downright untruth.

Mr. Warner: Then I will sit and witness the fight between the minister and Paul Godfrey, because that's where it belongs.

Hon. Mr. Snow: There's no fight at all.

Mr. Warner: His interpretation is a little different from the minister's.

Hon. Mr. Snow: If you can't read, I can't help it.

Mr. Warner: We'll get on to the reading portion later, because the minister has fallen down there too.

Right now I want to pursue the policy a bit, because the money over the years has been spent for expressways. When I look at Toronto—and we know what goes on in Metro Toronto, a few years ago there was a chap who had a great design for expressways in Toronto, we should have one across the top of the city—

Hon. Mr. Snow: You have one.

Mr. Warner: —one across the bottom, one on each side; and a cross-town expressway.

Interjection.

Mr. Warner: Absolutely, right on.

The Spadina Expressway, that hooked up with the Gardiner; the Gardiner Expressway to the Don Valley and so on. Do you know what they did, very clever chaps?

They got the concept accepted. They then started to buy the land in parcels, a little bit at a time; and pave it, a little bit at a time; so that when you get embroiled in the fight you can say to the citizens: "Look, we are only going to extend it to St. Clair. We are only going to extend it to Eglinton." And the government of Ontario says: "Look, it's not a lot of money. We are going to pay x million dollars, because we are only paving it a mile and a half."

But as you do that, over 20 years, what happens? You end up with expressways criss-crossing your city, running the city in a way that the people of the city do not want.

The final crowning touch, of course, was the Scarborough Expressway; the Scarborough Expressway which a lot of people think has died. Not so. It is in a state of suspended animation perhaps, but it is not dead. Because you know, Mr. Speaker, probably hidden somewhere in this budget are the funds that are set aside for the Pickering airport.

The first opportunity you get, the airport goes in; and the minute that happens the expressway gets rammed through that residential area.

And you know the kind of expressway they are talking about; elevated. Elevated right across, through and over the houses. That's the path; the projected, proposed path that it takes.

Destructive, absolutely destructive. But you know you are willing to spend money on that. You are willing to spend money on a Pickering airport. You always have been.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Where did you get that idea?

Mr. Warner: From Dr. Godfrey, I was involved in that fight for a long time.

Hon. Mr. Snow: You know what happened to Dr. Godfrey.

Mr. Warner: You hid behind the fact — and the next time the airport comes back he will be back here.

Mr. Kerrio: Jim's the only one here who can't hide behind anybody.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio) is not in his own seat.

Mr. Warner: Very good, and his seat is in the gallery.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I don't wish to be unfair about it to the minister, but you know if it really is a policy priority to push public transit, I wish he would make it a little more evident to us and to the people out there, and back it up with money and with some statements.

Hon. Mr. Snow: How much money do you want?

Mr. Warner: Does the minister want me to give him a figure? For starters, I think what he could do is increase the percentage of operating costs by two per cent and we wouldn't have to increase the fares for the TTC; two per cent, that's all I want.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Another two per cent next year, two per cent the year after.

Mr. Warner: I didn't say next year, this year; two per cent.

I think the very real fight the minister has to carry on, of course, is with those characters in Ottawa, because they have an obligation, a responsibility. They may not want to live up to election promises; they never do. Nobody expects them to, but they should come across with the $280 million or some similar facsimile.

Hon. Mr. Snow: We put in $230 million last year and $230 million this year.

Mr. Warner: And how much on roads? How much on highways and expressways?

Hon. Mr. Snow: None on expressways.

Mr. Warner: None on expressways, the minister is saying that for next year. Mr. Speaker, I would like to—

Interjection.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Warner: You know if I could—I am finished with that so if you want to leave, that's fine—I want to go back to the housing question for a minute. Mr. Speaker, because you know I heard a gentleman on the radio this morning who had a very interesting question. He raised the question, you know, that the province, of course, has not provided affordable housing, they have neglected that. One of the difficulties in affordable housing is the high mortgage rates, and what the gentleman suggested was that since the province won't do it, since the province will not exert any pressure on those mortgage interest rates, since they won't even allow credit unions to handle that, perhaps what they could do is take some of the profits from Wintario and set up an eight per cent mortgage fund that prospective home buyers could draw on. An interesting idea. Perhaps the minister of Wintario will think about it.

Mr. Havrot: Real robber barons; shame.

Mr. Warner: That's kind of an interesting thought, when you mull it over. Mortgages are very high. The federal government has made sure that all those nice friendly people in the banks and the mortgage companies and the trust companies will make handsome profits. They have never bothered to be concerned about the home buyers.

The real answer to that whole business, of course, is that you simply legislate that a portion of those profits be used specifically for low interest mortgage rates. That's a change in the Bank Act that's required from the federal government, but they won't do it.

Perhaps this government could move in by way of Wintario funds and set up a mortgage fund. I leave it for the cabinet to mull over in their extra leisure moments at La Scala.

I would like to move on to the Ombudsman—

Mr. Havrot: Who?

Mr. Warner: Yes, who? That's a good question. I was part of the group who said that to have an Ombudsman in the province of Ontario is a very good and desirable thing. I felt we should spend some money on it and we should pass some legislation. We should allow the Ombudsman to operate in a somewhat free way to handle the problems of the people in this province when they cannot get redress through the normal channels.

I am becoming increasingly disturbed as the budget grows and we get up around $3 million for the Ombudsman's office, and I am not seeing results out of that Ombudsman's office. I have sent people there with some very serious problems—

Mr. McKesock: Why don't you do your own constituency work?

Mr. Warner: Because I am busy doing yours.

In one particular case, this gentleman had a very real problem with Ontario Hydro. He was a Hydro employee. He had, by mutual agreement, gone to work for two years for another government agency. When he returned to the job, his years of service to be applied against his pension were to start over again.

They then amended that to say "no, it would be all of the years he served with Hydro, but not the two years he had spent with another government agency."

Very strange. I don't understand the logic of that. They are two government agencies. He was on loan from one agency to the other, but he misses out those two years of his pension.

Hydro wasn't about to change their position so I sent him to the Ombudsman. There was nowhere else to send him. The Ombudsman came back with the same answer that I had found for the constituent five months earlier. I am beginning to wonder where our $3 million is being spent, and what kind of results we are getting for it.

I am not saying we shouldn't have an Ombudsman—

Mr. Peterson: What are you saying, then?

Mr. Warner: Don't get me wrong—I think the concept is a valid one. We need an Ombudsman.

Mr. Peterson: What are you saying?

Mr. Warner: First of all, I question the amount of money that is being spent. You know, the opposite side of that is that Morty Shulman said "I could run the show for $100,000." Probably not $100,000, but I'll tell you it wouldn't be $3 million.

Mr. Turner: You know what your caucus told him.

Mr. Warner: Morty could do the job, and would do the job; and he wouldn't spend $3 million doing it.

Mr. Cunningham: How much would you spend?

Mr. Warner: However, at this point I want to remain objective about it. We need, perhaps, to give the office a little more time; but I think that we have to have a pretty detailed examination of where that money is going, and of the results. Like the other 124 members, I got the report of the Ombudsman, and those little numbers don't do me much good.

[9:15]

There has been sleight of hand in this budget, as there was in last year's budget. A lot of taxpayers in my area and in the rest of Metro think their taxes have gone up because of the local spending on education. But it isn't so. This government in the last two years has reduced its expenditure on education for Metropolitan Toronto by 10 per cent.

Mr. Havrot: It's about time.

Mr. Warner: Only 22 per cent of our educational dollars are now coming from the province of Ontario, and the remainder is raised by the property tax. They do that sleight of hand because it isn't obvious to the people out there. Their tax bills come from the municipal politicians; so, when the education tax goes up, they blame the municipal politicians. Well, the blame rests over there, because it's this Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) and this budget that has helped to increase the property taxes, and in particular the education tax.

Mr. Havrot: You're all wrong.

Mr. Warner: Thank you. That makes two of them. There was one guy down here.

That kind of sleight of hand isn't going to wash forever, because the taxpayers are beginning to get the message.

Mr. Ashe: In Manitoba too.

Mr. Peterson: You've got your metaphors mixed.

Mr. Warner: Last night I attended a meeting to deal with education and there were close to 1,000 residents there.

Mr. Cunningham: I thought you bowled on Wednesday nights.

Mr. Warner: They wouldn't let me in the same place where the member goes.

Mr. Mackenzie: You guys have got a long way to go.

Mr. Warner: That's right. They'll never pin that one on me.

At the meeting last night, where there were approximately 1,000 residents who had come out to discuss the education portion of the Robarts report. The statement was made there, not only by myself but by others, that the real problem in all this finance rests with the government of Ontario because they're the ones who have been cutting back on expenditures and forcing the property taxes upwards.

Do you know something, Mr. Speaker? There wasn't one person in that audience of 1,000 who disagreed—not one—because they're beginning to get the message. As those property taxes skyrocket, they know who is to blame.

Hon. Mr. Snow: You wouldn't mislead them, would you?

Mr. Warner: Is the minister kidding? I don't play his game.

Talk about sky-rocketing taxes, the next little goody the government is going to toss at us—and according to the Treasurer it will either be just before the winter recess or in the spring—is the Blair commission stuff: market value assessment. Isn't that going to be a goody? Some of the figures are in now—

Mr. Kerrio: Dave, are you going to run out the clock?

Mr. Warner: Sure. Why not?

Mr. Peterson: If you are, we're all going home.

Mr. Warner: I share the hon. member's trepidation that I may not have enough time, but I'm quite willing to resume next Thursday.

Mr. Peterson: We are having a lot of trouble holding a quorum; that's why.

Mr. Warner: They have trouble holding a caucus, let alone a quorum.

When you talk about the Blair commission and market value assessment, Mr. Speaker, do you know that some of the figures are in, indicating that—and catch this one—a house with a 15-foot frontage in downtown Toronto will see a $500 increase in taxes? I'll tell you right now, Mr. Speaker, the people who live in those houses cannot afford a $500 increase in their property taxes.

Mr. Peterson: You are right. I live in one. You are quite right. Keep it up.

Mr. Warner: The member lives in one? He probably has one for a dressing room.

I don't know what it is that motivates this government to foist a $500 increase upon working people who can't afford that. I don't understand that.

Mr. Peterson: They hate people in 15-foot houses.

Mr. Warner: I don't know why they persist, for example, in punishing senior citizens by heaping the education tax on them.

There is a resolution on the order paper by my buono companio from Downsview which reads that education tax should be taken off for seniors. I started that fight three years ago prior to the 1975 election and have carried it on ever since, and will continue. This insensitive government sits there and says it's fine to drive elderly people out of their homes; that it is all right, there is nothing wrong with it.

Mr. Baetz: What about property tax credits?

Mr. Warner: Property tax credit, the man says! Do you know how much that is? At best $180 a year—big deal—for someone who is on the old age pension. Absolute peanuts.

Mr. Havrot: It's peanuts to you, I guess, but it's a lot of money to other people.

Mr. Germa: Why do you hate old people?

Mr. Warner: Do you know why I say it is peanuts? Unlike you, I have contact with those senior citizens—

Mr. Havrot: Oh, you do? You aren't the only one who has contact.

Mr. Warner: —who are told by this government "Sell your house."

Mr. Havrot: You have got a priority on virtue—do-gooder.

Mr. Mackenzie: At least we know you haven't.

Mr. Warner: No, I don't have a corner on the market, I just understand it. It really galls me to think when any person, but particularly a senior citizen, phones the government, which he expects is going to have some dispassionate, but objective and feeling remarks to make, and the government says to him "If you can't pay the bills, sell your house."

Mr. Cunningham: Stephen sold his.

Mr. Warner: He wasn't a senior citizen.

Mr. Conway: Oh, but he is growing old.

Mr. Warner: That treatment of senior citizens is absolutely wrong. There just aren't words to express the anger that I feel when I have a senior citizen in tears tell me that.

Mr. Conway: Did the member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) have you in tears?

Mr. Warner: No, but you will. Some of the members over here appreciate it and understand it.

Mr. Conway: I am old but not that old.

Mr. Mackenzie: You are about the oldest member in the House.

Mr. Conway: The Geritol caucus.

Mr. Warner: Some of the worst situations in Ontario today are for women around the age of 50 to 55 whose husbands suddenly die and there is no life insurance, there is no job and there is no income. No matter what social benefit you go to in this government, there isn't a sufficient amount of money to meet the needs of those women. Do you know what the government says then? "Sell your house."

Mr. Conway: So, in conclusion.

Mr. Warner: Last week I fell asleep during the member for Renfrew North's speech. I'd appreciate a similar return.

Mr. Conway: It is not that your speech doesn't deserve it.

Mr. Baetz: You can keep your house and still get welfare benefits.

Mr. Warner: Baloney.

Mr. Baetz: Baloney nothing.

Mr. Warner: With the greatest of respect, you should be the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Peterson: There is a real Tory speaking.

Mr. Warner: That is a solid Tory through and through. He should be the Minister of Agriculture and Food. He has learned how to grow baloney.

Mr. Cunningham: You are being silly again.

Mr. Havrot: You should know where baloney comes from too.

Mr. Makarchuk: The new technology—he grows baloney.

Mr. Peterson: If he could do it, he would be Premier.

Mr. Mackenzie: He thought he was going to be in the cabinet.

Mr. Warner: One of the most disturbing things that has happened in the last few weeks, and it is related to this budget, was the announcement by the Treasurer of Ontario to the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee that they could expect the generosity of a 5.3 per cent increase in the transfer payments next year. You and I both know what that means, Mr. Speaker. The municipalities have programs which must be fulfilled. Many of those programs, I remind you, are ones that the province lured the municipalities into. Once the programs are going, the government of Ontario gets out and the municipality is stuck with carrying on the program.

A good example is the day care. That is what happens with daycare centres. We'll give you the money to start them up; once you get them going we will take the money out and you run them. Fine, you run them; but where is the money?

Those daycare centres get operating and then the Treasurer says you are going to get five per cent increase next year. Five per cent; that is not sufficient. You know it and I know it. The Treasurer knows it and won't admit it; because what he says is those municipalities are irresponsible, they don't know how to manage their budgets, they don't know how to spend their money.

Mr. Conway: Insensitive Tories.

Mr. Warner: That's absolute nonsense. In the city of Metro Toronto, for example—and I'll give you a very real problem that we face; and if this government doesn't believe it now, perhaps they will in a short while when the report is released on racial violence in Toronto. We have a serious problem in the city of Toronto, and one of the answers to it, as identified by the Metro Toronto police force, is that we need an extra 100 officers. And many of those officers should be community liaison officers; we need community workers working in the community to help relieve the racial tension that has built up.

Mr. Conway: Give Phil a pistol.

Mr. Warner: Will we get the money? Absolutely not. I'll tell you right now, although this city identified the need for 100 extra police officers we won't hire one, not one, because of the Treasurer of Ontario. And as the racial problems build in Metro, as they get worse—

Hon. Mr. Snow: Darcy never was a policeman.

Mr. Baetz: Very inflammatory; you are building it up.

Mr. Warner: The duke of Chatham-Kent probably wasn't much of anything, but then again that is his problem.

But we live with it, because the budget comes back to us and we are told in Metro Toronto you are going to have an increase of only five per cent and you can run all those programs we set up for you. Handle the racial problems; try to run the transportation system; try to run the school system—and we don't have the money to do it. And the crunch comes back—

Mr. Conway: Is the educational system getting along without you, David?

Mr. Warner: Not as well. They are surviving, but just.

It comes back on the property tax—I see this whole dialogue has attracted yet another member.

The particular remarks although they are always understood and appreciated by the previous occupant of the Speaker's chair will have an even more definite meaning to the present, who has resided in this city for a long time, who has dealt with some of the problems that I have just finished outlining—

Mr. Conway: Vernon Singer has lost weight.

Mr. Kerrio: We won't hold that against him.

Mr. Conway: Is it true he is running for mayor?

Mr. Warner: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you will make every conscious effort possible to persuade the Treasurer of Ontario that his budgeting is wrong and that Metro Toronto needs more money, because we have problems that we cannot solve without the additional funds.

I would like to touch upon another area that is hit by those budget cutbacks. What happens when you start to load the taxes onto the property, what happens when you increase the property tax and decrease the amount of money which is spent on education, is that you hurt some of those—boy, it's bringing them from all over the place; how about that.

Mr. Makarchuk: A real, honest-to-goodness cabinet minister.

Mr. Warner: I welcome the minister who needs correction.

[9:30]

You know, as you cut back in the educational system, the first to get hurt are those children requiring special education. In particular—and I wish the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong) were here because he would appreciate these remarks. The member for York Centre—the other members of the House may not be aware of this—spent a great deal of time working on the difficult problem that children with learning disabilities face.

Mr. Havrot: I see you have that problem too.

Mr. Peterson: Was he your teacher?

Mr. Warner: So the flunkout from the gong show is still here.

As the member for York Centre knows very well those children who have learning difficulties have been abandoned by this province, absolutely abandoned.

Mr. Conway: He is a great member.

Mr. Warner: I believe the member for York Centre has taken at least one of these cases to court as a legal representative..

Partly because there are too many children in classrooms, the child with the problem doesn't have that learning difficulty detected early enough. He or she goes through, perhaps, some remedial classes, but without anybody really detecting what the difficulty is. When it is finally unearthed, the answer comes back, "I'm sorry but there really isn't very much we can do for you here in Ontario, because Ontario does not deal with this problem. But there is a place where your youngster can go to school and get the kind of specialized schooling which is needed." That is, to some of the special schools, such as Gow school in New York state, or other schools throughout the United States. The child can attend there; it will cost the family approximately $5,000 per year, but they can send the youngster there.

Because the government abrogates its responsibility in this regard, the parents are left to fend for themselves. You and I might think this particular expenditure and this particular concern should come under the Ministry of Education, but it doesn't. A child with a learning disability is not considered to be part of the educational system. Do you know the only people in this whole government who can help him? Rehabilitation officials in the Ministry of Community and Social Services. Somehow it's a social service if we help children to learn to read.

What nonsense. Because this government cannot take on the responsibility of educating every child in this province, parents are left saddled financially and emotionally with a very severe problem and that youngster, if he's to get help, goes to the United States.

Then Community and Social Services complain, and rightly so, that they are spending an inordinate amount of their budget on what really shouldn't be their problem. They're supposed to be rehabilitating workers. Why are they having to spend money on children? There's a loophole in the law, a spot in the courts; and that's where the money is for this assistance, if you can get it. But they shouldn't have to be spending the money on that, it's a function of education.

However, we cannot convince the government. In all fairness, I do not blame the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells). In my own opinion, with some exceptions, the Minister of Education has a very firm, compassionate understanding of the needs of education in this province.

Mr. Havrot: Right, way to go.

Mr. Warner: But the problem comes to rest on the entire cabinet, because obviously the argument—

Mr. Havrot: That was a left-handed compliment.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Not me.

Mr. Warner: Not the minister because he has just arrived in cabinet, and he may be part of the revolving door routine, we don't know.

Hon. Mr. Drea: If you are ever in one of my revolving doors—

Mr. Warner: The problem has been put before Community and Social Services, by members of this House, through the court system and through constituents, and yet the government refuses to do anything about it.

We've got another bill on the order paper, one that's been here for some time; it appears every year. It says that every child in this province has the right to an education. I don't know when this government is going to accept it. It hasn't done so over 33 years but at some point it has to because every child does have a right. The government has to meet the individual needs of each child in education, and it has to fund it properly and stop pushing that expense back onto the taxpayers. It's not going to wash forever.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Where do you think that money comes from?

Mr. Ashe: It grows on trees.

Mr. Warner: We could probably start with the minister's salary, but I'm not sure that's fair.

I keep getting more samples of potash.

Mr. Elgie: Sammy's waiting to speak.

Mr. Cureatz: Just five minutes.

Mr. Peterson: Let Sammy run.

Mr. Warner: I will leave that to be decided by the whips. You decide when I should stop, okay? I'm just getting started; I'm just getting warmed up.

An hon. member: Our whips have all gone.

Mr. Warner: Your whips have all gone? Terrific.

While I follow through on Metro, I was talking earlier about the racial problems that exist here—

Mr. Peterson: But not well. You haven't talked about it well.

Mr. Warner: —and are going to be underscored pretty heavily when that report comes out from Mr. Pitman in the next day or so. The Ontario Human Rights Commission has tried—

Mr. Peterson: They feel very sorry for us listening to this speech.

Mr. Warner: File a complaint.

The commission has tried over the years to work through some of those problems. Do you know the story, Mr. Speaker? It doesn't get enough money. The Human Rights Commission doesn't have the officers to pursue those cases. It doesn't have the investigative staff.

Mr. Havrot: Oh, come on.

Mr. Warner: Talk to Mr. Armstrong—

Ms. Gigantes: You know that's true.

Mr. Havrot: Just come to the estimates discussion and find out how much money they have.

Mr. Warner: Talk to Bromley Armstrong and Dr. Wilson Head, as I have, and the hon. member will find that the story is partly financial. They don't have the officers to pursue those cases.

Mr. Havrot: Where were you during the Labour estimates?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Everybody in this world tells you they haven't got enough money.

Mr. Warner: Listen, I know the minister is busy trying to lock up women. It's okay.

Hon. Mr. Snow: There's one over there you can start with.

Mr. Warner: He's got a brand-new jail in his riding to do it with.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Don't you like that jail?

Mr. Warner: By the way, what ever happened to the courthouse? I thought we were getting a courthouse in the minister's riding?

Hon. Mr. Drea: You are. You are. You are. That's three times I have said it.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please. Could I ask the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere to continue with his speech—

Hon. Mr. Snow: What?

Mr. Acting Speaker: —without listening to the interjections? I would ask the hon. minister to cease interjecting.

Mr. Warner: I would be glad to continue with my eloquent remarks. Thank you.

It's a very curious kind of spending that goes on. Most people here, other than the member for Scarborough Centre, are not aware of the exact geographic boundaries of my riding, but when they go to put a building in, there's no way it's going into my riding. It goes on the south side of Eglinton Avenue, which is Scarborough Centre.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That's not true.

Mr. Warner: The courthouse goes on—the east side of McCowan Road?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the detention centre is not in my riding. The detention centre on Eglinton Avenue is in the riding of the leader of the NDP.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I would suggest that the member keep that straight—

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. If you disagree with what a member says, you can raise it at another time, but that is not a point of order. The member may continue.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, although it's not a point of order, I stand corrected and I appreciate it having been pointed out to me.

Hon. Mr. Drea: If you don't even know where your own leader lives, my friend, you're not in much of a position to argue.

Mr. Mackenzie: That's why he wants to filibuster.

Mr. Warner: We talked earlier about the minimum wage and the fact that this government feels that $5,000 is a reasonable amount of money for a person to try to exist on today and that $8,000 a year is unreasonable, extravagant, way too high. While the government is doing that, it is helping to undermine the moral fibre of the people who work for a living. You don't require much moral fibre if you're George Weston, because you can be an economic leech and be praised for it.

There is no moral fibre required if you're an E. P. Taylor because, again, you can have parasitic paralysis set in on the nation and you get cheered for it. But the worker who goes to work day-by-day and works for $2.65 an hour, or $5,000 a year, is told that he really shouldn't be making any more.

What that does is say to that person that he's not worth very much; that society doesn't consider him very important. He reads in the paper that there are people who not only are earning $100,000 a year but get a $100,000 increase—it's obscene, it's absolutely obscene—but you're earning $5,000 and you can't get a cent more. That's wrong.

While we're with labour, and the amount of money that is spent on that ministry, I really wish—and I had the most dramatic case brought to me today to prove it—that the Workmen's Compensation Board would stop persecuting people. The person who came to me today has a case that goes back six years. He's had the most expert medical diagnosis available in this province. I choose those words very carefully, Mr. Speaker, because I researched that case very thoroughly.

Mr. Ashe: Are you sure it wasn't the Ombudsman?

Mr. Warner: After six years of being hospitalized every year for a certain length of time, and after having been thoroughly examined, today the Compensation Board says to him: "You're fit for light work." The man is lucky if he can walk from one place to another. He's racked with pain unending. He was diagnosed that way by the most competent medical experts—not Compensation Board lackeys, real doctors—and yet the board told him: "We're going to cut your pension." That miserly amount is going to be cut.

Where is the increase for the injured workers to begin with? In the budget we find money for those corporate characters who want an extra $160 million, but we can't find an extra $50 a month for an injured worker. That's obscene, it's absolutely obscene and shameful.

While you're at it, for the one cabinet minister who is left and hasn't been driven out of here, speak to the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) and tell her that she's got to do something about outlawing strikebreakers in this province. I suspect that the member for Scarborough Centre is aware of this particular incident. I sketch it out briefly to prove my point. The Becker strike. Oh, it's a good friend of the party in power. The president, Mr. Lowe, had his picture on the Tory campaign literature in Scarborough West. He's a good man.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Not in Scarborough Centre.

Ms. Gigantes: So what is the minister going to do about it?

Mr. Warner: They get into a labour dispute and there's a strike and the first thing they do is hire strikebreakers. The police, of course, as usual assist them through the line. Try and stop strikebreakers when they're in a diesel Mac truck, that's a fun exercise. You've got a diesel Mac truck on one side coming out and you've got police on horseback on the other side. The member for Scarborough Centre recalls that I raised that issue the very next day here in the House and the following day the horses were removed, thank goodness. What a vicious kind of thing to do.

You know what happened through all of that? You allowed the strikebreakers in, for starters, when it should never have happened, and when the strike was over and settled, 29 of the people who were legally on strike were not taken back. Workers who were on a legal strike, had withdrawn their services legally under the Act that is defined by the Legislature of this province, can't have their jobs back. That's wrong. Mr. Lowe and company will get away with it because that vicious outfit, Beckers, has the full weight of the laws of this province on their side. It had the full weight of the government, irrespective of any campaign literature with the man's picture on it.

An hon. member: Lock him up.

Mr. Warner: When I think about the difficulties we face in our hospitalization system and the inadequacies of the budget to meet those problems, I cannot for a moment understand why the province insisted on raising the premiums. This province decided to raise the premiums to the highest level for medicare of any province in Canada.

An hon. member: Right on.

Mr. Warner: And while they were doing it, one province was abolishing the premiums entirely—

An hon. member: Alleluia.

Mr. Warner: —and another was reducing them almost to the oblivion mark. Those two provinces were progressing towards doing away with the burden and finding that they could not only lower the premiums but at the same time they could increase the coverage. They could bring in dental care for children—and that's the first place to start; surely children should be getting good dental care, yet at the rates that are charged in this province most people can't afford it. They were expanding their medical program to better the lot for people in the province and lowering the premiums at the same time.

And what was this province doing? Reducing its service and increasing the cost. While we are at it, we should all remember that although there are large sums of money in this budget for the health care system in Ontario, most of the system is in private hands.

While we are at it, and it's very much a financial matter, I cannot let the opportunity go by without raising what I think is very much a serious moral issue with respect to the laws in this province.

My colleague the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziemba) saved the government of Ontario $2.6 million. He individually was responsible for recouping $2.6 million of money which had gone to those private labs and the province collected the money. The reward for that was that he went to jail and the crooks were out on the street. What kind of a province is this that says we reward your efforts for saving taxpayer dollars—$2.6 million worth—by putting you in jail and the guys who caused the problem are out on the street.

In addition to that—I was not here that day—but I understand that the day the member for High Park-Swansea, was able to come back here—

Mr. Ashe: He looked pale.

Mr. Warner: —after having protected our rights as members of this Legislature, he did not receive applause from every member in this House. That's shameful. He protected our rights. Because of his efforts, the courts are now going to look at our rights and privileges and see whether or not we can accept privileged information. I don't know about other members in the House, but I suspect most of them—I would certainly include myself—have had people who come and give information and ask that the source be confidential.

Mr. Peterson: If it was good I hoped you would use it in this speech.

Mr. Warner: I would be glad to send you copies of all those speeches. You will need a truck to carry them away, mind you.

I took information that was given to me in one particular case—it's no secret at this point, it involved the Toronto General Hospital—and I turned the information over to the Attorney General, without mentioning names, simply that it involved the Toronto General Hospital. I gave him the information and asked him if he would investigate, which he did. As it turned out there was not a sufficient amount of evidence to lodge a charge.

The point of it is that through that procedure, had I been pushed I would, I assume, have been asked to reveal the name of my source. It so happened that the source worked at the hospital at that time, and that person's job might have been in jeopardy. I wasn't about the reveal that source. I guess that under the silly laws that we have I would have gone to jail.

But I didn't have to do that—much to the chagrin of my colleagues on the right; and maybe some over here, for all I know.

But one of our members—I mean one of the 125—stood up for that privilege and went to jail for it; and the crooks were free. It has to be changed. But more than that, I certainly applaud him, belated as it is, for having the courage to stand up for all of us, the 125 of us.

I look at the social services and the money we spend on social services, and I can't help but say every time a dollar is spent on social services it has stamped all over it, "This is a handout."

The procedures that people go through are demeaning. When you go to welfare—and that's not directly your responsibility, the money flow through welfare, I understand that—but I have had too many constituents come in and I have had to phone the welfare department to tell them: "Look, I think you should shape up or ship out. Because you have to have some common decency when people come in to see you."

It's a demeaning kind of process to go to a welfare office and say: "I am destitute. I don't have any money and I have children who need clothing, who need to be fed; rent that needs to be paid. But I don't have any money and I don't have any job. I need welfare."

The welfare people view you with suspicion, with indifference; and they give you the third degree as though you were trying to rip off the government for huge sums of money.

You know something, in a city of Metropolitan Toronto they have just finished doing an exhaustive and extensive search of their social services budgets, on the amount of money that was spent and where it was carelessly spent. You know what they found in terms of fraud and the sort of common story that's out there; you know how many people ripped them off and for how much? I am just recalling from memory, but it seems to me the figure was something like $126,000 they have been ripped off for by 137 people—which is an average of less than $1,000 per year. Do you know what it represented in terms of the total number of people who were on welfare benefits? Point zero three per cent; three one-thousandths, 0.03 per cent.

We are ripped off by the economic characters on Bay Street for more than that per day. But that's quite all right, thank you. Every time we get ripped off by the coffee price in a store—I think the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Grossman) is aware of that now—but every time we get ripped off by a coffee price in a store nobody gets upset.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I do, and you'll read about it.

Mr. Warner: Well, the minister does, but he cares about coffee. Nobody really gets upset and does anything with those corporate creeps, but some poor soul rips off the government for $1,000 over the course of a year and the full weight of the government will come crushing down upon him. It's like the story of the Boy Scouts now, the Blair commission and all those austere gentlemen say we should tax all the property of the Boy Scouts in Ontario.

Well bully; bully! And they had better pay up or go out of business, because that's what will happen. You really have three choices; you either pay up, go out of business, or get the municipality to pay it. If the municipality has to pay you know where it comes from—the property tax again. Those Boy Scouts had better shape up or the full weight of the government is going to come crushing down on them.

Do you know what else Blair and those austere Tory gentlemen seated alongside threw in there? They said we should do the same thing with the YMCA—

Mr. Philip: And the CNIB.

Mr. Warner: And the Canadian Institute for the Blind and every charitable community group. Tax them, and if they don't pay their taxes let them go out of business. What a cold, callous government.

This government does not understand the problems of working mothers, especially working mothers who are the single parent of a family.

There are daycare needs. I had a constituent come to me and say she had worked it all out. She had landed a full-time job; a reasonably well-paying, full-time job for her, in her mind at $105 a week. Do you know something, Mr. Speaker? It was going to cost her $3 a week over what she was presently getting through mother's allowance, because the cost of day care for her two children, plus bus fare, were more than what it would benefit her to be working.

The system was saying to her; "Stay at home and collect mother's allowance, a mere pittance though it is, because we're not going to guarantee you any more money in the work place and we are going to force you to pay exorbitant rates for day care."

Ms. Gigantes: Is the member for Ottawa West (Mr. Baetz) listening?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, I am.

Ms. Gigantes: The member for Ottawa West.

Mr. Baetz: Yes, I am listening.

Mr. Warner: Those are very real problems and the government members—of whom there are only three present right now, let it be recorded in Hansard—do not understand.

When I toured the campuses of each college and university, of which there are 40 in this province, over and over again I got the same story from women who were desperately struggling to get a better education, because they needed to arm themselves with a better education in order to get a decent job to support their families.

They were deserted by husbands. Because of the laws in this province, a deserted husband who chooses not to make the payments goes scot free. Do you know what these women found? Barriers every place they turned. There were barriers at the university level; they couldn't get grants, no budget for that. You can't get a grant if you're taking part-time studies. You can't get any assistance with the purchase of your books. You can't get any day care for your children.

On top of that, the woman is faced with the situation that she has not been in school for many years, feels very lonely and feels it to be a very difficult situation. She's in classes with people who are 10 and 15 years younger than she is. This government never raises a finger to help.

Ms. Gigantes: You are going to do something about that?

Mr. Warner: The plight of women in this province is still as bad as it ever was. The member for Scarborough Centre may shake his head, either in disagreement or to get rid of the cobwebs, I don't know which; none the less he shakes his head.

International Women's Year accomplished nothing. Nobody listened over there. Do you know what affirmative action means, Mr. Speaker? To this government, it means affirmative inaction. Take a look at the number of women who are in positions of authority in the civil service. Compared with two or three years ago the record is just as bad, if not worse, than it was then. And it's not getting any better.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Not in my ministry.

Mr. Warner: Do you know what happens in industry? It doesn't mean that the women's wages go up, but in a lot of cases that the men's wages come down to what women's were. That's equality, according to the government; and it is not prepared to do anything about it.

[10:00]

Mr. Baetz: We have more women in our caucus than you have.

Mr. Warner: The member for Ottawa West is probably aware of what the good Treasurer of this province (Mr. McKeough) stated in this budget, Mr. Speaker: "Women are secondary wage earners." You tell that to a woman with two children, who is struggling on her own to maintain a family, that she is a secondary wage earner. What a perverse way to look at things, absolutely perverse.

Ms. Gigantes: The Minister of Correctional Services thinks it is funny, because his is the only ministry that is progressing.

Hon. Mr. Drea: We are progressing and you know we are.

Mr. Warner: Sure, why pay them more money when you can lock them up?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Not true, that's not true.

Ms. Gigantes: That is where we are making our advances.

Hon. Mr. Drea: In mine, that's right.

Mr. Philip: If they put you in a different ministry every year we'll make progress in 20 years.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, before I continue, I wish you to know that this is the first opportunity since the opening of the House that I have had to express my views to you. I want you to know that I, as a member for Scarborough-Ellesmere, am very proud that you have been appointed to the position which you now hold. I wish you to know, sir, that I have a great deal of respect for your ability; for your objectivity; and for the wisdom which you bring to your office; and in addition for your sense of humour, which was very well displayed this afternoon. Some of us may actually wish that those two leaders "decease"—I don't know, that's probably a good idea—however I congratulate you, and certainly the Premier (Mr. Davis), and the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) who seconded the motion for your appointment. I know that you will conduct the affairs on behalf of all of us, and for this Legislature, in a very good and dignified way.

Mr. Speaker, I was about to explain, particularly for the benefit of the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot), who I know won't make any remarks because he is not in his seat—

Mr. Samis: The anti-Davis member.

Mr. Havrot: That is why you are going after me.

Mr. Warner: He understands the House rules that you make comments from your own seat.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That has never stopped you.

Mr. Warner: A very curious thing happened to some people in my riding. They had been told, through the Ontario budget 1975, that there would be a home buyer's grant of $1,500 available to them if they did not own a home anywhere else in Ontario. "In Ontario," printed in the budget paper 1975 in black and white, and given to the real estate folks. Here is your advertising gimmick: Tell all the people that as long as they haven't owned a home in Ontario, they are eligible for a home buyer's grant of $1,500.

When the legislation came in that little caveat about "In Ontario" was missing, and the implication was anywhere in the world. So now, constituents in my riding get letters saying give back the money, pay it back to the Treasurer of Ontario, the $1,500. I asked the gentleman why. Because they claimed he owned a home elsewhere. He was told by an official government document, remember that as long as he didn't own a home anywhere else in Ontario he could collect the money. Do you know where the gentleman owned his house? His house was a cottage in England, which he sold, and can verify the sale thereof for 400 pounds English sterling. Do you know what 400 pounds is? Not even the air fare for his family to come to Canada; and for that the Minister of Revenue (Mrs. Scrivener) now wishes to collect. Because the government made a mistake the citizens of my riding should pay for that mistake; ridiculous.

What are we doing about it? First of all, the government is not doing anything about it, except they are trying to collect. My advice, and I think sound advice for any member in this House, is don't pay the money. Let them sue you.

Mr. Makarchuk: Garnishee them.

Mr. Warner: Take them to court and we'll fight it in the courts. How else can you confront an insensitive government? Not totally insensitive, because that home buyer's grant was available to Otto Jelinek. Ah yes, the famous skater of ice and politics.

Mr. Samis: A man who needs welfare.

Mr. Warner: Yes, in desperate need of help. He should be on skates, all right; roller skates and headed south.

Mr. Samis: He has to resign first.

Mr. Warner: I think that through this budget discussion we need an answer from the Minister of Revenue, because I don't think those indiscriminate persecutions should continue. How on earth can you say to people who were lured into buying by the ad that said as long as they didn't have a house in Ontario, people who would not have otherwise purchased that home, that because of a government error they should give back the money? How on earth can you do that? It's wrong.

Since I have just learned that all of the members in the cabinet have duly noted my comments and are furiously and frantically working on the solutions and will probably continue to do so into the wee small hours of the morning—and using their wee small minds to do so—I think that—and this will certainly wake up somebody—I wish to conclude my remarks.

I think the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) just fainted.

This budget provides the final chapter, the explanation, the conclusion to the decay of the economic system in this province. We are watching the government—

Mr. Samis: Only in Peterborough.

Mr. Warner: In the last little while we have dealt in a very highly charged way with the issue of the Sudbury basin and Inco. In some sense that whole thing is symbolic of what is happening to the economic system, which has never been strengthened by any budget in this province over 34 years; don't ever think for a moment that any budget brought in by a Tory government has ever strengthened the economy of this province, because it never has.

Mr. Havrot: Richest province in Canada.

Mr. Warner: It has handsomely lined the pockets of many on Bay Street and elsewhere, but it has never strengthened the economy. If it has, we would not be talking about Inco today; but because the government so easily discharges its responsibilities in economic planning, we watched the system in the Sudbury basin crumble. We have been so content to let all of that ore and the nickel be dug out of the ground and shipped off elsewhere for processing, with a few minor exceptions, and to allow other countries to dominate the major sections of our economy because we have allowed the multi-national corporations to control what goes on in this province of ours, we are now witnessing the desserts of that: that is that the economic system should start to crumble. It isn't just Sudbury and it isn't just Port Colborne.

An hon. member: It's Peterborough; Outboard Marine.

Mr. Warner: Outboard Marine is a good example that as you start to look everywhere across this province, Mr. Speaker, the manufacturing sector fails. Electrohome is in the process of going out of business. Look at every portion of that manufacturing sector and it is failing. Why is it failing? Because the government allowed foreign domination of our system.

Mr. Havrot: The robber barons of Bay Street.

Mr. Warner: As that economic system crumbles about it, the government continues blithely to state its platitudes about how we must boost up, we must boost up the economy with such direct, hard-nosed measures as tax write-offs for machinery; big deal.

Mr. Speaker, the budget is totally inadequate. It does not answer the problems of Ontario. It may be viewed with either pleasure or amusement by those corporate creeps down on Bay Street, but I'll tell you right now, Mr. Speaker, that means not a jot to the worker of this province, because no Tory budget ever could. Some day we'll have the opportunity to right those wrongs and get this province back on the track and back to work.

Mr. Cureatz: I first want to thank very much the hon. member for Scarborough Ellesmere for that two hour warmup, allowing me the opportunity of finishing my choice verbal jewels.

Mr. Warner: Do you want me to go past the warmup? I will do encores next week.

Mr. Cureatz: I rise with distinct pleasure to participate in the budget debate representing the good citizens of my riding of Durham East.

Mr. Peterson: Is that a new suit for the occasion, Sam?

Mr. Cureatz: I might add their wise decision to engage Progressive Conservative representation is a reflection, I think, of their support of this government's commitment to eastern Ontario.

Mr. Makarchuk: It cost them $4 million to get you elected.

Mr. Cureatz: That commitment did not begin yesterday, I might add. I want to review with you, and members of the House, our progress to date in developing and implementing specific strategies for this important region of the province.

The eastern Ontario Development Corporation is a case in point. Since 1966 it has provided loans of more than $87 million; in some cases that assistance was critical in convincing firms to move into my region, and in other cases it enabled firms to expand operations significantly.

Agriculture, of course, is one of the vital economic elements in my part of Ontario. There has been much federal, provincial cost-sharing devoted to the development of agriculture in Durham East. Agricultural and regional development agreements have provided $30 million in assistance to farmers to increase the number of workable acres.

There has also been help under ARDA for the improvement of forest stands and for the development of resource processing industries.

Mr. Haggerty: All federal money.

Mr. Cureatz: Money well spent. Manufacturing has not fared too badly either in the region. In the three-year period from 1971 to 1974 the number of employees involved in manufacturing increased by about 12 per cent, or slightly more than the provincial rate of increase.

Mr. Samis: How many laid off?

[10:15]

Mr. Cureatz: I don't want to minimize the difficulties that have confronted specific industries, but I think they must be placed against the broader perspective of the relative economic strength supported by an increasingly reliable industrial infrastructure.

I don't want to digress too far afield here, but when I speak of infrastructure, I think I should mention a concrete example that perhaps separates my views of Durham East's future from those of the opposition. I am referring to the Darlington nuclear station, a key component to Ontario's guarantee to its private and industrial citizens that the supply of energy can be relied upon to serve my region's legitimate future developments.

Mr. Samis: How much?

Mr. Cureatz: The opposition would like us to believe that Durham East feels somehow threatened by this development and of an increase in energy capability in the region, and that the project will in some fashion compromise our environmental integrity.

Mr. Speaker: that is simply not true.

Mr. Samis: Is that why you are satisfied with it?

Mr. Cureatz: The opposition parties will remain—

Mr. Haggerty: Out the window.

Mr. Cureatz: —on that side of the House—

Mr. Samis: What percentage of the vote did you get?

Mr. Cureatz: —for as long as they are unable to make those kinds of difficult decisions of leadership. It would have been only too easy for us to have demanded an environmental assessment hearing—

Mr. Samis: Where did the Liberals stand on it?

Ms. Gigantes: Why is your wife getting hysterical?

Mr. Cureatz: —and it would have been politically fashionable. But it also would have been wrong.

Mr. Samis: What percentage of the vote did you get?

Mr. Cureatz: When faced with the time-frame conflict of an environmental assessment hearing and the lead-time restrictions of the project, and when confronted with the realization that the project had been proposed long before the existence of the Environmental Assessment Act—

Ms. Gigantes: All the projects were. Every one.

Mr. Haggerty: The way the provincial economy is going, you won't need any more generating stations.

Mr. Cureatz: —and upon consideration that other nuclear stations—

Hon. Mr. Drea: Just against feds.

Mr. Cureatz: —namely in the riding of Durham West, constructed in Ontario with much less first-hand experience, had not damaged the environment or have hurt the people, the government made the politically tough decision to allow Darlington to proceed.

Mr. Kerrio: The tough political decision was the election.

Mr. Cureatz: The people from Durham East appreciate that kind of mature performance from their government, and I expect they will continue to receive it.

Ms. Gigantes: Why are you giggling?

Mr. Samis: You'll hear from them next time.

Mr. Cureatz: One of the gratifying aspects of the government's support in my area is that it forms part of a broader economic structure.

Mr. Samis: What percentage of the vote did you get?

Mr. Cureatz: In April 1976 the Treasurer released a planning proposal entitled, "Trends and Opinions." It was a study of population distribution and economic development.

Mr. Peterson: Nice piece of work.

Mr. Cureatz: It dealt with the need to support the decentralized development of some of the sophisticated economic activities that have tended to concentrate in the Metropolitan Toronto area.

Mr. Samis: What have we got since?

Ms. Gigantes: GO trains.

Mr. Cureatz: The study spelled out the desirability of encouraging in urban centres across Ontario, such as Oshawa and in the town of Newcastle, the establishment of computer installations, research facilities, consulting organizations, and advertising and accountancy firms. It also discussed the possibility of further development of social services, major libraries, recreational, medical and cultural facilities.

Mr. Philip: Women's lib.

Mr. Cureatz: The study suggested that such facilities would not only be viable in themselves, but they would also be an incentive to future growth because they would attract new investment and new enterprises.

Mr. Samis: Anyone talk about eastern Ontario?

Mr. Cureatz: That kind of long-range thinking fares much better than the management by crisis that the opposition so often tends to proceed on.

Ms. Gigantes: It's your crisis. It's all yours.

Mr. Samis: Election goodies. In your case, every two years.

Mr. Cureatz: The attitude towards future growth in Ontario is not one of confrontation, but co-operation as shown by the Partnership for Prosperity conference convened by the Premier this spring.

Mr. Peterson: Leave him alone, Evelyn. It's his maiden speech.

Mr. Makarchuk: How can he be a maiden?

Mr. Cureatz: It offered business, labour and government an opportunity to sit down and try to come to grips seriously with our economic problems.

Mr. Kerrio: Where are you going to file this?

Mr. Cureatz: We made a good start at answering some fundamental problems that require co-operative solutions. Part of the solution is to decentralize government offices, and I would remind members briefly that this process is already under way in the city of Oshawa and in other sections of the riding of Durham East.

Other aspects of the solution await more favourable conditions. In future, I will want my government to examine the role which expanded transportation facilities could provide in the riding—I trust the Minister of Transportation and Communications is listening—notably, an extended GO train operation which could be an assisting asset to my area.

Mr. Lawlor: He never listens.

An hon. member: Send him a copy of Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Let the record show he is.

Mr. Cureatz: The message of Ontario's Treasurer is not simply the call for restraint. It is the demand for clarity in our thinking. Our position on regional economical development is a reflection of just such clarity in government policy. It is a kind of disciplined economic approach that the times require.

Mr. Makarchuk: Back to R. B. Bennett.

Mr. Cureatz: In concluding, I would like to remind the hon. second opposition that if the former member for Durham East had done his homework successfully, he might have been here this evening.

Mr. Samis: What percentage of the vote did you get?

Mr. Cureatz: As was the case, he's not here this evening, but I do wish that former member—

Mr. Makarchuk: You'd better enjoy it. You've not going to be around too long.

Mr. Cureatz: —the best in his new position in the managerial spot with United Parcel Service where, I'm sure, all those wonderful

hon. members will be supporting him most grandiosely in the future.

Mr. Havrot: An NDP member turning capitalist.

Mr. G. I. Miller: It's certainly a pleasure for me to rise to participate in this budget debate. First of all, I'd like to congratulate you, sir, our Speaker of the House and the choice that the government, our party and all parties have supported because I know you are going to do a creditable job. I would also like to say thanks to the past retiring Speaker, the member for Northumberland (Mr. Rowe), for the exceptionally good job he did. His job was not made easy by the members who sit on either side of the House, particularly in the situations that we had been involved in. There may have been the odd time when he supported the government a little more than we would like to see, but I would like to congratulate him for a job well done.

Again, we are in difficult times at this particular stage in the history of Ontario. The economic conditions come clearly home, particularly with Inco and the anticipated layoff of 2,800 workers. The past election, which was really not needed, indicated that the Premier was more concerned for the welfare of his party than he was for the concerns of the people of Ontario.

Mr. Samis: Always is.

Mr. Ruston: Right on.

Mr. Samis: That's why he called the election.

Mr. G. I. Miller: The people did speak out and indicate that they were fairly well satisfied with the minority government.

I would like to point out that these problems are not going to go away. They're not going to be easily resolved. After 34 years of one particularly government, it is perhaps time someone came up with some new ideas. We'd like to feel that the Liberal Party would be capable of doing that and, at least, having input into this minority government as it's working now.

It was interesting to note today, as it came clearly through to me, rather than let the opposition question the government, the government came through with many statements by the ministry which indicated they were purely political. They were statements that could have been given at times other than the question period.

Mr. Haggerty: Right on.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Even the Minister of Transportation and Communications came in to make a statement at a prime time when I think questioning at this time would have been more beneficial.

Mr. Haggerty: He didn't want to spend $200 million.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I would just like to return to the election of June 9, I say it was a pleasure for me to be elected as the representative for the riding of Haldimand-Norfolk.

Mr. Peterson: They love you. It's a great riding.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I appreciated the support I received. I appreciated the opposition and the campaign we had in our riding. It was a fairly run campaign. My main opposition was Gordon McNern. I recall quite well when the leader of the Conservative Party—

Mr. Conway: Who's that?

Mr. G. I. Miller: —was in Simcoe, he indicated to the people at that time that the opposition was "Gord who?" and I think he was referring to myself. Anyway, our job is to resolve the problem; it is going to be difficult. I think our critic for the budget on behalf of the Liberal Party, the member for London Centre, indicated that the Treasurer deliberately painted a falsely optimistic picture of the province's financial situation in his April budget for purely political purposes in view of the then anticipated provincial election.

Mr. Conway: Shame.

Mr. G. I. Miller: He denied that he had deliberately overestimated our anticipated revenues. However, in September, less than half-way through the financial year, he admitted that his revenue projections had been overestimated by some $309 million.

Mr. Peterson: Disgraceful.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I think this is an increase of 34 per cent—

Hon. Mr. Drea: Once we get the corrected figures from Ottawa.

Mr. Conway: Tory hyperbole.

Mr. Peterson: Did you check the retail sales tax estimates? It is—

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the member for London Centre would want his colleague to continue.

Mr. Peterson: I would indeed. I am sorry.

Mr. G. I. Miller: On opening the fall session, the Premier called for a full scale federal-provincial conference on economic recovery, at the same time disclosing the latest bad news on Ontario's economy. I would like to say that we want to be constructive and that we do have to take some tough measures. Going back again to the election, unemployment is a problem, and we had a program which we felt would be constructive—

Mr. Conway: Great program.

Mr. G. I. Miller: —and we would hope that the government may take a look at it to provide employment. I think we also pointed out that our education system, and it is an expensive one—I think it takes up 25 per cent of the budget—which despite good teachers, and I will say we do have good teachers, but it—

Mr. Conway: Including the member for Cornwall.

Mr. Samis: The students from Renfrew need only look at the behaviour of the member for Renfrew North.

Mr. G. I. Miller: —does not give the students the basic skills they need to compete in the job market, and we have spent millions of dollars training young people for jobs that don't exist. I think that was brought clearly on to me last night when I had the opportunity of going down to the Chamber of Commerce in Simcoe—

Mr. Conway: Great place.

Mr. G. I. Miller: —and they had a speaker there, a Don Crossley, who had come up with tremendous ideas where we should be blending our education system with the apprentice approach. He also pointed out the fact that we have to emphasize that everyone can't be a white collar worker—that the blue collar worker perhaps is as important as any.

Mr. Conway: Hear, hear. There are some of us left.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I would like to point out an instance where I had a call from a young chap who had gone to Fanshawe college in Port Dover. He took a welding course, he has his ticket, and he has been trying to get a job and he can't come up with one.

As we pointed out to the Minister of Labour last Friday, there is a need for something like 285 pipefitters and welders in my riding of Haldimand-Norfolk in the Texaco oil refinery. They have applied for people for this position and haven't been able to locate them. They have imported 60 from the United States and there is still a need for something like 200 to fill those positions.

I suggested to the Minister of Labour that perhaps a crash program would be a good thing at this time and I still think it would. However, when I got home, I got a call from the union—some of the people who are working on the site and who belong to the pipefitters union—and they indicated to me that they are concerned about overstaffing—too many pipefitters and welders—which would put their jobs in jeopardy.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member find it a convenient place to break his remarks?

On motion by Mr. G. I. Miller, the debate was adjourned.

On motion by Hon. Mr. MacBeth, the House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1977

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

CORRECTION OF STATEMENT

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could rise on a point of privilege in regard to a question I had last Friday, October 21, on gas company profits. In line nine of my question on page 1016 it should read "12 months" in place of "six months."

Mr. Speaker: That is really not a point of privilege. It is rising for the purpose of clarifying something that was said earlier. It is in order to have done it but it is not a point of privilege. You are correcting the record.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

NEWSPAPER REPORTS

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I would like to make a brief statement to the Legislature today regarding the question raised here on Tuesday involving recent relations between my ministry and the Globe and Mail.

I have now reviewed this situation and studied the report referred to by some members opposite. This report was nothing more than an analysis of newspaper stories on my ministry written essentially by one reporter from April to September of this year. Analysis was compiled on the authority of our director of information services as a basis for discussions with the newspaper reporter and his editor.

This action was taken because our people felt some of these stories were only partially complete and were inaccurate in some instances. Civil servants, with their detailed knowledge of the situation, may be more sensitive in this regard than politicians. There was no attempt or intention to muzzle or intimidate anyone. Members of the press gallery know that I have personally always been accessible to them and have gone out of my way to accommodate requests for interviews and information.

There was nothing in the report which could be interpreted as an investigation of the reporter himself. Let me assure hon. members that my ministry only wants to improve our working relationship with this newspaper and its representative. We will co-operate fully with all representatives of the media with whom we deal, to provide the public with accurate and helpful information.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Mr. S. Smith: I rise to ask some questions of the Minister of Energy pertaining to some of the material which he was so anxious to table yesterday to demonstrate to the public that he is on top of the Hydro-Lummus problem.

Will he explain why in his statement and at other times he has referred to a contract between Hydro and Lummus for heavy water plant D at the Bruce nuclear site? Is he not aware, if only by reading Chairman Taylor's memorandum of my meeting with them on October 13, that no contract for plant D exists?

Assuming him now to be aware of this somewhat startling situation, has he any comment to make on the fact that Chairman Taylor in his letter to the minister of August 26 last, a copy of which was tabled with the material in the House yesterday, said that a contract for the design, construction and project management of plant D was given to the Lummus company? Can he give the House any explanation of how so many millions have been spent and hundreds of millions committed on this project without a contract being signed?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I think the Leader of the Opposition got close to the answer when he said "a contract being signed." In other words—

Mr. Wildman: You mean a verbal contract.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Exactly. You can have a contract without having to have it formalized in terms of the completed documentation. As Mr. Taylor, the chairman of Hydro, explained to the Leader of the Opposition when he sat down with him, the commercial practices in his particular area was such that you didn't complete your formal documents for some time. That may very well have been because of the engineering and so on that hasn't been completed.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, given the fact Chairman Taylor writes to the minister in the material which was tabled yesterday, saying that a contract did in fact exist between the two, and seeing that when I asked for that contract he said I couldn't have it because it didn't exist, can the minister please work this out between himself and Chairman Taylor and table in this House the existing contract, be it in someone's mind or in someone's verbal relationship? If there isn't any such contract, can the minister explain to this House how he commits hundreds of millions of dollars without any contract whatsoever?

Mr. Wildman: Come on, table your mind.

Mrs. Campbell: That's right.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: It's very difficult to inform the Leader of the Opposition in commercial matters when he has no background or experience in that area.

Mr. Nixon: I thought the minister was a sheep farmer from Quinte.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I think he might have a better appreciation of commercial affairs if he had worked from behind a desk than from a couch.

Mr. Kerrio: That's why he understands the minister.

Mr. Nixon: The minister is devastating this morning.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: It's not a question of a single document at all. If the hon. Leader of the Opposition would like to sit down again with the chairman of Hydro, I'm sure he would be delighted to take him by the hand and lead him step by step through all the procedures and all the commitments in terms of the overall contract in connection with Bruce D.

Mr. Reed: Supplementary: Does the minister not consider it normal business practice to have the agreement delineated on paper, especially when it represents in this case hundreds of millions of dollars? Does he not consider that to be normal business practice?

Mr. S. Smith: He is only a farmer. The minister doesn't have to answer him either.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Possibly the Energy critic would like to accompany his leader to the chairman's office, and again all the documents and commitments in regard to Bruce D can be reviewed with him as well.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: Is the Minister of Energy saying that he is quite happy with and entirely approves of Hydro's conduct in the negotiation of this agreement, tentative and final, and in the way the whole matter has proceeded? Is he simply giving a carte blanche approval to their procedures?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: No.

Mr. Lewis: Aha, I thought not. May I ask a further supplementary? Having finally conceded that point, would the minister like to stand up in this House and tell us, as he surely must deem it his right as Minister of Energy, where he disagrees with the procedures Hydro has followed, how it should have been done differently and what he will do in the future to make sure it doesn't happen again?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I would like to compare the question that was asked by the leader of the third party—

Mr. Nixon: With a question about beating your wife.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —to which I answered "no," with the subsequent—

Mr. Nixon: You should have said "maybe."

Mr. Speaker: Would the minister just answer the question, please?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —with the subsequent question, because I don't think that one necessarily follows the other.

Mr. Lewis: Are you going to take this guff on a Friday morning, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have no control over the way in which ministers answer questions, as long as they are in order.

Mr. Warner: He should just resign.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: The member is a disgrace to this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: My questions follow logically from the minister's answer.

Mr. S. Smith: My only fear is that the man should resign before I get my question finished.

I have another supplementary from that pile of wonderful material that was tabled. I show the minister attachment No. 8 from that material entitled, "Some Large Construction Projects," which apparently is intended to show—I know this is hard to believe, Mr. Speaker—that construction costs everywhere are going up. I direct his attention—

Mr. Speaker: Would you try to make a question out of it?

Mr. S. Smith: Yes, I will, but I have to tell him what I am asking about.

I direct his attention to item one on the list, wherein it is stated that the first definitive estimate for the Bruce B heavy water plant was $416 million and the current estimate is $506 million. But now I show him a second version of attachment No. 8, also in the material which he tabled, which says the first definitive estimate for the Bruce B heavy water plant was $567 million, which is $151 million higher, and the current estimate is $739 million, which is $233 million higher. I also point out that one of these—

Mr. Speaker: Could I have a question please?

[10:15]

Mr. S. Smith: Yes, can the minister explain how it is that there is such a discrepancy between the two? Is that in any way related to the fact that on one of these attachments is written, in handwriting, "first two sheets only for ministry," underlining "only."

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I will take that question as notice.

Mr. Kerrio: Cut his coffee off.

Mr. Eakins: Put him on tea. Save his energy budget.

URANIUM PRICES

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Premier: Can the Premier tell us what steps his government took in 1974 and around that time to protect Ontario consumers from the effect of the international cartel regarding uranium prices, given the fact that that cartel did benefit Ontario industry indirectly, inasmuch as export prices were supported? What steps did he and his government take to make sure that Ontario consumers were not being exposed to the same effects that were in fact being applied outside the borders of this country?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I understand that the Leader of the Opposition's federal leader has indicated that in the view of the government of Canada there was no such cartel.

Mr. S. Smith: Your federal leader says there is.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was never privy to those discussions, so I quite obviously can't comment or pass any judgement. I know that the Leader of the Opposition has been guided by the Prime Minister of this country on a number of other issues. I would assume he would be guided, as he is so often, in this particular situation.

Mr. Nixon: Our trouble is you are guided by Joe Clark.

Mr. S. Smith: You did nothing to protect us. Face it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Leader of the Opposition says this government does nothing to protect anybody at any time. The only thing I would say to him is that it is Friday morning, and I don't want to be provocative—not much—except to say to him very simply that one can debate Lummus and one can debate this contract with whomever it was—I can't even tell the Leader of the Opposition the name of the firm—Gulf something or other—as to the price Hydro may or may not have paid. The only point I would make to the Leader of the Opposition in terms of the responsibility of Ontario Hydro, while he may have all the criticisms in the world and some of them may have validity and some may not, the fact remains they are still the most efficient producer of electricity on this continent.

Mr. Makarchuk: And they are not private enterprise.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is also correct. I acknowledge to the hon. member—

Mr. Makarchuk: Don't forget that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —that it is one of the aberrations that has been singularly successful. I'm amazed you people don't leap to the defence of Ontario Hydro on every occasion you can.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Please ignore the interjections.

Mr. Swart: Because you don't want to see it work.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I shouldn't call Hydro an aberration. I don't want that to be on the record here.

An hon. member: Would the Minister of Energy be an aberration?

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, while the Premier is undoubtedly correct that there are certain benefits to be gained from Ontario Hydro, the question remains—and I hope he will address himself to it—as to what steps his government took to protect Ontario Hydro's consumers from having to pay a much higher price for uranium, through their energy rates, than ought to have been paid by Ontarians. What did he do to protect Ontarians from the international cartel price and does he agree that Ontario Hydro not only had its bid for uranium considered alongside all the other international bids by the cartel, but even ended up paying $2 above the cartel price? What did he do to protect us?

Mr. Deans: And did he know it was happening?

Hon. Mr. Davis: With great respect, the Leader of the Opposition got into this matter with the Minister of Energy yesterday, if memory serves me correctly, and the Minister of Energy undertook to get certain information for the Leader of the Opposition. I'm sure that information will be forthcoming. I think there was an article in the Globe this morning—I didn't have ample opportunity to read it—where Hydro provided some of this information, and I'm sure there will be more.

I would point out to the Leader of the Opposition that we have debated in this House the whole question of a two-price concept. We have, in terms of oil and natural gas, been somewhat in support. I remember the very lengthy dissertation from the energy expert then, the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson). You people were opposed totally to a two-price system in terms of the production of oil and natural gas in this country.

Mr. S. Smith: It was a mixed blended price we were against, not a two-price. Don't talk nonsense. No one in Canada accepted the blended price, not a soul. You didn't even put it forward the next time. You did nothing.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, come on! You people were opposed to it. You didn't understand it and you're trying to have it a different way on this issue from other positions you take—which is totally consistent with the inconsistencies of the Liberal policy of the Liberal Party of the province of Ontario. You never learn.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not a debate; it's a question period.

Mr. S. Smith: It certainly isn't an answer period.

Mr. Peterson: You are misleading the House.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I hate to speak in your absence.

Mr. Peterson: I heard it coming in. I couldn't avoid it.

Mr. Lewis: You should protect the member for London Centre. He's so vulnerable, Mr. Speaker.

May I ask the Premier whether or not he knew of the cartel at the time? It may well be that he wasn't any more privy to it than others. In the light of what has emerged, would it not be wise for the government to commission carefully a study of the price impact likely to be felt by the consumers of Ontario from 1980 on, when that uranium is applicable, and indicate quickly what effect for the consumer this kind of cartel arrangement has had and will have and, therefore, perhaps, put an end to that kind of nefarious arrangement?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the leader of the New Democratic Party is assuming that, in fact, there is a cartel.

Mr. Makarchuk: Sinclair Stevens thinks there is.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know what some people would suggest. I can assure the leader of the New Democratic Party that this government was not involved in any discussions with respect to the price of uranium. The first I heard of this was when I, along with others, read it in the paper. As I say, it appears to me that the government of Canada is suggesting that, in fact, "there is no such cartel."

I think it is relevant for the public of this province, through Ontario Hydro, to understand exactly what the cost of hydro will be, related to what Hydro is paying for whatever energy source.

I don't have this information. I'd be delighted to get it. My own guess is that one can argue whether the price should have been $2 more or less per pound, that in terms of comparative cost with respect to natural gas, oil and coal that the impact of the cost, because this is not the most significant cost in terms of nuclear energy—the significant cost is in the capital construction of the plant—

Mr. Peterson: You didn't show very good judgement on that issue.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—and that as an energy source one may find that it has a minimal impact in comparative terms. I'm not saying that any impact is not significant, but I'm saying in a comparative sense.

Mr. Lewis: Can we be told?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would be delighted to see that the Minister of Energy gets this relevant information for the hon. member so that he'll have an opportunity to discuss it and perhaps advise his listeners on CHIC, in case he's asked, because I may even phone him on that station to see whether he has totally understood the information he gets so that he could explain it to me in the process.

Mr. Lewis: Very nice of you. Thank you very much. Would you like the number now?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, I have the number.

Mr. Lewis: You've had my number for some time, it strikes me, or we might have done better in the last round.

INDUSTRY LAYOFFS

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a question of the Premier in relation to this, again, continuing pattern of layoffs in the province of Ontario? Is he aware that Emanuel Products Limited, working in the construction, I think, of television cabinets in the borough of York, has now announced a final shutdown for its plant of between 200 and 250 workers, effective on January 31, 1978, a more and more symbolic date in the life of this province?

What is being done in a co-ordinated way by government to attack this question of the roll call of layoffs that we're now faced with?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not going to minimize the problems faced by some industries, and I think it's a very legitimate question for the hon. member to ask. I would also suggest to him, though, that one can highlight the difficulties of these situations and perhaps fail to recognize that there are new industries being created which are employing more people.

I have every confidence in the capacity of the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett) and his ministry, to the extent that some of these industries can be saved, to deal with them.

I am not personally familiar with the Emanuel firm as it relates to the production of television cabinets. My own guess is that probably it is faced with a situation whereby—and it's only a guess—offshore imports are making it difficult, and the leader of that particular party probably has a greater sensitivity and understanding as to why at this precise moment we are facing very stiff competition from offshore production.

I don't think I need remind the House that one of the reasons we face stiff competition from offshore production is because our production costs are a shade higher in some fields than they should be. I think that is evident to each and every one of us and should be particularly evident to the leader of the New Democratic Party. He knows this as well as anyone in this House.

Mr. Wildman: That's your inefficient cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't know whether that's the reason with respect to this particular firm, but I shall endeavour to find out and get a report for the hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: By way of a supplementary, since we now have Inco highlighting what is happening in the resource sector, Anaconda highlighting what is happening to our automotive trade pact and Emanuel highlighting what is happening to the general manufacturing sector as well, is it not time for the government, almost on an emergency basis, to bring the appropriate ministries together to begin to see how we can absorb the consequence of these layoffs? Because, whether or not he attributes it to higher costs of worker productivity or inefficient management productivity—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Lewis:—can't the Premier intervene at this point in time and see if there is some way we can cope with it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't want the leader of the New Democratic Party to be personally oversensitive. I have never suggested that the reason we are less competitive in some products—and I emphasize "some"—is because of wages alone. I have never suggested that, and I'm not suggesting it here on this occasion. There are a number of ingredients that go into the competitive position which some of our industries find themselves in. Part of it is a question of wages; I'm not going to minimize that. Part of it is a question of taxation. Part of it is a question of geographic location. Part of it is a question of the size of market.

Mr. Breugh: And dumb management.

Mr. Warner: He doesn't have any answers.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There are a number of ingredients that go into it—

Mr. Warner: Management expertise.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—and I don't think any two situations are necessarily the same.

Mr. Deans: So what do we do?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I want to point out that there is perhaps a difference between what Anaconda is facing and what Inco is facing. I think Inco is facing something in the resource industry which, as I said yesterday—and I emphasize it—does not relate to the efficiency of Inco, the productivity of its workers or its ability to compete. I think that is distinct from the problems that are being faced by Anaconda.

Mr. Lewis: Not if you're a worker being laid off, there ain't no difference.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm quite aware of that particular fact, but in terms of our discussions here I would urge the leader of the New Democratic Party, because he does have this ability, to distinguish between those industries that are having difficulty competing because of production costs for whatever reason—

Mr. Lewis: The consequences are the same for the workers.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—and those industries, particularly in the resource sector—and there is a difference—that are being inhibited at this moment because of market conditions, because people aren't buying their products. I think there is a very distinct difference.

Mr. Lewis: What will the Premier do?

Mr. Deans: Supplementary. Would the Premier agree that part of the problem which he hasn't identified in the litany of things he says contribute, is that because of the branch plant nature of Ontario's economy, and Canada's economy, and because of the fact that many of the parent companies will not permit the branch plants in Canada, and in Ontario in particular, to compete in world markets and for world markets, that we are grossly inhibited—

Mr. Speaker: I haven't heard a question.

Mr. Deans: You haven't?

Mr. Speaker: I haven't heard a question yet.

Mr. Deans: I said, "Would the Premier not agree . . .?" Is that not a question?

Mr. Speaker: No.

Mr. Deans: Isn't it?

An hon. member: It used to be.

Mr. Deans: It has been for 10 years.

Mr. Speaker: Try again.

Mr. Wildman: Is it correct?

Mr. Deans: Forget it.

Mr. Lewis: Since Chaucer. Good heavens, wouldst thou not agree?

BURNING PCBs

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Minister of the Environment, since there is such evident anxiety in Mississauga about the burning of PCBs, and whether it was an experiment or whether it is permanent, can he undertake either to have a public hearing very quickly or to visit himself, with the residents and the council, to clear up what is now reaching levels of public apprehension that are really unsettling?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I intend to have a public hearing some time next month.

Mr. Lewis: Good. At that public hearing, by way of a supplementary, will the minister be dealing with these certificates of approval and will it be possible to indicate what is experimental and what is permanent in the process he is advocating?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, I would assume the whole arrangement with the company would be explained.

Mr. Lewis: I have one last supplementary and then I will vacate. Is the minister saying that he is now ready, in effect, to proceed—providing the public hearing gives approval—with this burning of these toxic substances on a permanent basis in Mississauga?

[10:30]

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, there is still a recommendation of our branch. There are one or two things still to be done resulting from a report which resulted from the experiment. The report recommends better monitoring facilities right at the plant site, in the vicinity of the plant, and also that the company improves some of its storage-handling facilities so that there will be no what they call fugitive emissions from the plant. That work will be done before a certificate would be, shall we say, reopened.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: would the minister be willing also to have a public hearing in the Windsor area seeing that the citizens are very much concerned with the effects of the burning of PCBs just a mile and a half or two miles away from them in Detroit?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The hon. member is talking about a facility in Detroit, an American plant. I understand they are at present holding hearings in that city, which I am sure the residents of Windsor could attend.

Mr. B. Newman: They do attend.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There is no reason why officials of my ministry can't hold a meeting to explain what is going on in Detroit and also invite the US authorities to that meeting.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary: I am sure the minister understands that the Ministry of the Environment has considerable influence on that licence application in Detroit. Before the ministry made up its mind to endorse the application, why didn't the minister have the public hearings at that point? Why does he wait until after he has already made up his mind?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It wasn't a question of endorsing the application; we were working with US authorities in Detroit, both the city and state, and I believe the Environmental Protection Agency there, and indicating that if certain things which had been done at the St. Lawrence Cement plant in Mississauga were done at the Peerless plant, if the same type of experiment had been carried out and if the same requirements and conditions were provided, then as far as its licence is concerned, on that basis we were satisfied with that process.

Mr. Kennedy: Supplementary: Would the minister confirm that up to today, through the summer, nothing has happened at the St. Lawrence Cement plant with respect to PCB burning since April when it was stopped and that the only thing that has occurred are the news articles which have appeared in respect to this matter? In other words, there is no activity or there has not been any activity since—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Kennedy:—since April when the burning ceased.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: In answer to the hon. member, I believe on Tuesday or Wednesday I indicated that there has been no PCB burning there since the spring and there is none going on now.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Supplementary: As the minister is aware that they are trying to establish a site in my riding of Haldimand-Norfolk for industrial waste and that the hearing has just been completed, could he indicate to the House and to the public what has been disposed of at Mississauga and what quantity has been disposed of up to this point in time?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I am a little confused. The hon. member is talking about a hearing in Nanticoke and he wants some information on what has been disposed of in Mississauga?

Mr. G. I. Miller: That occurred to me because I think it's a way of disposing without disturbing another area and particularly bringing this waste into an area that didn't have it. It's a way of disposing of it and I was just wondering what already has been disposed and how effective it has been.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As to what would be planned for Nanticoke, my information is that the application for a facility at Nanticoke is not the same as for the facility at Mississauga.

I am not aware of any permission to burn PCB material or handle PCB material at the Nanticoke site that was subject to a recent Environmental Assessment Board hearing.

If the hon. member wants to know the quantity of material that has been burned during this experiment at Mississauga, I can get him that information.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Supplementary: I asked what materials have been disposed of at Mississauga.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Waste oils and some PCB-contaminated material. This is material that is being used to generate heat to make cement.

WINTARIO FUNDS

Mr. Kerrio: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the absence of the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Welch), I will put this question to the Premier. Does the Premier recall the question I raised yesterday with that minister in regard to the $29 million increase in Culture and Recreation estimates and his answer that most of it would be attributed to Wintario? Does he recall that question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have some recollection of the hon. member for Niagara Falls saying something about Wintario. I can't help him any more than that. Does he have a question of me?

Mr. Kerrio: I was just teeing up a supplementary.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I fully appreciate that.

Mr. Kerrio:—and I can now address the supplementary to the Premier. In view of the fact that the minister made the statement that this increase could be attributed in Wintario, and since the cabinet has made it its business to continue to treat Wintario funds as sacred, only to be used in kind of frivolous manner, can the Premier assure this House and the people of this province that as long as the ministry is not willing to spend Wintario funds in a more responsible way, can he guarantee us that we are not going to subsidize Wintario, in the administration of that fiasco, with tax dollars?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think those are very provocative words. I would only urge that the member chats to some of his colleagues—and there are a few I know of whose communities were able to rebuild and alter arenas—and perhaps he might suggest to them that this application of Wintario money was totally irrelevant and unnecessary.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Do the members want an answer to the question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say, with respect, to suggest that some of these grants and the Wintario funds are frivolous in nature—really, perhaps the member might consult with those who have been the recipients and see if he gets the same point of view. I would start with some of his own colleagues, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: The important supplementary has not been answered. I asked if the Premier would guarantee, or promise me, that he will not subsidize the operation of Wintario with tax dollars? That's the important question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In that the gentleman who has this responsibility is now with us, and I know the member for Niagara Falls would want to have the most accurate, up-to-date information, I think you would agree, Mr. Speaker, that this question might be redirected. I would be delighted to listen to my colleague's answer.

Mr. Kerrio: I redirect to the Minister of Culture and Recreation.

Mr. Speaker: Did the hon. Minister of Culture and Recreation hear that?

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, what's going on? One question at a time.

Mr. Speaker: It is just being redirected.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Minister, the questions are taxpayers' dollars being used to administer Wintario?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, no.

Mr. Kerrio: You said it was yesterday.

Mr. Lewis: Why are you equivocating? Why can't you be unqualified?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I indicated—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been answered. I recognize the hon. member for Welland-Thorold.

TEA AND COFFEE PRICING

Mr. Swart: My question is of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. In view of the fact that the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea)—who, of course, is the immediate past parliamentary assistant to the former minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations—has now determined, according to this morning's paper, that his ministry is being ripped off by the coffee producers and "his ministry can't afford it any more," will the minister tell the House what information he has had supplied to him? Will he tell us what his government and the AIB have done to protect the consumer since I first raised the coffee pricing rip-off with his ministry more than two months ago?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I know the hon. member will have been pleased to see the price of coffee start to drop back in the last few weeks and I want to let him know that we have now received responses from, I think, everyone I wrote. There may be one person, one company, perhaps but they have provided full and complete explanations and I hope to get them into the members' hands some time, maybe as early as later today—more realistically some time Monday. I think you'll find they speak for themselves and I'm happy to say that our action apparently has spoken for itself, as well.

Mr. Swart: By way of supplementary, I would ask the minister if he isn't aware that the rip-off price of coffee to the ministry, about which the Minister of Correctional Services complains, is $2.94 a pound, while consumers have been forced to pay $4 to $4.50 a pound? If he is aware of this, in spite of the fact that he has received these responses—which, I suggest will not be reducing the price of coffee to anything like that level—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Swart: —wouldn't he now agree that this warrants a full inquiry into coffee pricing, instead of just letters to the companies? And will he appoint a select committee or refer the coffee pricing issue to a standing committee of the House for such an inquiry?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I'm happy to say the member's colleague, the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip), saw the very good sense of first being practical enough to write to see what basic information we could collect before he jumped to the conclusion that we should spend a few hundred thousand dollars—perhaps sending a select committee to Buffalo, Los Angeles and Miami—to find out what the coffee prices are there.

Mr. Makarchuk: Go down to the Don Jail.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Instead, my ministry has collected the information and will make the information available to the public—it will be early next week—and the explanations there may make the member's comments more timely and more appropriate, or foolish. We'll wait and see.

Mr. Warner: But you are not going to do anything.

Mr. McClellan: Send a letter to Frank Drea.

Mr. Philip: Supplementary: In reference to that basic information that the minister is collecting, is the minister familiar with the statement by AIB spokesman Allan Donnelly who, when questioned by a reporter about releasing information to this minister, stated, "The AIB must respect the confidentiality of the companies' internal operations." And if so, is he prepared to correct his answer to my question on October 18, in which he stated that he had not been refused information by the AIB?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I've not been refused information by the AIB. They sent me a letter which you'll see Monday and you can comment further at that time.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: I'd like to ask the minister, if he agrees with the observation of his colleague, the Minister of Correctional Services, that the prices charged are a rip-off?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: My colleague and others may assume that the price is a rip-off by the sheer size of the charge. In other words, that $5 or $6 is a rip-off. That doesn't mean, and I don't think my colleague was saying, that the companies are profiteering or making an enormous amount of money—

Hon. Mr. Drea: Oh yes, I was.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He said the end price is too much.

Mr. Lewis: Oh no, rip-off doesn't mean that. I want an answer to the question, Mr. Speaker. None of the minister's verbal fencing. Does he agree with the Minister of Correctional Services or doesn't he? Is it a rip-off?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think the prices are high. I wouldn't categorize them as a rip-off.

Mr. Lewis: You don't agree, Mr. Speaker, I beg of you, extort from this man, his answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: Does he agree with the Minister of Correctional Services?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk with a new question.

Mr. Lewis: I said your tenure would be memorable.

Mr. Breagh: And short.

[10:45]

CAS BUDGETS

Mr. G. I. Miller: I have a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services in regard to the budget of the family and children's services formerly of the county of Haldimand and now of the region of Haldimand-Norfolk. The question is why was the budget of $178,000 cut by approximately $16,000, a budget that has already been well scrutinized by a board that is running the Children's Aid Society very efficiently, because I was a former member of the board and know the people quite well? How can the minister justify a cut of this magnitude on such a small budget?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I don't have before me the details of that particular budget, but perhaps I could give a very brief and general response to the hon. member. Perhaps if he had continued to remain as a member of the Children's Aid Society, their problem wouldn't have developed. I can assure him that all of the Children's Aid Societies in the province during the latter part of 1976 were advised as to the global limitations on the amount of money that was available for Children's Aid Society budgets in 1977-78. That was approximately an eight per cent increase.

They were subsequently by letter encouraged to bear that in mind in the planning of their budgets. In a few instances, budgets came in requesting substantially more than that, in one case as much as a 60 per cent increase. The process that we engaged in with the society—

Mr. Speaker: I think the question dealt with a specific society.

Hon. Mr. Norton: In that case, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants a detailed and specific response to a specific budget, I will try to provide him with that information at a later date.

Mr. Warner: You inherited the Minister of Energy's speeches.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Supplementary: I just want the minister to understand that this does cover an area of 15 municipalities and 450 square miles. It has been very efficiently run in the past.

PIPE PRODUCTION

Mr. Deans: I am almost hesitant to ask the question but I'll try: Is the Premier prepared to make representation to the federal government to try to bring about some guarantees that the pipe used in the Alaska pipeline will be made substantially in Canada, in an effort to protect the workers in Ontario who are involved in the production of that pipe and in order to try to bring about expansion of the industry to make the larger pipe that may not be now made in this country?

Hon. Mr. Davis: My understanding is that part of the discussion and part of the negotiations did relate—and this has not been confirmed or finalized—to the bulk of the pipe being made in this country. Fortunately, a good part of that will be in the province of Ontario. I would be quite prepared, or the Minister of Energy would, to make sure, when this arrangement is finalized, that the material used in this pipeline should be made in this province, to the extent that it is possible, and I think a lot of it can be produced here.

Certainly we would support that. My understanding is that this has already been explored and that there is every indication a good portion of it will be fabricated here.

Mr. MacDonald: That ex-Tory Jack Horner is waffling again.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member may have different information than we do, but we will certainly pursue it because we want to see it made here as well.

Mr. Deans: One supplementary question then: Will the Premier obtain the statement made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Horner, and find out what he means when he says that there is no guarantee that the substantial proportion of the pipe to be used will be manufactured in this country? And will the Premier take some steps, in the interest of Ontario workers who are at the moment facing a very bleak future, to guarantee that not only a substantial amount but wherever possible all of the pipe that can be manufactured here will be—even if it means retooling—so that all the pipe that can be manufactured here will be manufactured here?

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No doubt at all, Mr. Speaker.

OVERTIME PAYMENTS TO CORRECTIONAL OFFICERS

Mr. Eaton: I have a question of the Minister of Correctional Services. Since he is in the mood for restraint, I wonder if he can indicate if the reports of overtime being paid to guards so that residents of his institutions can watch television are true and, if so, in this time of restraint, if he'll stop that practice?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I presume that the hon. member is talking about the published report that at the Toronto Jail there is a matter of up to $100 of overtime when hockey games go beyond 10:30 at night. On that presumption I would say to the hon. members, that unlike the coffee situation, which is a rip-off, the situation concerning the correctional—

Mr. Lewis: You know, you are a patsy, Larry Grossman? That's funny, but you are a patsy.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Unlike that situation, in the correctional officer matter at the Toronto Jail, the payment of overtime amounts at most to $100 and I am not going to discontinue it. It comes about because there is a standard practice with inmates of the Toronto Jail and I presume others. One of the agreements we have with them is that the normal lockup time is extended on nights when there is a hockey game or other major sporting event.

The difficulty with the hockey games is that we have no control over the time-span. If there are a lot of fights or a lot of goals, they go beyond 10:30 at night. I do not feel that I should break the agreement that the ministry has with the inmates because of rowdiness on the ice or other factors and send them back to their cells before the game is over. Furthermore, I think that the amount, which wouldn't total more than about $3,500 or $3,600 in total over a season, is money extremely well spent.

I believe there is motivational material in watching gentlemen of the description of Mr. Sittler, Mr. Salming, Mr. McDonald and others triumph over adversity while conforming to rules. That is the other Mr. MacDonald.

And furthermore, I would draw to the attention of players that if they want to delay the game by taking a punch at an opponent, the hon. Attorney General will be constantly watching them and I will probably get them, and I will take the $100 out of their hide in the Toronto Jail.

Mr. Eaton: Supplementary: Since this practice is not being carried on at other institutions, will the minister either review the practice there and change it, or allow the same in other institutions, such as London?

Hon. Mr. Drea: They don't get all the Wednesday and Saturday night games, because they are local.

Mr. Breaugh: You did this, Stephen.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is my understanding that wherever we have an institution where these programs—

Mr. Speaker: Ignore the interjections.

Mr. Lewis: How can you?

Mr. Speaker: And hurry up with the answer, please.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I don't regard this as a very facetious thing. I think it's an honest question.

Mr. MacDonald: Cut off the game once and you will have a riot that would cost you a million.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Wherever there is a sporting event of some magnitude, and every National Hockey League game obviously is that, and so is a boxing match or the World Series or a football game—

Mr. Lewis: What about chariot races?

Mr. Breaugh: You haven't seen Colorado play.

Hon. Mr. Drea: —we will follow the practice.

If it requires overtime to be paid to correctional officers—and I wish the parliamentary assistant in Consumer and Commercial Relations would refer to people by their occupation rather than slang—wherever there are correctional officers who must be paid overtime, they will be.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Since the minister has referred repeatedly to this arrangement, to which I have no objection, as part of an agreement with inmates, could he outline for this House—

Hon. Mr. Davis: We can't produce that contract.

Mr. S. Smith: —the nature of this agreement and what other clauses may exist in this agreement so that we can actually peruse it?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, in all seriousness there is no contract. There is no formal agreement. But I believe when we change the rule book in an institution, which means an extended time for watching the televising of a sports event, it is very difficult to say to inmates, who are basically there because they have behavioural problems, that we are arbitrarily going to change the rules of the game just because it conveniences us.

I regard those rules under which we operate in an institution as an agreement of principle by the ministry. We will abide by them and we expect the inmates to abide by them; there has to be an equal partnership.

Mr. MacDonald: The best corrections minister since George Wardrope.

Mrs. Campbell: In view of the answers given by the minister, could he advise the House now as to when he is going to table the Ombudsman's report on corrections?

Mr. Speaker: That is not a supplementary.

Mrs. Campbell: Yes it is.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Twenty-four hours after I get it.

JOB CREATION

Mr. Haggerty: I'd like to direct a question to the Premier. Is the Premier aware of the Treasurer's latest report, entitled "Reaffirming Ontario's Budget Strategy for 1977," in which the Treasurer states: "The government's budget plan for 1977 implements a fiscal policy appropriate to the needs of the Ontario economy. I believe that the recovery trend will continue throughout the year and into 1978. I will be monitoring the situation closely and I am prepared to consider supplementary actions to stimulate the economy in selective areas"?

In the light of those comments, is the Premier considering any labour-intensive programs to assist municipalities that have a higher than normal unemployment rate, such as the city of Port Colborne, due to recent layoffs?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We're not contemplating any additional programs at this moment.

Mr. Haggerty: Supplementary: Is the Premier considering something such as a winter works program?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I didn't say that either.

WINTARIO FUNDS

Mr. Grande: My question is to the Minister of Culture and Recreation. Let's get back to Wintario again. Given the fact that a recent article in the Star made certain allegations that some Wintario grants are given to private organizations and possibly profit-making organizations, what on-the-spot follow-up has the ministry done to ensure that the two Wintario principles—namely, public accessibility and the non-profit criterion—are, in fact, taking effect?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I'm very grateful to have this question. The hon. member will know that by a memorandum dated October 26, all members of the House received a fair amount of detail in connection with the Wintario program, particularly as it related to this area. The hon. member, having received that memorandum, will have learned from it that the ministry assumes, and I'm reading from the last page of the memorandum, "that when an organization agrees to the terms of the Wintario program"—which are spelled out on the preceding pages of that memo—"it will honour its obligations."

We rely upon the members of our own audit program—and we have our own audit procedures—our field staff and the general public to bring things to our attention and, indeed, we follow up on them.

The hon. member should know, if he read very carefully that article to which he's made reference, that with one exception—namely, a small grant of $11,000 to an organization in eastern Ontario—none of the other organizations to which reference was made has received five cents from Wintario, because they have yet to satisfy us that they have met the conditions, the terms of which are set out in the memo.

Mr. Grande: Supplementary: Could the minister tell us, and I'll repeat it, what on-the-spot follow-up is there, not only for those five particular private clubs that were cited in the article, but for other clubs and private organizations that receive Wintario money? How does the ministry guarantee that what they say they do, they will indeed do?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I repeat, it starts at the time of the application in consultation with the field staff, who, in consultation with the municipal council, recreation or other appropriate committees locally, satisfy themselves with respect to the adherence to the conditions for grants in this part of the program. Then the organizations involved would sign an undertaking that they, in fact, will maintain those conditions.

I mentioned that through audit, through inspection by the field staff, and indeed through members of the general public, we have an opportunity to have the follow-up and the checks to which reference has been made in this question.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: Would the minister care to comment on the questionable access to some of the private clubs that have been granted Wintario funds? Is he satisfied that the public has access in every instance where Wintario money has been granted to private clubs?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The hon. member will understand that I would want to have a particular organization or a particular file as part of the question, but in general terms I am satisfied that no Wintario money by way of a grant is paid to an organization which has not satisfied the conditions which are set out in some detail in my memorandum to members of this House, dated October 26. Indeed, through the field staff and through the municipal councils, I think we have taken every reasonable step with respect to this question of public access.

The spirit of the program is of course to recognize that in many municipalities in Ontario it would be practicably impossible to duplicate a number of facilities. Therefore, in using the Wintario capital program, we hope to unlock a number of these facilities to a wider public involvement and participation and thereby make it possible for the community there to have that type of activity without having to go to the expense of providing a duplicate type of service.

One must keep in mind, in so far as the capital program is concerned, that the grant is only one-third of the cost and half in other parts, and there is still of course the sharing principle; so the members of the non-profit organization are in fact making some contribution for the public as well.

To go back to the hon. member's question, I rely on the administrative support that we have, both here and in the field, and in consultation with municipal organizations, municipal councils and committees, to satisfy me that these conditions are being met and an undertaking is signed. If we have any evidence that these are not being honoured, we have legal recourse to reclaim these funds.

Mr. Grande: Supplementary: In view of all the publicity this is receiving—and adverse publicity, as far as I'm concerned and in view of the fact that the minister was very careful in setting out this memorandum so that no such confusion would arise, does he not think that it's just about time that a select committee of this Legislature really takes a look at Wintario from the time that tickets are sold to the time that the—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Another select committee. We have one a week.

Mr. Kerrio: Make an application to Wintario.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, there's a second part to my question; that is, that this select committee will have the power—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To go on a trip?

Mr. Eaton: Where do you want to travel to?

Mr. Grande: —to take a look at the Ontario Lottery Corporation Act with a view to proposing amendments to that Act?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I don't feel that we need a select committee to go into this matter. My estimates will be before the members before long and there will be ample opportunity to ask all kinds of questions.

The hon. member fails to share with this House that almost immediately on being advised that he was the new critic, he was invited over to our ministry. Every Wintario file is wide open for anybody to see.

He's been over there and he has spent a great deal of time. Notwithstanding what he refers to as adverse publicity, if in fact one really believes—and I'm talking about myself—that what we are doing is quite open, quite proper and quite helpful, then if there are those who wish through any type of publicity to discredit the program, I can't stop that. But I tell the hon. member, this program stands ready to be examined by anyone, any member of this Legislature, with respect to how it operates, what its aims and objectives are and what the criteria are. Every file is available. The file is made available to any reporter who calls me about any file.

With respect to this matter, I would hope that if there are some questions, some comments and some constructive suggestions, we will have that exchange before the standing committee on social development, when the estimates of this ministry will be there.

TOURISM

Mr. Eakins: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. How does he explain the further decline in visitors to the province this year over 1976—which, as we know, has been a disastrous year for tourism in the province—when just last year he optimistically responded to my question on the drop in visitors by stating there was a change of direction in the tourist industry and that he thought we'd see a marked improvement in the tourist traffic in the second and third quarters of this year?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: It's very simple. Ontario and Canada are not alone in the world situation in tourism. While projections a year ago by political forces around the world were being made that we would see an improvement in tourism, economic conditions have not brought that about. Very simply, in view of the amount of disposable income, the attitude of consumers has been to save even to a greater extent than they did before and they are not travelling.

Mr. Eakins: I have a supplementary. My figures indicate that by the end of August this year the total was 16 million compared with 16.2 million for the same period in 1976. What specific measures is the minister taking to change this or to bolster the tourist industry?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I have said on various occasions—and I'm sure we shall discuss this at great length in the next few hours since we start estimates this morning—that through our advertising program and redirecting of advertising promotion by the provincial government, by co-operation with the federal government of Canada, by co-operation with the government of the province of Quebec and by co-operation with the Canadian airlines and those lines that are associated with Air Canada, we will try to redirect our advertising dollars into more lucrative markets, where we believe disposable incomes are sufficiently high to warrant or justify or afford people the opportunity to travel in Ontario and other parts of Canada.

Mr. Wildman: Considering the fact that the minister said one of the problems or the major problem is the fact that the economy has not recovered and there is insufficient disposable income, does he still subscribe to the statements he made or that were made by his ministry in its review in July 1976, that the economy was inherently strong and will continue to prosper and grow?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I'm not going to draw back from that position. I think if the member would refer to what I said, it was that people with large disposable incomes, as Mr. Chretien said a week ago in the House of Commons of Canada, are not encouraged to spend. They have been encouraged to save. He has said from a Minister of Finance's point of view, and Mr. Horner has said from the point of view of the Minister of Trade for Canada, if Canadians would start to spend and buy some of the consumer products and do a little more travelling rather than continuing to save, then the economy of this province and country might be somewhat better.

Mr. Martel: Don't go to Florida any more. Stay here and travel.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will remember that.

Mr. Martel: Come to Sudbury.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

LIQUOR LICENCE AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Eaton moved first reading of Bill 87, An Act to amend the Liquor Licence Act, 1975.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Eaton: The purpose of this bill is to raise the legal drinking age in Ontario, at which time alcoholic beverages are allowed, from 18 to 20. I think it is in recognition of the wishes of the majority of the people of this province and certainly of my constituency, and also, I would say from discussions, a fair majority of people between the ages of 18 and 20.

Mr. Cunningham: You are an idiot.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

On vote 1602, public safety program; item 3, fire safety services:

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to raise a few items with the minister.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I had the floor.

Mr. Chairman: I am sorry. Did you have the floor when we recessed? Last week?

Mr. Lupusella: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: I will recognize the member for Dovercourt.

Mr. Lupusella: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Pursuing the same argument about the coroner's recommendations—that's the argument I was pursuing last week—I was particularly concerned about the recommendation—

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: What vote are we on?

Mr. Chairman: Order. The Solicitor General has asked what vote we are on. We are on vote 1602, item 3.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That is possible, sir. I understood my hon. friend from Dovercourt was dealing with coroners, which is the following vote.

Mr. Lupusella: Okay.

Mr. Chairman: Under those circumstances, I will again recognize the member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, the previous member couldn't have been on when we wound up on the last day because we didn't get as far as he assumed we did.

I wanted to raise with the minister the problem of the frequency of fires back in the Windsor-Essex county area. Apparently, we do seem to have more than normal. Just this past week there happened to be one in which a meat-packing concern suffered approximately $1 million in loss of product and also to the building. Over the past three years, approximately, some 15 hotels have burned down, if I am not mistaken. The city has asked for a permanent full-time fire marshal in the area.

Would the minister not consider their suggestion in light of the overabundance of fires in the area many of which are, we assume, of an incendiary nature? Could the minister reply? Then I have another question.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I have quite a long report here—about a page and a third; it might be helpful if I read it into the record. It deals with the number of fires in the Windsor area and it may give rise to a supplemental question.

“Due to the extensive publicity on the number of hotel fires in the Windsor area, an in-depth investigation was conducted by the Ontario Fire Marshal's investigation services. The OFM intelligence officer, in conjunction with the Windsor police and fire departments, conducted extensive inquiries to determine if fraudulent fires were occurring in the Windsor area.

“During 1976, nine hotel fires occurred in the Windsor area. Five of these fires were investigated by the fire investigation services who determined that two were incendiary, one undetermined and two of accidental origin. This investigation has established that there is no widespread problem of fraudulent and incendiary fires in the Windsor area.

“A number of hotel fires have occurred, however. Part of the fire problem has resulted from the gradual deterioration of the buildings, contents, heating systems, electrical wiring and electrical distribution equipment. The Ontario Fire Marshal's intelligence officer brought the investigative agencies together. Better communications between the fire and police departments and the LLBO inspectors has been established.

“In 1975, fire investigator D. F. Campbell of our Windsor district office investigated 99 fires in both Kent and Essex counties, including the city of Windsor. On July 1, 1976 a new district office was opened in Mount Forest, at which time Kent county was removed from the jurisdiction of the Windsor office and given to the London district office. This reorganization has reduced fire investigations by our Windsor office from 99 in 1975 to 81 in 1976. The reorganization of the area will allow more time to conduct fire investigations in the city of Windsor area.

“The Ontario Fire Marshal's fire investigation service is training the senior officers and firefighters of the Windsor fire department on how to determine fire cause, fire-crime detection, and continuity of evidence. Training is also provided to the Windsor police department on fire investigation procedures.”

Mr. Chairman, that would indicate we are concerned with the number of fires in the Windsor area, which have been sufficiently significant to make us want to send more firefighting staff there—although the report, as I have said, states that only two of the fires were determined as incendiary and one undetermined.

Mr. B. Newman: I wanted to bring this to the attention of the minister and ask for his comments. I am reading from a press story of June 15, 1977: “One Fire Marshal inspector covers Windsor and Essex county. His office is in the basement of his home. He has no clerical help. His telephone is a private number and is not listed in government listings.” Is it your intention, Mr. Minister, to overcome that problem?

The article continues: “One of the complaints coming out of the Windsor fire department is that Mr. Campbell has no replacement in the area. Often when he is summoned to a fire, according to one official of the Windsor department, he is out on another fire, or it is his day off or he is on his vacation or he has been called out of town. The Windsor fire official claims that it is sometimes days before the other inspector arrives.” Would the minister care to comment on that startling report in the Windsor paper of June 25, 1977?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: It may be that his number is not in the telephone book; I am not sure of that. But my advice is that it is quite possible. The number is, of course, well known to those who need to know it—that is the police and the various fire chiefs and fire offices about that area.

As regards the need for more service, I have already dealt with that in what I read to you: that we have rearranged the boundaries down there to provide more time. I will certainly inquire into the business of telephone numbers being listed. It seems to me that it should be listed somewhere in a place where the public can find it. I would gather that people—other than the police and the chiefs—should know about it. I will make inquiries into that.

I won't, however, promise you any more service than that which we have arranged for by the adjustment of the boundaries, because of our budget restrictions. But, in any event, I will certainly investigate the telephone matter.

Mr. B. Newman: The other question I wanted to raise with the minister is that of the use of smoke detectors. Is it the intention of the ministry to ask that legislation be passed making it mandatory for the installation of smoke detectors in homes, public places and so forth?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that it is already mandatory in the construction of new homes and buildings to install smoke detectors at that time. Our ministry and, certainly, the Fire Marshal's office support the use of smoke detectors. We have tried to encourage the use in northern Ontario, in the unorganized communities, by way of a grant to help in the distribution of them. I am sorry that that program has not been more successful.

I think under that program we have distributed only about a thousand of these smoke detectors. But throughout the province, generally, there has been a great demand for them. I understand the companies that make them—and some of them are here in Ontario—are hard-pressed to keep up with the demand. I have spoken about them from time to time when I have been addressing various groups—encouraging the use of them—and the Fire Marshal's office is encouraging their use, so I think we will be doing everything short of making them mandatory. There is no plan at the present time to make them mandatory in existing homes or buildings.

Mr. B. Newman: I have one other topic that I would like to raise with the minister and that is the Fire Marshal's report. I've had the occasion where a constituent of mine had his business burn down completely. Because the Fire Marshal's report said it was suspected arson, the individual as a result had the greatest difficulty in obtaining fire insurance.

Nothing had been proven that it was arson, and because of that simple comment in there, the man practically had to get on his hands and knees to get any company to even consider it. If I'm not mistaken, he stayed without fire insurance for some three months.

The difficulty with that is, the bank will not provide any mortgage unless there is fire insurance. Shouldn't there be something done so that if there is a comment that simply says there may have been arson involved, that type of comment should not necessarily be contained in there unless you can actually prove it, because the insurance companies take full advantage of that.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I understand that that is one reason our reports are not made public. I don't know how that report was obtained and how the insurance companies got that information. Maybe it's worth following up. If you'll give us some more information, I'll be glad to do so.

But there's a conflict, of course, of wanting to make our reports factual and honest. If we have to cloak them in discreet language in case somebody else reads something into them, then they lose their effectiveness for the purposes we want to use them. The answer is, it shouldn't have been made public and as I say, we'll be glad to follow it up.

Item 3 agreed to.

On item 4, coroners' investigations and inquests:

Mr. Lupusella: I'm particularly interested about coroners' investigations. In my opening statement, I made particular reference to three people who have died since May in police cells.

I see the validity of this particular branch—the forensic sciences centre. It seems they are quite busy investigating cases. In fact during the year 1976 the coroner's office investigated 27,700 sudden deaths. Of this number, they ordered 8,800 medical/legal autopsies, which were carried out by 250 pathologists. I see the function. I see what they are doing. I see also the importance of the recommendations which they are making.

In my opening statement, and I want to clarify the record, I raised the particular point, and I'm quoting from what I said, "I hope the Solicitor General is also aware that since May 1977, three people died in Metro police cells. A coroner's inquest has been held for each case. In each case many good recommendations have been made, but nobody knows whether or not changes are taking place."

In replying to my statement, the Solicitor General, talking about the particular item of those three people dying in police cells, said, "As a result, all of these things in police cells or otherwise make life a little less tolerable for the prisoner. We're trying to take precautions against suicide." He didn't specify what kind of precautions are taking place. "Then," you say, "why don't you have them under electronic surveillance?" It's not everybody who wants to be under electronic surveillance. They regard that as an infringement on their right to privacy even while they're in jail."

With all due respect to the minister's statement, I didn't suggest that electronic surveillance is forced to take place. In fact, in my statement I was reading from the inquest into—and I don't think it is necessary to mention the name—a person who died on May 3, 1977, in a police cell. The verdict of the coroner's jury was:

"We, the jury, further find from the evidence submitted that Mr. So-and-so "came to his death by apparent suicide by strangulation with his own shirt, twisted in a rope fashion and used around his neck, the ends being tied to the horizontal bar of the doors, 22 inches from the floor of cell No. 1 in Metro Toronto Police Station No. 13."

By getting into the whole issue of recommendations, Mr. Chairman, what I would like to see is the implementation of those recommendations. In the annual report, it seems that the role of the forensic pathology agency, and I am reading from the annual report, 1976, "is to assist in determining the courses of and the mechanisms of deaths in unusual circumstances and to aid the law enforcement agencies throughout the province in their interpretation of certain aspects of sudden death through the application of expertise in forensic pathology. The objectives can be achieved by providing an advisory service to police, coroners and pathologists in the province, developing training programs in forensic pathology and carrying out forensic pathology examinations in difficult or complex cases."

Recommendations have been made. Since May, three people died in police cells. I didn't suggest that electronic surveillance is supposed to take place to eliminate the problems. They made valid recommendations, and just to clarify the record, I hope the Solicitor General is going to give me an answer to what his ministry has been doing to see that those recommendations are implemented in order that we will not see other people dying in the police cells.

I quoted the following recommendations: "(1) That the appropriate authorities continue to develop improvements to the physical arrangement of cells and detention areas aimed at the prevention of attempted suicides—for example, by research into the practicality of using plexiglass panels on the inside of cell bars."

Then there is the recommendation of the electronic surveillance, and I didn't suggest that is the route which must be followed. If the Solicitor General interpreted my comment that people in police cells are supposed to be controlled by electronic surveillance that is his prerogative to think like that, but I didn't make such statement.

I don't want to go through all the recommendations. The principle involved in that particular case is that those recommendations are supposed to be reviewed by the ministry and followed up. Otherwise there is no sense in coroners making all of those investigations. It seems that the number is quite high, especially in 1976; 27,700 deaths investigated by the coroner's office.

If there is all of this work involved, I think that the Solicitor General must have an obligation to follow the recommendations, in order that somehow—and it is not my duty to do that because I think members of the Legislature are not aware of what kind of recommendation the coroners are going to make. I reported those three examples in which I made a particular request to the Solicitor General. Otherwise, I wouldn't even have known that those recommendations were made.

So it is not my responsibility or somebody else's responsibility to recommend the right route in order that certain recommendations are supposed to take place. It's the Solicitor General's duty to establish some kind of program in his ministry to review those recommendations and pursue from that in order that the recommendations will be implemented. And that's the first principle.

The second idea or the second method which I would like to suggest to the Solicitor General is to make a report in order that members of the Legislature and the public will know what kind of recommendations are going to be made by the coroners' investigations. Then at least we can have an opportunity to follow those recommendations to find out which ones are the best and which ones are not suitable for implementation, in order that we at least can have a say.

At the moment from the annual report—and I don't want to repeat the same figures—what we know is that the coroner's office made 27,700 investigations. That's what we know. We don't know anything about the recommendations which they are making in order that future problems can be eliminated. They are going to disappear when the same events are taking place here in the province of Ontario.

If the Solicitor General doesn't want to pay so much attention to that particular item, then I think the work of the coroner is becoming in some way useless. I think the coroners make good recommendations, and as I said before, the Solicitor General either will report to the House or to the Legislature or to the members what kind of recommendations were made in order that we can follow them up in some way. I am sure not all of those recommendations are falling within the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General, but it is the duty of the Solicitor General to find out whether and in which ministry those recommendations are taking place.

So the Solicitor General at the end of the year might come to the Legislature, as he has been doing, and state that the coroner's office has been very busy. It has been very busy because the numbers of cases in 1976 and 1977 has been very high. With all due respect, they are doing the work, but the particular principle involved on the coroner's office is the recommendations in order that in the future the same events don't take place. The Solicitor General has an obligation to make us aware of those recommendations. I would like to give an opportunity to the Solicitor General to reply to that comment, and find out about the three cases which I just mentioned. What kind of recommendations have been implemented?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, dealing first with the responsibilities of the coroner arising out of inquests, section 4 of the Act says, "The Lieutenant Governor in Council, may appoint a coroner to be chief coroner for Ontario who shall"—and, under section 4(d)—"bring the findings and recommendations of coroners' juries to the attention of appropriate persons, agencies and ministries of the government."

I think we do that rather effectively. Dr. Cotnam, who is here before me at the present time, has an excellent record across the province for the thoroughness with which he and his coroners investigate the deaths that are brought to their attention and the soundness of the recommendations that are made by the juries involved.

In other words, without some kind of direction, coroners' juries could make some pretty unreasonable suggestions from time to time. I have been impressed by how practical are most of the ones I have seen and I can tell this committee that 75 per cent of the recommendations made by coroners' juries are carried out. One could ask, "What's the matter with the other 25 per cent?" But, of course, the coroners' juries are just individual citizens. Although they have the guidance of the coroner, they are of course not bound by his instructions and occasionally, without seeing the overall picture, they can make some recommendations that are not necessarily able to be implemented for one reason or other.

I recall that they used to make recommendations often for stop-lights to be put in at a certain corner just because a particular fatality had taken place on that corner. Of course, if you collected enough of those fatalities, I suppose you would find stop-lights at almost every intersection in a municipal area.

While there are some problems and not all coroners' recommendations are too sound, I'm pleased to say, as I have said, that 75 per cent of the coroners' juries' recommendations are carried out.

Neither the coroner nor I, as Solicitor General, has any power to enforce the various bodies to whom recommendations are directed to carry out the suggestions therein. The coroner distributes them to all the people he thinks could be concerned with them at all, whether it's a municipal authority, a private business or, of course, various government agencies. There's no responsibility at law for him to follow up, other than a moral responsibility, but he does do a follow-up to see which recommendations are or are not carried out. I'm quite pleased and I feel that with 75 per cent success, Dr. Cotnam's recommendations are being taken seriously and put into operation.

The member for Dovercourt dealt at some length with some deaths in our correctional institutions. I have detailed reports on each of the three that he has referred to. It might be wise to take the time of the committee and read them. Let me read one of them anyway and then we can decide whether we want anything on the others. This one refers to the death of an inmate by the name of Savoie:

"Because of the potentially lethal and unpredictable effects of a combination of alcohol and drugs, there should be a more thorough search of all prisoners at the station. A more thorough search is particularly important in areas where citizens are known to combine alcohol and other drugs. If a combination of alcohol and drugs is present or suspected, the prisoner should be given immediate medical attention."

What I have just read was the recommendation of the jury in the Savoie case. The reply we've got back from Metro Toronto police is that, "More care will be taken in the future in searching such persons and in providing immediate medical referral." This always is a difficult problem for the police and other authorities when they pick somebody up. But the member is quite right that care should be taken. It's a case of impressing the need for this care on the individuals who are carrying it out.

I suppose if the police had had a series of drunks in a particular area one night and another is picked up with, maybe a combination of alcohol and drugs, it's not always that easy to detect. That kind of care is a demand on our police; we are constantly warning them to watch for this, and here is another recommendation from a coroner that that should be carried out.

Passing to another inquest—Gray—this is the recommendation: "That the appropriate authorities continue to develop improvements to the physical arrangement of cells and detention areas aimed at the prevention of attempted suicides—for example, by research into the practicality of using plexiglass panels on the inside of cell bars." I believe this is the one that my friend the member for Dovercourt (Mr. Lupusella) referred to.

"Ongoing developments have been taking place in the design of cells." In quotation marks, they're called "fronts." "The cell in which the tragedy occurred had been constructed with a front that contained only one horizontal crossbar. This bar had been located just 22 inches from the floor in an effort to lessen the likelihood of suicide.

"All police cells with conventional type bar or grille fronts depend on the free movement of air through the open cell fronts for proper ventilation. To install plastic panels on the inside of these cell fronts would seriously affect this air movement and would make confinement in the cells intolerable at most times. To change the air handling system in all existing police cell facilities to accommodate solid cell fronts would require an extremely expensive program of major alterations.

"The fronts of all the cells installed at the new 52 Division station at 255 Dundas Street West in Toronto do, in fact, have solid panels of the laminated glass and plastic. Being an entirely new facility, the air system has been designed to permit this type of cell construction. An evaluation is now taking place on these cells and, when concluded, should establish whether they are the long-sought 'suicide-proof cell'."

"That whenever electronic surveillance equipment is installed, it should have sufficient range to monitor the entire cell, either by placement of the camera or use of wide-angle lens and remote control of camera movements."

The answer: "A wide angle lens has been installed and the camera does now provide full coverage of the cell."

There are others. I think maybe I've read enough of that to show you some of the problems involved. The authorities have long been aware of the problems of suicide in our jail cells; and there is an example, the only bar they had was one that was 18 inches off the ground and yet the facile mind of somebody who was contemplating suicide could do what some of us who are not familiar with these things would think would be impossible, to hang yourself from a bar 18 inches off the ground.

Every time the authorities or the designers come up with what they think is something to make a particular cell suicide-proof those in it in some way find ways to commit suicide just the same.

The suggestion has been solid fronts. They have their disadvantages, as I have said. They would be very costly to install. The average inmate is not contemplating suicide, he is more concerned with his comfort in that cell. I think they appreciate the openness of the cells rather than the closed-in effect and the lack of air circulation that would result if you did close them in in some of our older buildings.

We deal with electronic surveillance. I don't think I was being critical of the member for Dovercourt when I talked about electronic surveillance. I think I was simply trying to point out that although we do have electronic surveillance in some of our jails, and generally speaking it is a good thing; but it too has disagreeable effects, one of them being, as I mentioned the other day, the fact that you have male police keeping surveillance in some cases over female prisoners; and also, as I said, that some people don't want to feel they're being watched all the time, even though they are in prison.

[11:45]

We're looking for ways to keep them under constant surveillance without interfering with their rights of privacy. We're looking for the kind of cell accommodation where suicide will become impossible, and yet we want to consider the comforts of the prisoner. We are concerned that they should have some comforts in the cells, that those comforts should not be done away with particularly.

To return to the original question, 75 per cent of coroners' recommendations are carried out.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the comments of the Solicitor General. As I stated before, I do not argue about the kind of work which the coroners are performing. It seems that, considering the number of investigations that they are performing in one year, 27,700, I guess that they're doing their work.

About the kind of recommendations: We have statistics released by the Solicitor General that 75 per cent of those recommendations are, in fact, implemented. I don't think I should depend on the words of the Solicitor General to be informed that those recommendations are being made. The principle which I raised previously was that those recommendations are supposed to be known to the members of Parliament and to the public as well.

To go back to the point of electronic surveillance, I didn't even suggest that; I was just reading through the reports the Solicitor General read as well. We have those problems in different areas, we realize that. But one aspect of the problem, and it's comparable to those problems of which we read from time to time in the newspapers, is that certain people are dying in police cells. I think more attention should be given to those people who are not really committing crimes, maybe the police arrest them for drug abuse or alcoholism, and they put them in jail for two or three days and then they release them.

My personal and particular opinion is that, in fact those people do have those psychological problems which are supposed to be considered by the police when they arrest them and put them in police cells. Maybe it's an aspect to which the police are not paying so much attention, so they leave those people in police cells. Maybe if a person is drunk and is taken there for one or two nights, he might have a psychological crisis and he might hang himself in the cell.

That's the social problem which, maybe, the police are not considering when they arrest those people. Maybe they should not be in cells at all. Maybe they should be taken to a hospital instead of being taken to police cells. It's the social aspect which is not considered by the police. I'm sure about that, otherwise those things would not take place.

That is why, in my opening statement, I suggested the police should educate themselves, throughout their training course, in social problems which are taking place in our society. I am not suggesting they are supposed to be psychiatrists and solve the problems; it's just a question of the kind of consideration which should be given when they are dealing with those people.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I don't know how I can answer that question. As I said when we were dealing a little earlier with general matters, so many people expect so much from the police.

You say you don't expect the police to be doctors or psychiatrists. I am not so sure that you are not asking them to be doctors and psychologists.

Mr. Lupusella: They should know how.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I just say we have a great police force here, or most of them, in this province, but I think when you ask them to look at a prisoner, many of whom are violent and need to be locked up, and you suggest some of these should be examined in some way by the police and that they decide they should go to a hospital rather than behind bars, you are just asking too much of the police.

I think you are asking too much of anybody. I am not going to suggest that the police should have the kind of expertise to determine, in the circumstances that the police have to deal with these people, which one needs mental treatment, which one doesn't need mental treatment, which one is liable to commit suicide and which one is not liable to commit suicide, and which one should be sent off to hospital. You are just asking the police officers of this province, who are reasonable and rational people but in no way experts in the kind of field you want them to be experts in, to do what I regard as the impossible.

Mr. Lupusella: On the last comment which I made, given the fact that those problems are taking place, in particular in Metropolitan Toronto, and if we are going to compare the kind of training which is given to the police officers acting under the jurisdiction of each municipality and the OPP, I think there is a different level of training entirely. I am sure the Solicitor General will realize that.

Also, the Solicitor General made a particular comment that from time to time the municipal police officers are going on a regular basis to Aylmer College to be trained and to get expertise. I am not saying they should be doctors or psychiatrists—far from it—but knowing about psychology or having a course in it, or in sociology, at Aylmer College is something which would bring the police officer closer to the community and closer to the people. That's the kind of education which I was talking about, because more understanding will come if they are going to get the right expertise.

The community does not see policemen as just officers who are supposed to implement and enforce the law. I think we debated this principle in a quite extensive way when we made the opening statement. This kind of education should take place in order that they will eventually educate the community to have more understanding in order that people won't commit certain crimes in our society.

I see the role of the policeman as an educator in our society and not just as the person who is enforcing the law and is taking people to court. This kind of image is supposed to change in the province of Ontario, Mr. Chairman, and I hope the Solicitor General will find ways and programs in order that those principles are going to be implemented.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I do appreciate what the member for Dovercourt is saying. We do have this type of course in Aylmer and the various police training establishments. They are addressed by experts in the field. They do have extensive training in resuscitation methods. They do have extensive training in St. John Ambulance methods. We are doing everything that is practical in that way.

I just feel that the member for Dovercourt is asking for perfection in an imperfect world. There is no reason why we shouldn't strive for perfection, but to suggest that we have this intensive training that he's asking for, and the intensive knowledge that he expects the police and the jail custodians to have; if he thinks we are not going to have any more suicides in our cells, although we are striving to achieve that I just don't think it is going to happen, but we will keep striving for it.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that I am not looking for perfection in police officers, but I think if we are going to engage in those kinds of programs, then the attitude of the police officer in our society will change. I can see some effective changes taking place in relation to attitude.

I think I developed this kind of principle when I made my opening remarks. Citizens are all concerned about the attitude of police officers. I have a particular concern; it bothers me when a police officer shows an evasive attitude when he is dealing with me or with someone else. I am sure if it bothers me it bothers a lot of other people too. I think policemen should follow intensive programs of retraining in order to somehow change their attitude in our society.

I don't want to prolong this argument, because I think I dealt with those principles before. I hope that in some way I will reach the Solicitor General so that he will undertake programs to produce a future change in attitude.

When the royal commission was called to ascertain whether or not—and I don't want to use the word brutality, let's say force—whether force has been used by the police officers in Metropolitan Toronto, it seems this kind of problem does arise. People are quite dissatisfied with the attitude of the police officer. I want to draw to the Solicitor General's attention the fact that in my constituency office a lot of people call me complaining about the attitude of police officers.

I am sure that the Ministry of the Solicitor General spends a lot of time and a lot of money to educate the public in crime prevention. We have to analyse why these crimes are taking place in our society. I don't think the Solicitor General will achieve his goal of doing something about crime prevention just by making sure that $10,000, for example, is going to be spent on TV commercials. I have seen those commercials in which the Solicitor General is trying to reach the public on crime prevention; I don't think they are effective. In my own opinion, I don't think the public will be educated by the kind of message being put across by a commercial on TV. I don't think that is the right route. I see this as a role to be developed and performed by the police force as well, instead of spending time and money on trying to reach the public on TV and hoping that in some way the goal will be reached.

Mr. Conway: Now Tony, really. I think the Solicitor General is a wonderful fellow.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Lupusella: I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the Solicitor General really considers these recommendations. I am sure a lot of people are more inclined to commit more violations just because of the attitude of the police.

I think we have to emphasize this, the attitude of the police. I said it before, and I want to repeat it, the police officer is not the judge on the street. Of course, the attitude goal can easily be reached if they get the right training from the right courses, as well as through the other courses that are going to be implemented.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I have asked the chief coroner of the province to make note of those comments in regard to policing. Maybe he can work them into some of his recommendations.

Ms. Bryden: I would like to ask the minister what he is planning to do in regard to the recent statement of the chief coroner, Dr. H. B. Cotnam, that transplant organs are in such dire shortage in Ontario that hospitals are having to buy them from the United States, and that it costs $5,000 to bring a kidney up from the United States.

Dr. Cotnam said that this is due to lack of public information about the donations of organs under our Human Tissue Gift Act, which comes under the Solicitor General. The current program of putting a consent form on a driver's licence is a beginning, but only a small beginning, because most families don't know what to do in the event of death. And, I understand, there are some problems if the death occurs outside a hospital.

Moreover, there is no machinery for obtaining consents from non-drivers, who could represent a substantial part of the population. Further, there is no government publicity campaign to let people know about the crying need for transplant organs. There are over 300 waiting for kidneys and 400 for heart tissue; and the need for the pituitary gland to prevent dwarfism is a particularly serious one. The Hospital for Sick Children said that it could have used 10,000 in 1976 and got only about 4,200.

The only publicity campaigns that appear to be undertaken are by private, voluntary health bodies, such as the Eye Bank and the Kidney Foundation of Canada, and they're each working in their own field and unco-ordinated.

Dr. Cotnam did report that the Ministry of Transportation and Communications was planning to include in the next drivers licences a note asking people to contact the coroner's office for complete information. As you know, very few people write in for information or for pamphlets. Much more must be done in the way of publicizing the need and the procedures to be followed in the event of death when a consent form has been signed.

I realize that a program of this sort would probably have to be worked out with the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, but I think the primary responsibility rests with the Solicitor General's office which administers the Human Tissue Gift Act.

I would like to ask the minister what his plans are to respond to this need, and stress the urgency of carrying out the suggestions the chief coroner made for making the need much more widely known, for getting many more consent forms and for improving the machinery to get the organs to where the need is.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The member for Beaches-Woodbine has asked an excellent question, and one that I don't think we can give too much publicity to.

Our ministry at the present time is engaged in the preparation of a program for doing just the things she is suggesting we should be doing. I realize the great need for these various organs that are required across the province for medical transplants of one sort or another.

As I understand it, there is no shortage of bodies for use in the universities, but there is a shortage of various types of glands for transplants. The Human Tissue Gift Act used to rest with the Ministry of Health. It was thought, because of Dr. Cotnam's position, that it had best be dealt with by the Solicitor General. So we took it over a year or so ago, and in the interval we have been trying to organize ways of publicizing this.

You may have heard of the first real shot on this that Dr. Cotnam gave us the other day, when he was speaking to the coroners across the province. They were gathered here from all across the province and he spoke to them at that time, seeking their help and co-operation. I had a few words with him myself along the same lines. I understand that it has improved in the last little while, particularly for pituitary glands; there is more response from the public and that situation is improving. As a result of Dr. Cotnam's report in the paper just the other day, I understand that 500 inquiries have come from that one news item. So we are grateful for the help the press gave us on that occasion.

We do have consent forms in both French and English available from Dr. Cotnam's office for non-drivers. Our problem is to try to get this great need across to all the citizens of the province, because I am convinced that if the citizens of this province knew how helpful this could be in saving the lives of others, they would be only too happy to take part and would donate various parts of their bodies after their own demise. So the first shot has been fired in the campaign to give this kind of publicity.

I should deal for a moment with the licences. The licences are presently being revised and, as you correctly stated, there will be instructions to contact Dr. Cotnam. I think most people who are serious about it will do just that; they will take the time to write for further information. But the licence form itself will be set up with all the information that the average person needs as to how to make a donation and how to fill out the form. We are instructing our police officers and people such as coroners across the province—anybody who might be in attendance at the time of a sudden death—to look for a consent form either on the driver's permit or somewhere else. They will look for that and immediately take the necessary steps to get that body where the organ can be removed and the donation completed.

So any publicity any of us can give to this is certainly in humanitarian interests. It is in the early stages, but we will have more information in printed form to the public very quickly. The forms you asked for are now available and the licences with more detail on them will be issued, I think, within the next month, probably. I am sorry, I am too optimistic; it's January 1.

Ms. Bryden: Thank you, Mr. Minister, I am very glad to hear there is some action in this field. I would still think we must get the consent forms much more widely disseminated. I wonder if you have considered trying to get them put into banks—most people go into a bank sooner or later—and other places where we distribute government documents; or whether they could go out with mailings that go to large numbers of people.

Also, I would like to ask whether there is any staff in the ministry, or in the coroner's office particularly, which is spending full time on publicizing this program, on the development of pamphlets and programs generally to spread the word about the need?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: As to where these forms will be put, Dr. Cotnam, I think, is a little more reserved in his approach. He thinks they should be in doctors' offices and places like that. But I am sure he is open to any kind of suggestion; and if they don't go into the banks, sooner or later I think they will go into the liquor stores. I wouldn't be opposed to putting them in that type of location, because I think, and I am agreeing 100 per cent with you, what we need is publicity on this matter.

You ask about full-time employees; no, we have no full-time employees doing it. Dr. Cotnam is presently doing it with his existing staff; they are sharing the work. But he was concerned about this the other day; about how it would be taken care of if this publicity brought forth a rash of inquiries. I assured him that despite our restrictions this was one place where we would not have restraints. If he needed new personnel to handle it, we would certainly see that he got them.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a couple of questions about coroners' juries. I recognize that most of these inquiries don't go on for a very long period of time, but every once in a while there is a major inquest that goes on for several months. I'm thinking now about the inquest that was held in the city of Sudbury as a result of the death of 24 people in the Sudbury General Hospital, which I understand was due to a cross-up between the oxygen line and another line. That inquiry went on for several months and it did wreak hardship upon those citizens who were on the coroner's jury.

I wrote to the Solicitor General of that time and brought to his attention the hardship these people faced. I don't know what the daily rate is now but I think it was about $7 then—this was a couple of years ago. It is a mandatory thing, not only in this instance but even in the courts.

An ordinary person is required to do this job as a citizen practically for nothing—$7, $8 or $10 a day—when everybody else participating in the inquiry is a $100-a-day guy. The coroner is appointed at $100 a day. Every solicitor who was at this particular inquest I am talking about was getting $100 a day, and the jury was going broke. They had to give up months and months of pay.

I wonder what the minister's story is. How can he let it continue? People are willing to serve, every citizen recognizes his obligation—but one should not be put to financial hardship. It's not a big thing, because most of these inquests go through in one day or two days at the most, but I would like to hear the minister's comment on that.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I have not much disagreement with what the member for Sudbury is saying when it comes to these long inquests. Certainly some different arrangement should be made. I do not feel that $6 a day is unreasonable for the person who is asked as a citizen to do it just for, as you say one or two days, as so many of the inquests do require. I admit that I have had no recent discussions as far as finding some solution for the longer inquests is concerned. The restraints, of course, have been one of the things that have delayed us. We would certainly like to see not only the usual $6 fee increased to at least $10, but I would like to see some provision for special cases when the inquests go on and on, as that Sudbury one did.

All I can say on this matter is that I will take it under advisement and see if we can't make some further progress despite our financial restraints.

Mr. Germa: Could I ask one more question relative to this situation? It has to do with an inquest that went on in Sudbury as a result of three deaths at a steel mill in October, 1976. The jury recommendations were such that I was of the opinion criminal charges should be considered by the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry).

Over the past nine months I have been sporadically asking the Attorney General if he has come to a determination whether criminal charges should be laid against the manager and owners of Sudbury Metals Limited. Each and every time the Attorney General tells me, "I am waiting for a transcript of the proceedings."

I am going to ask the Solicitor General why it takes a year to get a transcript into the Attorney General's hands. That's the last story I had from him, just a couple of months ago. Where is the transcript? Are you just putting me on? Are you trying to get it ready? Try to tell me what the delay is all about in a fashion that I will accept.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, it is up to the Crown attorney who is at all of our inquests to decide whether he wants to prefer charges as a result of the evidence that comes out at that time, or that coupled with other evidence he may have.

[12:15]

The specific question that might fall into our ministry is why it takes so long to supply a transcript. I don't recall the hon. member for Sudbury asking me that specific question at any time.

I just whispered to Dr. Cotnam to ask if he knew this case, but he wasn't particularly aware of it. However, I am informed that a court reporter in Sudbury has the transcript; so the court reporter in Sudbury is responsible for that. Some court reporters are independently employed and some of them work for the Attorney General, so the inquiry can be made through his office.

Mr. Germa: It is true that I have not been directing the questions to you, Mr. Minister, because I think your ministry had done its job. You held the inquest. Therefore, I was asking the Attorney General, who was consistently telling me that he was waiting for a transcript from the coroner's office. Now you deflect it back into the Attorney General's ministry. Who is responsible for making up a transcript after an inquest? Is it the responsibility of the Attorney General's ministry or does it lie with the court reporter?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: It's the court reporter's responsibility. Anybody can order a transcript of evidence, and there's a fee involved in it. But as to this particular court reporter, as I say, I don't know whether he or she was an independent reporter or on the payroll of the Attorney General. In any event, we'll follow it up from our end and try to find out who that court reporter is and give you some more information on it. Can we have the name of the case again?

Mr. Germa: It was a blast at the Sudbury Metals plant in Falconbridge on October 14, 1976. The parent company is Allis-Chalmers of Milwaukee. Three men were killed in the blast.

Items 4 and 5 agreed to.

Vote 1602 agreed to.

On vote 1603, supervision of police forces program; item 1, Ontario Police Commission:

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, since this is the item of $2.8 million for the Ontario Police Commission, I thought it might be appropriate at this time to say something about the commission, its composition and in particular its chairman. I understand that Mr. Bell is still acting in that capacity but has informed the government that he will be withdrawing from the chairmanship and returning to private practice.

Mr. Bell has had an interesting career on the Police Commission and certainly in the political life of the province. I can remember the first occasion when I met him after I first entered politics myself. I believe it was in the county of Huron; a by-election was on at the time. I was asked to go up to represent the good guys—that is the Liberals—in some kind of a public confrontation. Mr. Bell, as president, was the spokesman of the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party at the meeting.

I can always remember how effective he was when he drew to the attention of the people there that although he was just a poor country lawyer from Mitchell, Seaforth or Exeter—one of those grand old towns—I, on the other hand, was one of these high-powered politicians from Toronto. In fact, I had just been doing the milking and had driven up from Brant county, but he certainly started off one up on me.

We had an interesting discussion at that time, and I've always felt that although he was never a member of this House, his influence was often felt. I believe further that his record of service has been an excellent one, both on the Police Commission and in his other important duties.

I am not aware of his reasons for retirement, but I suppose like many people he feels he's got time left for a return to a career in his profession of law. Whether or not he returns to Exeter for that, I for one certainly want to wish him well. I don't know what the government is going to do about filling that position, but when I see its procedures recently in positions of similar importance, I know that many of my colleagues hold themselves ready for the call.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: What about yourself?

Mr. Nixon: No, I'm otherwise occupied in matters, let's say of equal importance.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, that does indeed call for a few comments on my part. Certainly Elmer Bell will be delighted to receive those words, and I believe they were words of commendation, from the former leader of the Liberal Party. Elmer Bell has made more mileage, I think, out of that phrase "small country lawyer" than just about anybody.

Mr. Nixon: You know where he learned it? Les Frost.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That could be, but he was a great student of Les Frost then—

Mr. Maeck: You didn't do bad on it either, Bob.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: —and I think maybe Elmer worked it a little harder and travelled a little further on it than maybe Les Frost did.

Mr. Conway: To say nothing of Joe Greene.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The people of this province still love a small country person—

Mr. Nixon: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: —whether they're lawyers or doctors, or whatever they are.

Mr. Nixon: Jack, you will agree with that.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I certainly say that. I know, coming from an urban area, that if you can tell the people of this province you're a country boy, they'll love you.

Mr. Nixon: People would believe you came from the farm, John.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I didn't come very far from the farm, Bob. I guess that's the problem.

We're sorry to lose Elmer. Elmer actually has given his notice and it's past due. He is still acting in the capacity of chairman past his wished or desired date of retirement. We're going to miss him. He's done an excellent job for the Police Commission.

He had the ability to deal with people, as you know, always with the friendly approach. He also had the ability to deal with the officer on the beat as well as the various police authorities; and in a difficult task, where he had to judge, on many occasions, on disciplinary matters, between the commission and the ordinary policeman, I think he did as good a job as anybody can do in a judicial position.

He will certainly be looking forward to getting a copy of Hansard with your remarks in it. I'm afraid my ministry is going to spend all its postage budget this year in sending out copies of Hansard to people the hon. member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has made reference to.

Mr. Nixon: I don't know whether I can let that go by just that way or not, but I did want to say something further about the Police Commission. Does the commission have the responsibility to approve the plans for new facilities that are put up by the police forces and under the jurisdiction of local commissions across the province?

I'm thinking of two specifically, both of them that I've mentioned previously in my remarks; one in the town of Paris, which, with what I thought was a reasonable budget, converted an old house in the downtown area into what has turned out to be a very effective police headquarters for the community. The other one I was thinking of was the one in the region of Hamilton-Wentworth, which I understand is going to have a total cost of something over $15 million. Is the approval of such a project the responsibility of the commission?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I understand that in so far as the various buildings, police buildings, are concerned, the OPC is consulted only in regard to the design of the lockup areas. It has no power to direct, but I guess its advice is generally accepted in regard to the security part of the various buildings.

Mr. Nixon: I'd like to ask further, does the minister or any of his colleagues have the right to be consulted by a regional government when it undertakes these expenditures leading to the building of new facilities for law enforcement? It seems to me, particularly since we have really four offices associated with law enforcement and corrections, that there has to be some uniformity in approach, certainly in the lockup section which the minister has already mentioned, but also some uniformity in the way in which the various forces are organized, if co-operation among them all and with the OPP and with the RCMP is going to have any significance.

I certainly do not put myself in a position where I'm an expert in these areas.

As a matter of fact I've only seen the inside of a lockup as a visiting politician. I was concerned that the region of Hamilton-Wentworth, and I understand other regions, are undertaking these tremendously expensive programs, almost mindless of expense, so that it seems that somebody has decided the very best in the world has got to be brought together for the provision of law enforcement in these communities. I hate to sell any of these communities short in their efforts and their anxiety in providing the very best in police protection, but I have the distinct impression there is a tremendous overlapping of responsibility and an unconscionable waste of money.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I understand they are not obliged to consult with us in any way, nor do we have any power of veto over their actions to build police stations or police accommodation of any sort. That is purely within the discretion of the municipality responsible for it, whether it be a local municipality or a regional municipality.

Having said that, the provincial government has made certain unconditional grants to the regional governments to cover startup costs. We also make per capita unconditional grants. The idea originally was that they were for police work. The size of those depend on whether it's a regional municipality or a local municipality. They are unconditional. Some of that money may be used in building the police accommodation, but apart from that we are not involved either in the financing or in the approval.

Mr. Nixon: I have a further question in this connection. Would the police commission of the Hamilton-Wentworth region, established by Act of this Legislature, take the initiative to provide this? Would they have the position where they would approve the payment, or is their responsibility exclusively with the administration of the police force itself?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: No, it would be done originally, in this case, back before the region was established. I was at the official opening of the new police accommodation there, the police headquarters building. It is an elaborate building. I won't comment on whether I think it's too elaborate or not because I didn't see the entire building. It is a modern building. From appearances it seemed to have all up-to-date facilities.

Listening to the people that day, I understand that the need and the acquisition of some of the land for this building went back long before the regionalization of the Hamilton-Wentworth area, that this was a culmination of many years of planning. I'm not so sure but that it originated with the council of Hamilton, but I'm sure the regional police commission did nothing to stand in its way. It would have to originate with a request of the police commission acting in conjunction with the local council.

Mr. Nixon: On a matter which we've already discussed, at least to some extent, I want to caution the minister that these regional forces, particularly when they are growing in size and in cost so rapidly, can't help but undermine, and to some extent weaken, the centralized overall control of the law enforcement efforts that we're very proud of in this province. I'm not talking specifically about the Ontario Provincial Police, because we've already referred to the feeling in the Legislature, which I believe was supported on all sides, that we must not allow them to be reduced in importance, and certainly not allow the expenditures allocated for their support to be in any way reduced or their quality reduced.

One of the strongest parts of our democratic method of government is that the police forces, with all of their facilities and apparatus, their uniforms and their cars, their strength and their expenditure, of course come under the direct supervision and control of people directly responsible politically. While I don't want particularly to compliment the minister, because I think that his political career might have been directed in an even more effective way, still when I see him in the House and hear him respond to questions and so on, I feel that at least there is a political person there who is very much in the tradition of civilian control and gives a sensitive response, I suppose, to many of the problems, and emerging problems, in our police system.

I hate to think that our procedures through regional government are dispersing this control to an extent, which I hope will never be dangerous, but it at least concerns me that these large regions, as they are established, with independent control at least in this area of their budgetary decisions, can establish forces which are extremely large and independent in their own way, and to a great extent, perhaps more remote from the political control than I would like.

I have always felt that in this province, formerly through the Attorney General, and then after some of the changes, through the Solicitor General, this House did maintain at least a basis of control on the decisions which would provide the facilities and govern the actions, the training, the goals of the police in the province.

I have felt this for a number of years, but I don't want this occasion to go by again without recording at least some concern in this connection. The minister has indicated there will be amendments to the statute which establishes police commissions, and this has changed over the years. I understand these police commissions are responsible publicly, but even the police commission members themselves are usually, or at least the main spokesman, is usually not a political person. I guess in almost every case now the main spokesperson is either a judge or someone else in the community, and quite often he cannot be criticized directly in the same way that a politician can.

They don't have the proper forum, even, to disseminate another view in opposing criticism that may be directed at them. For example, I suppose the chairman of the commission of Toronto, if he were attacked in the future on some decision that he made, would have access to the media. He no doubt wouldn't hesitate to call a press conference, which he could do very effectively and very properly, but I have often felt that the main control should reside in a person who is directly responsible politically in some kind of a forum like a Legislature or a council, so that people in the community have the kind of redress which is most readily understood in a democratic society.

This, of course, contains no criticism whatsoever of the present commissions. I am sure I have made that clear, that I have had no indication at any time that the individual citizens, myself included, should have anything but confidence in those people who have responsibility under the commission system, but I just want to say that as our community becomes larger and the aggressive tendencies in certain parts of the community become more difficult to contain, and perhaps even to understand, the radicalism in certain parts of the community becomes more difficult to respond to in a non-aggressive way. More and more the politicians, all of us included, are going to have to stand ready, I suppose, to support the police but also to be sure that in the traditions of our community, those elements that some people may call aggressive or radical and seek to somehow contain in an unwarranted way, those people too have a clear access to public policy and participation.

As I say, I wanted to express some concern, particularly as the police forces in the regions get the bit in their mouth, become extremely large, and by government policy replace the provincial police for the policing of more and more people, and of course larger and larger territories. The police commissions to which they are responsible, and which must be autonomous, become, therefore, more important and more influential, and wield tremendously large budgets; soon to be as large or larger than the Ontario Provincial Police budget I suppose. This fragmentation is not necessarily in the best interests of preserving good policing, or even preserving the best interests of the citizens in our democratic society.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The member has been dealing with the very basic problems which our ministry has been wrestling with in connection with amendments to the Police Act. They are basic, and I am not going to suggest to you there are no differences of opinion on this side of the House, as I am sure perhaps there are in his own party, as to the proper constitution of boards of police commissioners, and the matter of regional police and the matter of local police.

All of us, I am sure, would like to return to the days when the policeman on the beat knew everybody, knew who he was dealing with, knew the families involved, and could perhaps pat one person on the head and another on the bottom and send the latter home to mother for a further pat when the child got home, as opposed to picking every child up now and putting them through the formalized system of our family courts.

Regrettably, that day has gone, and I am afraid the kind of policing that went with it has gone too. When we get into the highly sophisticated kind of equipment that regional police have today, and the cost involved with it, I think sophisticated crime can perhaps only be dealt with by the larger units, certainly in an area like Metropolitan Toronto or metropolitan Hamilton.

On the other hand, we would all like to have that close touch. This is the problem of trying to balance the attributes of a large force against the disadvantages of a large force. I agree with much of what the member from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk said in regard to the desirability of keeping them close.

As regards composition of police commissions, I will be introducing a bill—I hope next month—and I am sure the matters that you have raised will be discussed there. Our police commissions across this province have worked, and worked very well, and I am loath to upset something that has proved itself. Very rarely do you hear about any kind of improprieties on the police commissions. You may not agree with the policies they produce, with the expenditures that they make, you may not even agree with the disciplinary procedures that they establish; but thank goodness the police commissions, and generally speaking the police of this province, have been free of the improprieties that we hear about from time to time—though not completely free, I admit that.

To suggest that we should make them more locally political—and I am not talking against local politicians, I have been a local politician—I know the influences that are on all of us as politicians to do favours for a friend. I am not suggesting it in any improper way, it is just human nature. So-and-so is there, speak to him and see if he can do something to help you. That kind of pressure is there on all of us. I sometimes think when you are dealing with police commissions, it is perhaps wise to have those kinds of pressures dispersed, instead of locating them all in one place.

I know the Treasurer of this province is concerned with making municipalities responsible for their budgets; and in that same way he is concerned with police commissions, which get their money from municipalities—and the jails you were talking about, and the headquarters you were talking about is an example of it—and if the police commissions have this responsibility then perhaps they should be more politically accountable for their financial operations as well.

I think I've said enough about it. It's the key to the problem we're dealing with on the police commission system.

We have our bill, which will be produced shortly. I'm looking forward to the debate at that time. We are trying to keep a balance between local control and this uniform provincial control. When it comes to provincial control, I think most of the questions I receive as Solicitor General are questions arising out of local police force action of one sort or another. Some of them are OPP, but I think the majority of them are probably local police forces.

I think it's wise that the province should have, for the sake of uniformity in law enforcement, some control over all of the forces in the province. The way it's done, and it's not a very direct control, is through the regulations under the Police Act. It is also in one sense done in that we have an appointee on most of these commissions. I know there are pressures to remove that appointee and make them all local people. It's a case of trying to keep a proper balance, both in size and cost of operation, as well as political responsibility for all this. I'm looking forward to the debate when we bring that bill in.

Mr. Lawlor: What role did the Solicitor General have in the appointment of our friend Phil Givens to the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission?

Mr. Conway: Great fellow.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: A primary role of recommendation, but that's as far as it went. The final decision was a cabinet decision.

Mr. Conway: Let's make a deal.

Mr. Lawlor: Speaking on it as a personal matter, I find that a—shadowy, I think is the word I would choose—a shadowy decision.

Mr. Conway: That is easy.

Mr. Lawlor: In the kind of job fulfilled by a police commissioner, the sort of level of openness and integrity enjoyed—and it must be enjoyed to bring the full weight of that office into being—is of a very exquisite kind. It's not like an ordinary appointment at all. Along with it is conferred a judgeship and all that the panoply is supposed to bring into being. When it's done in this particular way, under a shadow or a cloud of some kind, tied in with political advantage or disadvantage, accruing either to the government in power; or to the detriment of a political party in this House; all that surrounding circumstance raises, if not a stench at least a suspicion.

Mr. Conway: Are you pushing for the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick)?

Mr. Lawlor: I noticed that dear Phil didn't enjoy the fullest amount of appreciation from the police chief and from the top echelon in Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Swart: And from the working slobs.

Mr. Lawlor: He had taken positions in the past, apparently, which ran somewhat contrary to the grain of the upper echelons.

Mr. Nixon: His statements have always been very supportive of the police.

Mr. Lawlor: Since his appointment as a politician, and being a very politic gentleman indeed—

Mr. Worton: You are smiling now.

Mr. Lawlor: —he has made various statements, for instance on capital punishment, designed—he very well may believe these things, I wouldn't know—in any case they curry favour with the powers that be in the department.

Mr. Nixon: It's incredible that knowing him you would in any way question his sincerity.

Mr. MacDonald: We leave that to some of your colleagues.

Mr. Conway: Did you want to nominate Vern Singer?

Mr. Lawlor: Recently he has taken grave issue with people having the effrontery to lay what he calls frivolous charges against the police in Metropolitan Toronto. Now he doesn't have to do that sort of thing. The police stand on their own feet, are fully competent to defend themselves on this particular thing and have a battery of lawyers, one or two of whom do absolutely nothing else but defend the police in the courtroom. Because disgruntled citizens lay charges, who are we to ferret out which one is legitimate and which one not? Is the commissioner of police competent, sitting in this position, to do so? It's the jobs of the courts.

[12:45]

If the charges are frivolously laid, adequate powers lie in the hands of the provincial judge who normally hears these cases, and adequate powers on the sides of the Crown attorneys to lay charges of public mischief and vexatious conduct, and any number of things.

But I find this whole thing questionable. I think it is our responsibility as paid and elected members of this House when we feel this way about something to say so. It will win me no accolades, but since the opportunity has arisen I don't think you should pursue that course, particularly in this area vis-à-vis politicians coming from this assembly or from any other quarter. It is invidious with respect to your own members.

It may even be more questionable in seeking to traduce—seduce—whatever it is you are doing—with respect to entirely independent members of this other field, who don't want your wretched jobs. If we are to have any integrity over here we mustn't be cajoled, tempted or in any other way prostituted in our basic—whatever shreds of decency we have left, we will have to use as a fig leaf with which to clothe ourselves.

Mr. Conway: Now to Dr. Faustus.

Mr. Lawlor: All right, we will let that go for now. The Ontario Police Commission hear complaints, and you have a special consultant appointed. I am looking at your 1976 report; that is the most recent one I have in front of me. In that particular report year, 80 cases were reported to you, of which I think 55, as I remember, were given hearings, et cetera. Quite a number obviously were jettisoned along the way and not heard, although investigations were apparently made.

I would like you to report a bit as to the operations of that particular complaints bureau

—how it finds itself in line with the Morand report and the Maloney report. How many cases were reported in this last fiscal year? What dispositions are made? Could we have a breakdown?

Mr. Conway: Now, about Phil.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I will be pleased to say just a few remarks about that.

Mr. Conway: Was there a deal?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: No such thing at all. I think you do your previous member a disservice in suggesting that sort of thing.

Mr. Conway: I am not suggesting anything.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Phil Givens, if I may say that, had reached the point where he had decided he didn't want to serve in this House any more, and said that he was available. That was the approach to me. Knowing Phil's integrity and his honesty over the years I was pleased to recommend him to the Premier (Mr. Davis) and to the cabinet.

Having said that, it was not all that easy to—

Mr. Lawlor: You also managed thereby to get rid of a dangerous opponent.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: You can place that interpretation on it if you wish.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Certainly, that was not the approach made to me by the member.

Mr. Lawlor: It didn't occur to you? It didn't cross that innocent mind?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: He indicated that he was not running, in any event. It is not all that easy to find good people to take these senior posts.

Mr. Swart: Within your own party.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: First of all, I think to have public confidence you have to have somebody who has established a reputation. If I appointed today as the police commissioner of Metropolitan Toronto, someone whom none of the public knew or had established that reputation, I think that that would not be doing the kind of service to the police commission that you need. You need somebody who is known favourably in the community, and I think Phil Givens was that.

He certainly has an independent mind and I think that is what we want. He happens to be from a minority group in one sense of the word. The criticism of the police commission of Metropolitan Toronto had been that it was too establishment oriented. I am not suggesting that Phil is not a member of the establishment but that he has always been outspoken for minority groups and if he was a member of the establishment he certainly wasn't in his origins. He made his place there on his own.

He is a publicly known figure and one, to my mind, who had both integrity and independence of mind and would not likely become a military image person, as some of the criticism that was being levelled against the metropolitan police had it. I think he is working well.

As far as his ideas on certain things, he is now an independent person on that commission and under no strings from the government of Ontario. He expresses whatever his opinion is. If he wants to speak out on capital punishment that is his right and I think his duty to do so. If he wants to speak out on what he considers frivolous charges, again I think that is his right and duty to do so.

I think I can be criticized on the matter of charges, that there are some of these frivolous charges, in that perhaps we haven't made greater progress with our citizens complaint bureau, because I would hope when that is established it may be able to weed some of these frivolous complaints out in front of a civilian adjudicator who can then remove that responsibility from the police commission itself and, I would hope, from the courts.

Mr. Lawlor: Are you bringing in legislation on that too?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: All on the Police Act, yes. Citizens' complaints and the composition matter will be dealt with in the police bill.

The Ontario Police Commission does not in itself run a complaints procedure. Maybe some time ago it should have established such and we might not have had the problems that we have been dealing with. It does, however, get complaints registered with it from time to time and its door is open for that. For the most part, the OPC has a person who hands those complaints on, but it follows them through with the various police departments involved, and I suppose in that sense its replies are somewhat restricted by the results of the investigation that is conducted by the various police forces involved.

Although the commission does have contact through one of its own people who follows them up with all of the various police forces, it does not have the aura of independence that I think is required and that the new bill will provide for it.

Just to follow up the statistics, you wanted the number of cases of complaints handled?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: His Honour Judge Graham has told me about 180 in the last 18 months. So that would be about 10 a month.

Mr. Lawlor: That's quite an increase. How many have been disposed of?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: We don't have the exact figure of how many are disposed of. You mean by that, I suppose, how many have been settled or the file closed on? A lot of them, of course, are never completely disposed of to the satisfaction of the complainants, or many of them keep coming back from time to time and use every chance they get to renew the complaint. As for the number of files closed as far as the police commission is concerned, we will get that information for you.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Chairman, I want to begin by supporting wholeheartedly the comments of my colleague from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) with respect to the retiring chairman of the Ontario Police Commission, and I would like to perhaps pursue for a brief moment some of the comments made by the member for Lakeshore.

Given the rather considerable controversy that surrounded the appointment of the present chairman of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission and, indeed, the sensitivity to that very important post now, I wonder what, if any, comment you might have to make about the criteria that your ministry will use or that the government might bring forward in respect to selecting a replacement for the very distinguished and retiring chairman of the Ontario Police Commission. Given the public debate and the sometimes political controversy surrounding such appointments recently, I wonder whether or not the Solicitor General might advise us whether he has special criteria, outside perhaps of some obvious considerations, for the selection of a new chairman of the Ontario Police Commission?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, first of all, let me say that I don't rule out anybody who has been a politician just because he has been a politician, whether in this House or in some local political arena. Politicians are the ones who have shown a concern for community interests and public affairs; in doing so, they are a likely field from which to choose, whether they are from our side of the House, from my friend's side of the House or from the municipal level. I don't rule any of them out because, as I say, these people very often are known and are proven for something. Just to go out and pick somebody who has no record or somebody the public doesn't know about, involves some dangers.

Mr. Lawlor: There are lots of good people around.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Certainly there are lots of good people. There are lots of good people in the labour movement. There are lots of good people in private industry. But they are not known by the public. One of the things in selling anybody, no matter whether you're selling a political candidate or what it is you are trying to sell, is trying to bring forth somebody with a proven record.

Mr. Lawlor: I think the new chairman should be a movie star.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: If he had a good record, such as Shirley Temple had, maybe we'd be all right.

Mr. Lawlor: Shirley Temple!

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: In any event, the member asked me what the criteria are. There is no set of job specifications, but certainly integrity, a great deal of common sense and maybe a little bit of intelligence are the ones I would put foremost.

Mr. Conway: In view of the position stated, I believe, by certain people in opposition to the gentleman who was subsequently chosen as Metro's new police commissioner, for example, will there be any kind of formal consultative process with those principals involved before the new chairman is chosen? Or will it be done on the prerogative of the executive council without any formal consultation with the principals involved? I speak particularly, of course, of the police.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I'm not sure exactly what the hon. member means. Is he asking whether we would consult with various police governing authorities or the police associations?

Mr. Conway: No. I wonder whether or not there is a procedure by means of which the minister entertains the opinions of at least selected people in all facets of this particular enterprise before he makes an appointment because, as was well known, before the appointment of the new Metro police commissioner there were certain representations made that would lead one to believe that there was strong opposition to that appointment. I just wondered what is the process. Is there an arrangement by means of which the minister does entertain consultation from all parties involved?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: No, only an informal political one of having your ear to the ground. There certainly is no formal presentation. It's a decision made by the cabinet. The various people may have certain suggestions to make in cabinet, and they certainly come to me from outside. I've had a few people indicate an interest in serving on the Ontario Police Commission, but not necessarily as chairman.

There is no formal process, as I say; it will be discussed in cabinet and with the Premier, and the recommendation will eventually come from the Premier.

On motion by Hon. Mr. MacBeth, the committee of supply reported a certain resolution.

On motion by Hon. Mr. MacBeth, the House adjourned at 1 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1977

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. S. Smith: By your leave, sir, I am rising to request unanimous consent from members of the House to present a resolution worded: "That we resolve that in the light of the deep concern of members of all parties about the actions of the RCMP in raiding the headquarters of a legitimate political party, the Legislature of Ontario express its abhorrence at this fundamental breach of civil liberties and request that the government express this sentiment to the government of Canada."

I realize it is out of order to present this, sir, and that I have not given the required notice, but I would request unanimous consent of members of the House to have this resolution presented and voted upon.

Mr. Speaker: Well, of course, the Speaker is in the hands of the House. As the hon. Leader of the Opposition has said, it is out of order and it can be accepted only by unanimous consent of the House. If we don't have unanimous consent, I'm afraid it is not possible to entertain such a motion.

Some hon. members: No.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

QUEBEC LANGUAGE LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, as members will recall, there have been some questions recently about the legal opinion requested by the Premier (Mr. Davis) in relation to Bill 101 of the National Assembly of Quebec, otherwise known as "The Charter of the French Language."

In view of the questions asked of the Premier and the interest expressed by members in this matter, I wish to provide this House with an opinion of the law officers of the Crown in Ontario as to the provisions of Bill 101 which in our view are ultra vires, or beyond the authority of the National Assembly of Quebec.

"The Charter of the French Language" in Quebec, as members will recall, was first introduced as Bill 1 of the National Assembly of Quebec for 1977. Subsequently, it was withdrawn and reintroduced as Bill 101 with some changes and rearrangements.

It is our view that the charter as enacted by the National Assembly is not in excess of the legal powers of the province as a whole. However, certain of the individual provisions of the charter are, in the opinion of the law officers of the Crown, beyond Quebec's authority. These individual provisions, however, may be severed from the main charter. Their suggested invalidity does not appear to be a ground for holding the bill to be ultra vires as a whole.

The charter is divided into five titles, each containing chapters on different topics.

Mr. Speaker: Order, there are too many undercurrents in the chamber.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The invalid provisions are contained in title I, entitled "Status of Quebec for 1977. Subsequently, it was titled "The Office de la Langue Française and Francization."

Title I, as I indicated, deals with the status of the French language, and chapter I under that title provides "French is the official language of Quebec". Chapter II declares certain "Fundamental Language Rights" with respect to the use of the French language. Neither of these chapters has any direct operative legal effect, being only declaratory in substance. They are given legal operation by chapters III to IX of this title.

The provisions of chapter III on "The Language of the Legislature and the Courts" are, in our view, ultra vires to the extent they are inconsistent with section 133 of the British North America Act.

Chapter III provides that "French is the language of the Legislature and the courts in Quebec"; legislative bills shall be drafted, tabled, passed and assented to in French; only the French text is official; and corporations addressing themselves to the courts and statutory tribunals, and procedural documents issued by those bodies, shall be in French. These provisions all appear to be repugnant to the requirements of section 133 of the British North America Act that the records and journals of the Houses and the Legislature of Quebec shall be in English and in French, and that either language may be used by any person in the courts in Quebec.

The provisions of chapter VI on "The Language of Labour Relations" are, in our view, ultra vires to the extent that they apply to collective agreements and to employment by operators of works or undertakings or persons carrying on business within the exclusive legislative authority of Parliament, for example, interprovincial railways and banks.

The provisions of chapter VII, "The Language of Commerce and Business" are, in our view also ultra vires to the extent that they apply to federal works, undertakings or businesses if they are interpreted to require federally incorporated companies to have French names. To the extent that they are interpreted to go beyond regulation of merely local businesses and trade and extend to interprovincial or international trade, they may also be ultra vires.

Title II: "The Office de Langue Française and Francization." The provisions of chapter V entitled "Francization of Business Firms" (as now contained in Bill 101) are ultra vires in their application to the operators of federal works and undertakings or the carrying on of federally regulated businesses.

In other respects the provisions of the charter, including those relating to "The Language of Instruction," appear, in our view, to be within the powers of the Legislature of Quebec.

I would like to state in closing that the opinion herein expressed appears to accord broadly with the views of the law officers of the federal Crown as summarized in the Prime Minister's statement of the "Position of the federal government with regard to Quebec's Bill 101 'Charter of the French Language,'" made public on October 6, 1977.

ORAL QUESTIONS

QUEBEC LANGUAGE LEGISLATION

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker: Can the Attorney General tell us what purpose has been served by having this legal opinion and what the follow-up will now be since there are certain provisions which, he says, in Bill 101 are ultra vires? What action did he ever think the provincial government would be able to take in obtaining this particular legal opinion, and what action is the provincial government going to take now that it has this presumably costly legal opinion which he has just read out to us?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that many weeks ago the Premier indicated his intention to seek an opinion from the law officers of the Crown in Ontario, and the opinion that has been given is from the law officers of the Crown in Ontario. I have some difficulty in understanding why it was necessary for the Leader of the Opposition to suggest it was a costly opinion, although I would indicate that it was an opinion given by some very distinguished public servants in this province.

It would be quite improper of me to attribute any specific motives or to inquire into the mind of the Premier when he, as the leader of the government of this province, indicated to the Legislature that this was the course of action that he had embarked upon. I do recall there was a great deal of concern expressed by members in this Legislature, both within this chamber and outside, with respect to some of the provisions of this bill, particularly as they might apply to citizens of Ontario moving to Quebec.

Obviously, for example, the language of instruction was an area in which there was a great deal of concern.

I'm rather surprised that the Leader of the Opposition would quarrel at this time with the fact that the opinion of the public servants of this province has been delivered to this Legislature, because he himself, through his office, has been inquiring of our office in the past weeks as to just what that opinion was.

[2:15]

Mr. S. Smith: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I also asked the Attorney General what action the provincial government intends to take. Do I take it that it is the Attorney General's opinion that the law should be challenged in some way in the courts by some level of government, and is that the opinion which he will express, either on his own behalf or express to other levels of government?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, when Bill 101 was reintroduced in the assembly in Quebec, there was some concern expressed as to whether or not the federal government, with its powers, should refer the matter directly to the Supreme Court of Canada. If the federal government had chosen to pursue that course of action then the provinces would have had the right to intervene and be represented at the Supreme Court of Canada level.

The provinces have no such right to refer the legislation of another province directly to the Supreme Court of Canada, as I know is appreciated by the Leader of the Opposition. So, at the time the opinion was ordered, we did not know what the position of the federal government was going to be as to whether there would be a direct constitutional reference to the Supreme Court of Canada or whether it was going to allow the matter to be argued in the lower courts of that province, as is often the case with most legislation.

All I can say at this time, the federal government in its wisdom having chosen to adopt this course of action—

Mr. S. Smith: Are you advising them?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —I don't think there's any particular useful advice that I, as Attorney General of this province, at least, intend to offer the Prime Minister of Canada at this point in time in relation to his decision with respect to not challenging the legislation directly in the Supreme Court of Canada by constitutional reference.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: Since the insight and intelligence of our senior public servants lose some of their natural genius in the simple banal expression in this document of whether or not something is ultra vires, could the Attorney General perhaps table the background materials and cases on which these particular findings were based and the interpretation which accompanies them, I assume?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, Mr. Speaker, I can't undertake to do that simply because it's been the practice for many years in this province not to table opinions that are given by law officers of the Crown to the government. I think it's a practice that should be followed because I think it's important that they feel in no way—well, I think they should be encouraged to give the best possible opinion, in the first instance, in a way which is confidential in order to encourage a free flow of opinion. In certain areas, not so much in this particular area, but obviously many of these areas are of a highly controversial nature. I think it's a practice that should be followed.

Mr. Lewis: It is a statement of such depth and rare insight, I thought there must be some substance.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Since the Attorney General now says that he has this legal opinion and sees no point to him as Attorney General urging the federal government to take any particular course of action, is he aware that the Premier, when he announced this seeking of legal opinion, said: "It would be our expectation that the federal government would be prepared to initiate such a challenge should they have an opinion which deems its provisions to be unconstitutional"? Now that there is such an opinion, which his officers have prepared, is he prepared to urge the federal government to challenge this legislation since some of these provisions seem to be deemed to be unconstitutional?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Again, I am not privy to any conversations that may well have taken place between the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premier of Ontario preceding the announcement of the federal government's intention, and I think any such question should be directed to the Premier.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for—Lakeshore with a supplementary.

Mr. Lawlor: Lakeshore. We have met before, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: He is trying to forget.

Mr. Lewis: A former colleague of yours, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lawlor: Does the Attorney General intend to take intervenor proceedings in the one or more actions which are being pursued in the lower courts at the present time; that is the courts below the Supreme Court of Canada, which are considered lower—

Mr. Lewis: By the puisne judges.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, the puisne judges—in the province of Quebec or elsewhere? The Attorney General can intervene. Would he do so?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, we cannot intervene in the lower courts.

ACTIVITIES OF RCMP

Mr. S. Smith: I have a new question—again, though, to the Attorney General: In view of the actions which came to light on Friday and on the weekend, the RCMP having raided the headquarters of a legitimate political party, and in view of the abhorrence which I am sure all members of the House feel regarding that and the threat to civil liberties that is represented therein, will the Attorney General give the House some chance to express itself or will he express on behalf of all of us to the federal government the severe way in which we in this House regard this very unfortunate and, to my way of belief, very dangerous breach of fundamental civil liberties?

Will he convey this message in one way or another, or give us a chance to convey it, to the federal government and to all involved, and can he tell us whether or not he intends to release the report of a special Ontario Police Commission investigation of the Praxis break in?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Dealing first with the second part or really what was a separate question by the Leader of the Opposition, I wish to assure the House that when we have a final report, I will certainly be releasing the relevant contents of the report to the House; the findings that have been made by the Ontario Police Commission.

In relation to the concern expressed by the Leader of the Opposition in relation to the news reports of the reported break-in by the RCMP into the Parti Québécois headquarters in the province of Quebec, all I can say is that of course I share the concern of the Leader of the Opposition, but certainly I don't think I am in a position to either assist or hinder the other members of the House from expressing a similar view.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, since the Attorney General mentions that he will let us have the complete or final report regarding the Praxis break-in at some point, and since he now has some preliminary report, can he assure this House that there were not illegalities committed by the RCMP or Metro police in that Praxis break-in, based on the preliminary report that he already has?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: First of all, I want to make it quite clear that I don't intend to table the complete report as a police report because, for example, the preliminary report contains many statements based on hearsay and unfounded allegations. As a matter of fact—well, I don't think I wish to pursue that but, yes, I certainly will advise the members of the House as to the conclusions of the report.

I can state quite emphatically that, on the basis of the interim report I have received, there is no evidence whatsoever of the involvement of any police force—RCMP, Metro Toronto Police department or any other police department—in this break-in.

Mr. Samis: Supplementary: Since the minister's statements regarding Bill 101 have a very obvious political consequence in Quebec that we will all see tomorrow, doesn't he think it would be advisable in the interests of national unity that he would make an equally strong statement on this violation of human rights in Quebec to show his concern for the Quebec people?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am not sure that I followed the question in its entirety. I assume the question was directed towards the reported RCMP break-in. I thought I made myself quite clear. The Leader of the Opposition expressed his concern in a very definite fashion, and I thought I made it quite clear that I share his concern.

Mr. Samis: Is the minister going to issue a separate statement of his own?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am sorry, I didn't catch that.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a supplementary? I want to come to this more particularly with the Solicitor General in a moment. But perhaps I can ask the Attorney General, does he not think that it might be appropriate for the senior provincial law officer of the Crown in this province and, therefore, of any of the other provinces in a sense, to request of the federal government, an actual inquiry into what occurred? Has it occurred to him to request of the federal government some indication of the RCMP's activities in this province? Does he feel himself sufficiently apprised of what they are about in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, I do. I think the leader of the New Democratic Party is quite correct when he suggests that some of these questions should be directed to the Solicitor General. I can say that I have been party to ongoing discussions between other provincial Attorneys General and the federal Solicitor General and the federal Minister of Justice. I must state that insofar as RCMP operations are concerned in this province I have found they have been most co-operative in advising us at any given time what the nature of their operations is. The relationship in this province, quite frankly, has been somewhat better than the relationship that has existed in other provinces. I think this has something to do with the commanding officer in this province. Hopefully, the relationship, which has been a very good one during the two years that I have served in my present capacity, will continue. But it is one that must continue to be of concern to all of us.

RCMP TORONTO STAFF

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Solicitor General: Rumour has it from usually reliable sources that there has been a significant jump in the RCMP staff complement in the Metropolitan Toronto area over the last four or five years. By significant, I mean double or treble what it was in 1972. Has that been brought to the attention of the Solicitor General? Is that valid, and if so, what are they doing?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Yes, I think that is correct. I don't have the exact figures on the various strengths of the RCMP, but it is noted by us with some—I guess reserve is the best word—

Mr. Lewis: Some what?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: —reserve by the Ontario Provincial Police that perhaps the RCMP is expanding when we are trying to hold the OPP at its present strength for the various reasons we all know about here.

Mr. MacDonald: Are they filling the gap?

Mr. Warner: They may visit your office.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Let me continue. As the Attorney General has said, we have close co-operation with the RCMP. By way of goodwill, I have toured their establishment down there. They invited me and they explained some of their operations to me. It went further than just a social visit. I am not suggesting that I know all that they are doing in the area of the security of Canada. That is still their prime concern and they are carrying on in that responsibility, but again, I believe, with close co-operation with our Metropolitan Toronto police as well as our OPP. We have engaged in a great many joint force operations in the way of organized crime, as I have reported to this House.

I have had no incidents brought to my attention where either the Metro police or the OPP have been concerned with the manner of their operations in any way. As I say, I do know that they have increased their force considerably and that they are getting perhaps into other fields, such as organized crime, with our encouragement and co-operation. But as to what all the additional strength they have today that they didn't have three or four years ago is being used for, I don't have that breakdown.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: Could the minister check out and advise the House whether it is true that they've jumped in complement from some 200 or 250 in 1972 to between 600 and 800 in 1977—actual officers involved? And could he perhaps find out what the extent of responsibility and activity is?

Perhaps some of us, in the light of recent events, would feel a little better if the indigenous police forces, the Metro police force and the OPP, seemed to have the upper hand. That goes right back to the days when Arthur Wishart was reassuring us during the War Measures Act. It would be useful if the minister could report to the House.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I'll be glad to attempt to get that information. I don't believe it will be regarded by them as confidential, but subject to that, I'll do my best anyway to get the information.

Mr. Lewis: If they regard you as left of centre, anything will be confidential.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary: When the Solicitor General is obtaining that information, will he also attempt to obtain for us, the changes in the force which have resulted from differing responsibilities in matters of immigration and drug control?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That will be included.

LAYOFF OF NICKEL WORKERS

Mr. Lewis: Could I ask in the broadest sense for the Premier to comment on the discussions he has had with a delegation from Sudbury over the Inco matter and any further substance he would wish to bring to the attention of the House?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I guess one might refer to it as the Sudbury committee—it was in to see me this morning. It is made up of the chairman of the region, the mayor of Sudbury, representatives of the unions of the labour congress, and the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Nixon: Not Elmer Sopha?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I don't believe that the former member for Sudbury was there. And knowing him as well as I do, if he had been I could not have forgotten his presence. Mr. Sopha was not there.

They put before us, I thought, a very constructive and creative series of suggestions. They didn't relate to the specifics of Inco in terms of the layoff. The meeting really was based on what they felt they could do with government help, et cetera, in terms of assuring the longer term future of the community. I think they had eight or nine different questions they wished to raise with us. Two or three of them, I thought, were quite positive in terms of having practical application fairly shortly.

I told the chairman of the region and the other members of the delegation that the government would review these immediately to see what we could do to react to them. There was one suggestion, as I recall it, that related to the establishment of some form of ongoing committee or task force, where they asked for some provincial involvement and federal government involvement. This would relate to the longer term economic prospects of the Sudbury basin.

I thought that this was helpful. They wished to chair this particular task force if it were established. There was also some discussion, but we didn't bring it to any sort of conclusion as to the possibility of transporting workers from Inco to the potential jobs in Elliot Lake. I think the union representatives there didn't wish to pursue that at this moment until some of their discussions with Inco on other matters were resolved. So it was put on the table, but I think it was agreed that for the next few days it wouldn't be moved into any area of finality at all.

There was a suggestion as well with respect to one or two other parts of provincial government involvement. The question of location of government offices and so on. I'm sure the leader of the New Democratic Party is familiar with a number of these suggestions and I have undertaken with the chairman of the region to get back to him and his committee just as soon as possible. I found it a very positive and constructive sort of meeting in light of all of the circumstances, and we will be pursuing it with them just as soon as we can.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, does the Premier know, or did he realize, that as recently as yesterday, the senior vice-president of Inco, Dr. Walter Curlook, mirrored not at all the confidence and assurance that the Premier put to the House on Friday after his discussion with the chairman of the board, about the future of Inco in Sudbury, and would make no commitments at all about the maintenance of the work force and what might happen in 1978? Has the Premier's office progressed any further with that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: In pursuing that, I have a statement made by the same doctor in an exclusive interview with the Toronto Star which appeared on Saturday. He made a statement on Saturday afternoon in which he dealt with this matter and I think the point made in the interview, or at least what was reported, was the question of the layoffs here and the question of possible layoffs in Guatemala and Indonesia.

The same Dr. Walter Curlook indicated that the decision with respect to Inco's operation here did not relate to the situation in either Guatemala or Indonesia. I think he has suggested that—as with some of us on occasion—the full import of what he was saying did not, perhaps, reflect itself with total accuracy in the interview that I read in, I think, Saturday's Toronto Star.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: In regard to the grave situation that exists, was there any indication by a senior Inco official that the jobs were protected in Guatemala and Indonesia for fear of nationalization of the mines there, and that no such fear exists here?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I rather think this was in the article by the same gentleman, although I may be wrong. And as I say, I have a copy because I was concerned about the statement that Dr. Curlook gave to CFTO and the Toronto Star on Saturday afternoon. In that statement he makes it very clear that the two were not related.

Mr. Lewis: Does the Premier have a timetable for getting back to the region of Sudbury on the various particulars they raised with him? Is there a date at which he will inform them of procedures?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We didn't say yes; by this Wednesday or Thursday, but I told them that we would pursue it as rapidly as possible, although I know that in the context of some issues some members will say that could mean weeks or months. I would assure members of the House in the context of this particular issue that when I say as rapidly as possible, that would be the precise interpretation that should be given to that phrase.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary: Since the Premier has said that the items were not apparently related, would the Premier, in reviewing an article in Forbes magazine, dated October 1, 1977, inquire of Mr. Chuck Baird, apparently the president—who was quoted to have said, "If Inco is forced to cut future production, Carter, the Inco chairman, will probably choose to do so in Canada, which on the surface seems illogical because Canadian nickel is cheaper to mine. The problem is that less pure nickel from laterite mines has more customer appeal; besides, governments like Indonesia do not look kindly on cutbacks in their countries."

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would be delighted to check this out. There have been a number of statements made to a number of various publications. While I am prepared to check out this particular statement—it has been raised here before by one of the members from Sudbury, as a matter of fact—I think that, hopefully, by Thursday when the leaders meet we will, as I have indicated, have some terms of reference for the standing resources development committee

Mr. Lewis: Seriously—the House leader?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The House leaders.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, good.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Matters of this kind are very relevant issues for the resources development committee to raise, and I would hope the terms of reference would allow that sort of question.

However, I would be delighted to check out Mr. Baird's statement for the hon. member for Kitchener. As I say, I have been dealing primarily with Mr. Carter and two other senior people from Inco and there may be some contradictions on occasion; I don't know; but I will do my best to clarify them for the understanding of members of the House.

Mr. Breithaupt: I should correct my question to the effect that while the view of the writer of the article who was interviewing these gentlemen was as said by me, it may not have been the exact comment of Mr. Baird.

Mr. Speaker: Before we get to new questions, I'm going to recognize the hon. Chairman of Management Board with an answer to a question asked previously.

INCREASE IN EDUCATION ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. Auld: I believe on Thursday afternoon the hon. member for London North (Mr. Van Horne inquired of the House leader (Mr. Welch) if there was an explanation that can be offered to this House for the increase in the Education estimates which were debated and approved, at least by committee, an increase between the end of June and the end of September of some $103 million.

The amount that is shown in the comparative performance budgetary expenditure quarterly reports tabled on September 30 is just that. It's an outline of performance, or an estimate. Actually, it shows the anticipated changes in revenue and expenditures. That amount in education is primarily the amount that the latest actuarial report on the teachers' superannuation fund showed was in arrears, about $106 million. That is again an estimate. We haven't got the final figure, but I would expect when that figure has been produced, the amount that is required, less any amounts of underspending in the ministry, will be dealt with by the minister in supplementary estimates.

Mr. Van Horne: I would ask, then, in the light of the minister's reply: Does the amount of money that was indicated in the estimates—that is, the amount of $105,245,000—really now total $208 million?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Would the hon. member repeat that? I wasn't keeping track of the figures.

Mr. Van Horne: The earlier estimate was $105,245,000. This is on vote 3003 in the supplementary. I'm asking the minister, should that figure now be $208 million?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Approximately.

Mr. Van Horne: A further supplementary, if I might: In the light of this, I find it rather disturbing because if we multiplied it out for the time remaining in the year, we could come up with an additional $200 million or $300 million.

Mr. Speaker: I don't hear a question yet.

Mr. Van Horne: The question is: Does the minister perceive a need for an annual actuarial valuation rather than a valuation every three years?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I guess that question should properly be directed to the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells). But various funds have various dates for actuarial updating, if I can put it that way, and in the past I think the time spans have been correct. However, one of the reasons that the royal commission has been set up to look into pension funds—and we're making some internal studies ourselves—is that the rate of inflation, the very large annual increases in salaries, and the fact that in the teachers' case their pensions are based on their best seven years have meant a very large increase in the unfunded liability, which happens every time there's a salary increase.

Mr. Lewis: You are just impossible.

Hon. Mr. Auld: So it may well be that we should be looking at more frequent actuarial studies.

Mr. Lewis: That's why they call you Mikoyan, you will be here forever.

TTC FUNDING

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transportation and Communications. In view of tomorrow's Metro council meeting to discuss transit fares, will the minister now tell us whether the provincial subsidy is conditional on the 70 per cent fare box rate? In other words, what objection does he have to letting Metro decide itself, in these days when we want more autonomy for our municipality, what proportion of TTC costs will be borne by the municipal taxpayer and what amount will be covered by the fare box?

[2:45]

Hon. Mr. Snow: I'm happy to clarify what appears to be some kind of an uncertainty in certain people's minds as to the conditions of the provincial subsidy. First of all, to answer the hon. member's second question, I have no objection whatsoever to Metro council's deciding how it wishes to raise its share of the cost of operating the TTC.

The suggested target for Metropolitan Toronto is that 72.5 per cent of operating revenue should be raised in the fare box. We establish our subsidy based on 50 per cent of that remaining above the target, which is 13¾ per cent of total operating cost. In addition to that, there are two or three other subsidies available to municipalities under certain circumstances, one being the start-up cost of a major new facility. There is considerable additional money going to Metro this year and for the next three years to pay the additional start-up costs for the Spadina subway until it matures.

In addition to that, there are some other smaller amounts that are available to municipalities—I don't believe it affects Metro—where there is a growth rate above a certain percentage or where new routes are established. Actually, it works out this year, I believe, that with the additional subsidies our subsidy will be about 15 per cent of the total operating cost of the TTC, that is, the 13¾ per cent plus the additional qualifications under other provisions of the guidelines.

That is not a conditional grant. It is paid to the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. The only condition is that that grant cannot be more than 75 per cent of its total operating deficit. In other words, I can think of a smaller municipality that raises about 80 per cent of its operating costs out of the fare box, that municipality would have a target of 50 per cent. If we were to pay 25 per cent, which would be the standard grant for that municipality, the grant plus its fare box revenue would be more than the operating costs. In that case, our grant cannot be more than 65 per cent of the deficit. Other than that, there is no condition.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: I take it that what the minister is saying—and am I correct in taking this—that he is basing his performance, as it were, upon that formula but not necessarily determining that this is the formula that the Metropolitan government must take in order to finance its operation. If the minister is saying that, how can he then provide us with the kind of definition of his financial responsibility, except as it relates to that percentage?

I'm sorry if I haven't followed the minister but I don't understand him. He can say that his formula is based upon that percentage and, if it is, then is he not indirectly dictating to Metro how it is going to raise its funds?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, I don't believe we are dictating at all. As I have stated, our basic formula operating subsidy for Metropolitan Toronto is 13.75 per cent of total operating costs. That is payable.

To get into another example, in a municipality that has a population of under 100,000 its target is 50 per cent. In that case, we pay 25 per cent of its operating costs. There are many of those municipalities that do not meet the 50 per cent target from the fare box, my own being one, but may get 35 per cent or 40 per cent of their operating costs out of the fare box. We still pay the 25 per cent. The municipal council involved makes the decision as to how that is made up.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: I would like to ask the minister whether he thinks that a subsidy of 13.75 per cent, or even 15 per cent, in Metro Toronto, is adequate to implement the provincial commitment which it made three or four years ago to shift the emphasis from roads to public transit and, in the long run, to save money on roads and reduce the congestion and the pollution in the big cities?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think that it is most reasonable and that it meets our objective of giving a great deal higher emphasis to public transit. I believe our transit operating subsidies this year will be something in the neighbourhood of $60 million, which is about eight to nine per cent above those of last year.

Mr. Warner: How much is for roads and how much for highways?

Hon. Mr. Snow: At the same time, there is no increase this year in moneys available for municipal road construction, although there will be a modest increase in the moneys available for municipal road maintenance. I would point out that adequate maintenance of the municipal road system is equally important, if not more so, for the operation of a transit system as it is for the automobile. What the hon. member forgets is that the major portion of transit in the province of Ontario now, and perhaps for a great many years in the future, is and will be the bus which runs on roads.

Mr. Nixon: You must be building a model.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Is the minister prepared to say, in view of the debate going on in Metro and in the city and so on, that the government will pay 15 per cent of the operating expenses this year, we'll set some other dollar figure in future years and how Metro chooses to raise the rest of the money is Metro's business? Is he prepared to say that clearly so that everybody understands it in view of the impending debate in Metro council?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how many times I have to say it—

Mrs. Campbell: Just say yes.

Mr. S. Smith: Say yes.

Hon. Mr. Snow: —I'm not going to say 15 per cent, I'm going to say 13.75 per cent, which has been put in letter form to Chairman Godfrey and the TTC.

Mr. Warner: Get a new letter writer.

Hon. Mr. Snow: As far as I'm concerned, and I know as far as those gentlemen are concerned, there is no uncertainty about it. That is it.

Mr. S. Smith: That is it?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Yes.

TEA AND COFFEE PRICING

Mr. Swart: I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. In the light of the letters tabled by him today from the coffee companies on coffee prices—and he's had some time to look at some of them—has he checked the accuracy of the somewhat less than impartial information which he has received, and has he now questioned his colleague, the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) on the information which led him to believe that his ministry was being ripped off at $2.94 a pound for the coffee?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The answer to the second question is, no. The answer to the first question is that when I write major chains such as I have written and those chains are asked to respond to inquiries from the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, I tend to accept the facts and figures they give me.

Mr. MacDonald: That's what the Minister of Energy did with the oil companies for years. He was led up the garden path.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The members may take exception to some of the backup explanations in the conclusions they draw—

Mr. Nixon: Your colleague says it's a ripoff.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —but I accept the figures they have given me. I don't question their accuracy on the face of them.

Mr. Swart: By way of supplementary, might it help the minister to change his mind about the accuracy if I pointed out that, from the few minutes that I have had to look at this, there's an error in the letter which he received from General Foods. They say the wholesale price in the United States is $3.41 a pound, and say it was that for some period before. Yet during that period, I know that Mr. Divine, the manager of the northwestern New York Tops supermarket told me they were buying it from this company at $3.28 a pound. Is the minister aware now that his own information shows that from 1975 to 1977 Nescafé coffee went up in price from $1.33 to $4.39 and that that was a $3 increase?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question has been asked.

Mr. Swart: But that coffee only went up $1.50 that was in that package?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am no more prepared to say that General Foods Limited, in responding to me, is giving me incorrect information than I am prepared to say that the gentleman the member spoke to at Tops or whatever it is in Buffalo is giving him wrong information. He is reporting to me that someone has given him—

Mr. Warner: The new leader of corporate protection—terrific.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere want to listen and find out or does he want to just talk to the member for Welland-Thorold and see what he tells him?

Mr. Swart: We want you to find out.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Perhaps the member would tell his colleagues to be quiet and they would hear the answer. I am no more prepared to say that one is lying than the other, although I suppose the member's proclivity may be otherwise. If he wants to tell me that he has some information, hearsay though it may be, that someone else believes the wholesale price in New York was different, rather than splash out something that says, "I believe someone is lying" to me, I would be more than happy to write back to General Foods and say to them: "My colleague, Mr. Swart, informs me such and such. Would you care to comment?"

At the same time perhaps the member will be kind enough to write his friend at Tops discount in Buffalo and tell him what General Foods says and invite him to comment further.

Mr. Lewis: Just two months ago you were a heretic.

Mr. Philip: Supplementary: Can the minister inform the House why, if he is so open to impartial investigation, his investigators have not availed themselves of the information that the member for Welland-Thorold and I have collected, despite constant offers to make this information available to him? And can the minister inform us of the absence of any report from the AIB? Would he be willing to table the questions he's asked from the AIB and their reply to ascertain whether or not they have in fact withheld information from his ministry?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The answer is that the material was just distributed a few hours ago by my ministry and through sheer inadvertence, the AIB letter was not reproduced or distributed. I think it should be by now.

LIQUOR LICENCE REGULATIONS

Mr. McKessock: Mr. Speaker, would it be possible to obtain a response from two ministers for my question?

Mr. Haggerty: You will probably get two different answers.

Mr. McKessock: I will direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, but I would also like to have a response from the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett).

Mr. Lewis: Good luck.

Mr. McKessock: Is the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations aware that if a person who is running a successful tourist business obtains a resort liquor licence, he must close down his complete operation for at least two months each year to comply with the regulations?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the member would like to give me some specifics of the resort in question, I will see if I can find out what occurs in the circumstances.

Mr. McKessock: Supplementary: In view of the fact that either the Act or the regulations state that a resort operator must close down completely for two months to comply with the regulations, does the minister feel that this is fair in a province where we are trying to encourage tourism as a year-round business? If he does, I would like him to tell me why. If he doesn't, I would like him to tell me when he would make the necessary changes to allow such an operator to close down only the liquor part of his business, and not the rest of the business for the two months, so that he will be able to carry on in a normal fashion.

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will be happy to look into it and report back to the hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: Sure, you could send some letters out. You're kind of the minister of collected correspondence, aren't you?

Mr. McKessock: Could I ask the Minister of Industry and Tourism—

Mr. Speaker: You're only entitled to one question at a time.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister is becoming the Dear Abby of Queen's Park.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can't solve your problems; forget it.

Mr. MacDonald: I don't want you to. You are overburdened.

Mr. Lewis: You had a few radical twitches a few months ago. Boy, have they taken you in. What a transition!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Carleton East has the floor.

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Ms. Gigantes: I have a question for the Minister of Energy. Is the minister now prepared to table the contract signed between Ontario Hydro and Gulf Minerals Canada Limited for the purchase of the 3.7 million pounds of yellowcake uranium for 1980 to 1985?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: No.

Mr. Lewis: Aha! Why not?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Because, as I indicated previously, I am pursuing the procedure involved. I have half of the information. I am not prepared at this time to give a definitive answer in terms of the tabling.

Mr. Lewis: The minister usually works by halves. I am surprised.

Mr. Reed: Is there a contract, or is it just in the minister's head?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I can assure the hon. member that I am not going to table my head in this Legislature.

Mr. Warner: Why not?

Mr. Reid: We won't be able to tell the difference.

Mr. Breithaupt: Another empty answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Minister of Energy has the answer to two questions asked previously.

NANTICOKE PLANT

Hon. J. A. Taylor: On Monday, October 17, the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. Reed) asked me in the Legislature how much had been spent this year on repairs at Nanticoke generating plant, the approximate percentage of those repairs underwritten by the equipment suppliers through warranty, and what percentage of the repair costs would be passed on to electric power consumers.

On July 31, 1974, seven months after the expiry of warranty, the No. 2 generator at Ontario Hydro's Nanticoke power station was destroyed by fire. The fire was attributed to the malfunction of an end bell on the generator. Ontario Hydro had a fire insurance policy and a machinery breakdown policy on this unit, each subject to a $500,000 deductible clause. Hydro's loss in consequence of this fire is therefore covered by the insurance and the cost of repairs is being paid by the insurance company, except for the deductible amounts and some items that were not insurable.

The estimated cost of repairs on No. 2 generator was $6,867,000; $5,046,000 was recoverable on the machinery breakdown insurance and a further $586,000 was recoverable on the fire insurance. Together, the insurance recovery amounts to $5,632,000 or 82 per cent of the loss. The other 18 per cent of the loss includes $500,000 deductible on each of the policies and $235,000 of un-insurable items.

In pursuing recovery of their loss from Howden and Parsons company, the insurance company will also seek recovery for Ontario Hydro of the $1,235,000. If this action is successful, then none of the loss occasioned by the No. 2 unit will be sustained by Hydro. If it is unsuccessful, then the cost to Ontario Hydro, and ultimately to its users, will be $1,235,000.

All other units at Nanticoke generating station, except No. 2, which was virtually replaced, are being modified. This work involves replacement of end bells, fittings of new wedges in the winding slots, and inspection and removal of cracks in the rotor forgings. This work is being carried out by Howden and Parsons coincident with overhaul and other work requiring shutdowns in order to minimize disruption of operations.

Up to the present time, Howden and Parsons have submitted no bills and no payments have been made to them in regard to these modifications.

Ontario Hydro's position is that the equipment contained basic design faults and Hydro does not intend to pay for the corrections of these basic design faults regardless of whether the one-year guarantee period had or had not elapsed.

Mr. Reed: Supplementary: Do those figures include the cost of the replacement of the hangers which had crystallized and had to be replaced? And does the minister not think that a 12-month warranty on a piece of machinery of this magnitude is rather pathetic?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I'll check in connection with the hangers, because that's a distinct problem, as the member appreciates. As to the length of the warranty, I gather that's a common commercial practice, but I agree that it does seem limited in terms of the magnitude of the capital outlay.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Is the minister aware that the entire Bruce B heavy water plant carries with it only a 12-month warranty, and does he think that in view of that capital outlay, which is considerably more than the few million he is talking about, that Hydro has been lax in not obtaining proper warranty on behalf of the citizens of Ontario?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition is again speaking in general terms. If he would be precise about the particular piece of equipment he is speaking of, regardless of the—

Mr. S. Smith: The whole thing.

Mr. Reed: The whole plant?

Mr. S. Smith: Twelve months.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: If you want to put a warranty on every item in your building—all the labour and material—then I think that's a little ridiculous.

Mr. Warner: They should guarantee the minister for a year. With our luck we'd get a replacement.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: If the member is talking about the total cost—$1.3 billion in terms of the two plants, B and D—I think he'll agree that you must specify in regard to the particular items that have no warranty.

Mr. S. Smith: Twelve months is the longest then. Check the contract.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: The hon. member doesn't understand. I find it very difficult talking to him.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has answered the initial supplementary and that's sufficient. The hon. member for Sarnia with a new question.

CONSUMER PROTECTION

Mr. Blundy: I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. What is the minister's response to Professor Edward Belobaba's article in the current issue of the Osgoode Hall Journal, in which he charges that Ontario's consumer law is a name-only legislative gesture—

Mr. Samis: It is true.

Mr. Blundy:—and that most consumers, including many judges, are unaware of the existence or scope of operation of the Business Practices Act because the government is distributing a four-page pamphlet on a limited basis instead of publicizing it properly?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Firstly, the good professor—to give him the benefit of the doubt—has reacted a bit too much to some of the publicity that other jurisdictions take the pains of generating when they are doing only what my office does routinely every day, and that is effect a lot of restitution for consumers. Within our own office building, as a matter of fact, when they have people in who have been treated unfairly, they call in those persons who've dealt unfairly, have a long chat with them, point out what may have been wrong and invite them to consider, very carefully, making restitution to those who have been badly dealt with.

Mr. S. Smith: Why keep them secret?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Where the businessman decides that it would be appropriate to rebate the money, some of the other jurisdictions, in similar circumstances, give out press releases as though an enormous accomplishment had been effected that particular day; therefore, there's a lot of publicity given to that act.

The trade-off that you make for that is that it removes some of the motivation for that particular businessman to make the restitution, and it encourages more court actions as a result. The approach we take here is that the important thing is to get restitution for the aggrieved person. As we stand here, there may be several people over in my office who are, in fact, getting money back; and we are doing it without publicity so that the process can go on more easily, more swiftly and more efficiently.

Mr. Warner: I wouldn't publicize what you do if I were you.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Last year, for example, although the professor doesn't refer to these figures, the ministry effected some $1.5 million worth of restitution to consumers. That's something we have done mostly without publicity, because we have only issued press releases as a result of cease and desist orders and restitution that followed, but was not ordered by court actions.

Mr. S. Smith: The ministry hides its light under a bushel.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So we take a bit different approach, but I think the lack of publicity towards the vast amounts of money we effect restitution of should not be confused with lack of efficiency.

Mr. Speaker: We have one minute left. Do you want a supplementary?

Mr. Blundy: A short supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the minister's statement that there are a great many settlements in this field, why does the ministry not publicize the Act more widely so that many people of Ontario who are not aware of it will be able to get some help from this Act?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Subject to some budgetary restrictions we have, and that is something that is under active consideration. It's a concern we have.

MOTIONS

SELECT COMMITTEE ON HIGHWAY SAFETY

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that an order for the consideration of the report of the Select Committee on Highway Safety, which was tabled on October 17, 1977, be placed on the order paper for Thursday evening next, November 3.

Motion agreed to.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. Mr. Auld on behalf of Hon. Mr. McKeough moved resolution No. 4.

Resolved: That the authority of the Treasurer of Ontario granted on March 31, 1977, to pay the salaries of the civil servants and other necessary payments pending the voting of supply for the period commencing April 1, 1977, be extended to March 31, 1978, such payments to be charged to the proper appropriation following the voting of supply.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, speaking briefly to this matter, the government at this point is asking for supply for a five-month period. As we have debated on many occasions previous to this occasion, we don't feel that five month's supply is necessary at this time, but rather than create a major fuss we are going to support the motion at this time.

I think, however, it's important to put on the record two or three things that we feel very strongly at this time. Here we are voting supply at the very last date possible; at the end of this month, we are voting for another five months. I think it is reasonable to expect, concomitant with some of the recommendations of my colleagues previously, that we can have supply for a three-month period. What this resolution necessarily implies is that we will probably not be back in this House until March, some five months from now. We think that's far too long, and it relates very much to the number of days that this House sits and the number of hours that this House sits.

We think that it's been very poorly organized in this last year, and to that end we share some of the views of the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) in a speech that he made last week.

We come back here for a very short period of time during a year and we jam a whole bunch of things into a very compressed period. We're sitting three nights a week, plus committees on Wednesdays. We're always fighting for an extra day. We're going to have a holiday next week on Friday because of Remembrance Day. We're going to have to compact and readjust the sittings of this House to conform with the pressures of getting through this heavy legislative schedule.

In our judgement, it's been very poorly handled. In our judgement, we should not be giving five months supply at this time. We should probably be giving something more like three months at a time so that these things can be kept under better legislative scrutiny.

[3:15]

We think at the very least this House should be called back sometime in February to get on with the business of this province. These matters have been discussed at great length.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: You won't be going to Florida then.

Mr. Peterson: You're going to Florida probably.

Mr. Nixon: The minister may be on the other side of the world, if we're lucky.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The oftener you do that the better for us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Breithaupt: You can go and take your barber with you.

Mr. Peterson: And your own personal sheriff and everything else.

These arguments have been made many times before. I just want to put on the record that we are not very happy about the way this has been organized. I would hope that the government House leader would take this under advisement when he is structuring the business for the next session. Our party hopes we are back early and that we can have a reasonable schedule so that things are accomplished sanely, intelligently and with more thought than one is able to provide in frequent circumstances under these compressed hearings when we're constantly rushed to find a half-hour there, or 15 minutes here or there to make up the required number of sittings. When we're only doing legislation one day a week, and that under great pressure, we think it's incumbent upon the government House leader with the co-operation of our House leader and the New Democratic House leader, to work out a far more sane and intelligent schedule.

We don't think this kind of supply motion is necessary, even though, as I said, we will support it. I hope in the spirit of co-operation under which these comments are offered that the government will very seriously take them under advisement. We would hope that something serious is done about this in the very near future.

Mr. Lewis: I'd like to use just a moment to associate our party with the remarks that were made by the member for London Centre. I'm going to speak as quiescently as possible, lest I work myself up to an amendment in the course of my own remarks, which has happened to me from time to time, embarrassingly enough.

Mr. Nixon: We recognize that.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has moved an amendment on previous occasions to reduce it to three months. I must say that our inclination would have been, however uncomfortable that is for the government, to support it. I guess one doesn't always want to do that kind of thing, to be trapped into that kind of thing, but there are two reasons on the face of it—there, I am already starting to lose control, I shall temper myself.

There are two reasons right on the face of it why this should receive begrudging support, if any. Number one, the government is a bunch of the most incompetent economic managers around.

Mr. Reid: You can't argue with that.

Mr. Lewis: The government is constantly asking for approval of estimate votes for sums of money which, by the time we come to the end of the term, have jumped by $100 million, $200 million, $300 million or more. Something sticks in the craw to have to stand here and give the government a five-months extension to supply, knowing that by the time it is over the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) will have again mutilated the revenue projections of the province and proved himself again one of the least successful prophets of this age or any other, and that we will be well over $1.5 billion in debt by March 31, 1978.

Mr. Nixon: He is in his own country.

Mr. Lewis: I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this aggravates us. It also can reduce my crescendo on the second point which I want to make with the government, which is simply that the government is systematically destroying the way this Legislature works. I really do want to say that to the House leader, because he is one of the people who has tried very hard within minority government to have it function adequately. I respect that and acknowledge it, and I think he understands it. As my colleague the member for York South pointed out, and as the member for London Centre points out, it is just nuts around this place. It just makes no sense at all to be sitting in a jurisdiction whose budget exceeds $13 billion a year, where the government wants to run through 40, 50 or 60 bills easily—many of them quite substantial, not just housekeeping hocus-pocus but fundamental and serious matters—in four or five months. In those circumstances it's back-breaking to sit here for four or five months, it makes no blessed sense.

We are reducing the parliamentary system to an intermittent travesty. It would not kill us in this Legislature to sit eight or nine months a year. It is wrong to come back here as late as we do and sit for so short a period of time.

Mr. Eaton: Look at the empty chairs behind you. Where are they all?

Mr. Lewis: Although obviously the New Democratic Party would wish not to have its celebrated leadership convention disrupted by the mere banality of what goes on, it wouldn't hurt us either. I don't think it would offend anyone if we came back in January or very early February, let's say February 5 or 6, rather than the usual inclination of coming back three or four or six weeks later, causing everybody endless turmoil during the course of the year.

The Chairman of Management Board (Mr. Auld)—certainly the House leader—I won't speak for the Chairman of Management Board, I don't know him well enough; I've known him for only 14 years and I can hardly scrape the surface—but the House leader is a more transparent fellow; he wears his emotions on his sleeve. It is clear that it must offend the House leader that we be subject to such excruciatingly bizarre procedures in this legislative chamber as pulling all the business into four or five months.

The member for London Centre, typical Liberal that he is, takes exception to the blessed thing and doesn't even move an amendment to change it. I, a typical New Democrat, will do likewise. Nonetheless, we are both at fault. There should be a Globe and Mail editorial repudiating both opposition parties for letting the government get away with this nonsense. Finally, at least, we've registered our sense of irritation.

All of the other chatter aside, we are really undermining the way this House works. We're really doing it severe and perhaps long-term damage unless the Premier (Mr. Davis) can be persuaded to start sitting eight, nine or 10 months a year so that the business can go through gradually, the ministers don't feel so cramped and pressed, not everybody is frantic, and three and four committees don't have to sit at a time. That is not an unreasonable request.

Clearly, this motion which the Chairman of Management Board has put is meant to violate that principle, and that's what's so offensive in it. We give him support so reluctant, so begrudging, so unfriendly, that we will barely be able to choke forth the word "aye" when the motion is called. He should take that to his well-disposed heart. Yes, it's there; he's one of the few who has one.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that I'll ensure that the House leader is made aware of the remarks that I have just listened to.

Mr. Lewis: Good.

Motion agreed to.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

House in committee of supply.

On vote 1603, supervision of police forces programs; item 1, Ontario Police Commissions:

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks I wanted to make on this particular vote. To open, perhaps I can ask a few questions with respect to the morale of the police forces throughout Ontario, what the police commission is doing with respect to ethnic problems as they exist in Ontario, and more particularly in Toronto; what is the attitude of the Ontario Police Commission with respect to the exchanging of information between police forces throughout Ontario, and what is the attitude of the Ontario Police Commission with respect to the laying of charges? I am thinking particularly with respect to the duplication of charges, the numerous charges that arise out of one particular instance and appear on the court calendars day after day, which would bog the courts down, and what the attitude of the commission is.

But first, with respect to the question of morale in the police force I directed my opening remarks very cursorily to this particular item. I am concerned, because it would appear to me that the attitude of the public towards the police force is perhaps not completely undeserved by the police in many respects, given the way they treat the public on occasion. It calls, perhaps, for a person with the wisdom of Solomon, but on the other hand perhaps just a little human understanding and a human approach to some of these problems would suffice. I would like to know, specifically, what training police officers receive in terms of dealing with the family situations, situations as they develop between husbands and wives, and domestic disputes that the police officers are called in on so frequently.

Just over the weekend I had occasion to receive reports from people who had had recent occurrences and recent contact with the police. If I just may refer to one situation that came to my attention, it perhaps demonstrates what I am talking about with respect to police and public relations. I think public relations with respect to the police are very inadequate, perhaps even to the extent that they are non-existent, with the exception of the police officers who attend at the schools and speak to the children with respect to safety.

I would like to read into the record this letter, because it seems to me it is a typical example of a person who came in contact with the Metropolitan Toronto police; again, it demonstrates a lack more than an outright or overt attempt by the police to be disruptive. Robert Sexsmith writes to me: "The following situation occurred involving my relatives and I dealing with three North York officers. The reason I am relating this story is because I do not agree with the reasons justifying the episode as well as the outcome of it.

"I was driving on Yonge Street north toward my home in Richmond Hill, October 25, 1977, about 1:30 a.m. My wife and brother-in-law were passengers. I was north of No. 32 police station on Yonge Street when a police officer drove alongside of me and signalled me to turn over. I then noticed a police cruiser behind me with rotor lights flashing. The sergeant approached my car, reached in and pulled my headlight switch all the way out. He said I was driving with my headlights out. I then realized that I was only driving with my parking lights on.

"The other two officers that stopped behind me walked up to the side of my car. I was asked to produce my licence and ownership, then to step out of the car. The officers asked me to perform several tests of balance and then searched me. I felt I performed all these requests adequately.

"I was asked to sit in the cruiser by one of the officers. While I was inside, the other officer sat in the cruiser and said I was under arrest for impaired driving. He said I was going to be taken to the station for a breath test. They asked me several questions concerning the last 24 hours and my activities and the amount I had been drinking, as well as the length of time.

"My wife, who had consumed a lesser amount of alcohol over a longer period, was not allowed to drive the vehicle home after requesting to do so. A tow truck arrived and removed my car to the pound on LePage Street. A taxi was taken by my wife and brother-in-law to No. 32 station to await the result of the breathalyser. I arrived at No. 32 station with the officers and was taken to a room to be questioned by the two arresting officers.

[3:30]

"A third officer qualified for the breath test was also present. He asked me to perform several reflex and balance tests, then left the room. One of the arresting officers made a telephone call from the room. I was told by him that my court date was set for Wednesday, the 26th.

"This was confusing, because I did not have the breath test yet. Several more questions followed by the two arresting officers, then I was taken to another room where I met the third officer to take the breath test. The officer familiarized me with the analyser. I did not blow over 0.08 which would indicate my impairment. The officer said I was lucky, and free to leave.

"I went home by taxi, which cost $7. An $18 charge to obtain my vehicle from the pound the following day was another cost borne by myself. We phoned the following day to inquire about reimbursement, but were told this never occurs. I feel that some reimbursement for these costs are in order, since my conviction never resulted. There was also a great deal of inconvenience and tension brought to bear on my relatives and myself for what seemed to be inadequate justification.

"This charge is also of greater import to myself by the fact that my occupation depends on my possession of a driver's licence. I think these officers had sufficient justification for taking these serious measures—my headlights were out on a well-lit street." That doesn't make sense, but neither does the sentence in the letter.

"Perhaps scrutinizing the actions of the officers more thoroughly as well as penalizing them for weak judgment, would help prevent such aggravating circumstances from occurring again."

That letter was written by a constituent, —an ordinary law-abiding citizen I would assume, who undergoes a breath test; which is within the competent jurisdiction of a police officer to conduct. I am not quarrelling with that. The fact of the matter is, this person passed the breath test and was not, in fact, charged. In fact, he was not even charged with driving with only his parking lights on. No charges resulted whatsoever. His complaint is that there was lack of understanding and lack of proper public relations by the police department, particularly when the breathalyser adequately demonstrated his innocence.

Likewise, he phoned the police station, as he has indicated in the letter. He explained to me on the phone that the response he got was fairly curt, but that he was advised that he was not entitled to reimbursement for the impounding of his vehicle, even though he was innocent of any particular charges.

I think it can be read from this situation that perhaps the public is justified somewhat in its hard line towards the police departments. I related the incident I observed myself in front of the CNE. We say, sure there is always a bad apple in the barrel and it colours the rest of the force. Unfortunately, that is true. With respect to the relationship between police officers and members of the public it is my respectful opinion, in submission to the minister, that much more can be done in this area in dealing with people on a more friendly basis, particularly in circumstances such as these.

Why wasn't it explained to him that he was free to go, rather than just be let go? Why was he advised that there would be a court date even before the breath test was administered? Why, in fact, was his wife not allowed to drive the vehicle home when he asked questions? None of these things were explained to him.

Maybe the police officers were justified in acting under the authority given to them by virtue of the Criminal Code, but the only thing I can see this person complaining about is that there was inadequate explanation given to him of the surrounding circumstances, and particularly the administering of that test.

I know that the police officers are called upon in every type of situation, and the nature of the work is almost contradictory, in a sense, I suppose, from day to day, but I received another letter from a constituent who witnessed a beating, again, at the Finch Avenue subway station in Toronto. He complained to the police. The police arrived. He explained to them what he had seen. It was a group of high school students, he estimated, using a pipe. Again, there were racial overtones because there were blacks and whites involved in the situation—only it was his estimation that it was the blacks who were beating up on the whites.

He did complain to the police but, rather than them taking a formal statement from him, he was very curtly dealt with again, and it was explained to him, without going into detail, simply that this occurs every day and unless someone lays a complaint, then the police are powerless to deal with the situation.

Here is a citizen who witnessed something at the Finch subway station, who did make this complaint and did want it investigated. He volunteered to go along with the police to the school, which he assumed these boys were from, to investigate. Maybe no charges would have been laid, but the fact is that had this citizen gone in the accompaniment of the police officers to that school in North York, perhaps just their presence in the school would have made the rest of the students aware.

If nothing else was accomplished, other than making students aware that the public will not tolerate this behaviour and that each incident will be investigated, then the police would have accomplished their task and, again, would have built up a greater rapport between the citizens and those who are clothed with enforcing the laws of our province.

I received another complaint last week from a man who lived in Downsview. He is of South Asian extraction and had trouble renting premises but was successful in getting premises for himself and his wife. His vehicle was parked in an underground garage. One night he parked it there when he came home from work; the next morning, when he went to get into his vehicle, the windshield had been smashed and the shattered glass lying on the front seat and on the ground.

He reported this situation to the police. The police arrived and investigated. Of course, there was no one to be seen and no leads, other than the smashed windshield, were present.

He went back into his home and that evening he was visited by two white persons who apparently barged into the apartment and struck him, cutting his eye. Whether it was related to the car or not, he does not know.

Again, that was reported to the police on the same day. The police came, took a statement from him and again he says that it was passed off, simply by the police officer saying that these occurrences are becoming more and more—not acceptable, but happening with a greater frequency, and the situation was left to rest with that.

His point is that it would have been much better if some police officer of perhaps the same extraction as he is had been sent to him on this complaint. If it had been a person of the same background, a person clothed with the authority of our law and perhaps a person who had rank and more authority, even within the department, to handle the situation, he would have been more satisfied with the result and more willing to accept the fact that the police cannot apprehend everyone. In fact, he would have been secure in the knowledge that something was being done and that the police were at least sympathetic with the situation, this having been conveyed to him in these circumstances.

I would like to know from the Solicitor General what is being done in this area, particularly in light of the headlines we read in the newspapers this weekend: "Metro Asians say Police Ignore Racism." "Police Ignore Us—Asians." "Sikh Vows, 'We Will Fight Against Racism.'" "South Asians Constantly Fear Attacks." We have that type of situation. In the reports being prepared for the police, what is the ministry doing with respect to training of officers, the advancing and promoting of officers with similar backgrounds to those minority groups who seem to be subject to these attacks; giving them recognition through the ranks of the police forces, having them attend at these particular occurrences, interviewing the people and having some follow up?

I know this is going to be more time-consuming and greater demands are being made on the police force, but the police force represents our laws for the people out there. Each police officer is clothed with authority that we grant to him. Many people in society have no other contact with the police other than phoning in a complaint or seeing a police officer on the street. They can proceed, again secure in the knowledge that their safety will be protected. That's what we demand of our police force. Our police force, I am sure, is trying to accomplish that.

In terms of these areas that we read about in the paper on the weekend and in terms of the racial discrimination that abounds and is increasing, and the violence that is erupting and increasing, what is the ministry doing with respect to the training of police officers specifically to handle these situations? I would also like to know from the minister what basis there is in the training of police officers to handle domestic situations, again with a view to the public relations aspect of policing.

I noted also with interest in the report that you have given us that one of the functions of the Ontario Police Commission is to stimulate the criminal information-gathering processes, and as well to promote free exchange of intelligence between forces. I wonder if this is being accomplished and what is meant by this phraseology in your report to us. In preparing myself for these estimates, I did have occasion to speak to detectives from the York regional police force who described a situation to me where they wanted to inform themselves and become more acquainted in the detection of offences of fraud. The Metropolitan Toronto police force has a fraud squad which is renowned, does excellent work and has the expertise and the experience that is lacking by many other forces.

There is a film presentation, apparently that the Metro fraud squad can take around to other municipal and regional police forces to acquaint them with the situation. I am advised that some of the police officers in the York region wanted to see this film. The Metro squad was prepared to show it, but the plans and the meeting were curtailed and stopped by the powers that be, the higher-ups in the York regional police. I am wondering if this isn't just a figment of our imagination, this free exchange of intelligence between forces, and whether there isn't more jealousy and competition between these forces on a regional basis than there ought to be.

In fact, ought there not to be some sort of a liaison committee that could act as a liaison between officers, as well with respect to complaints and with respect to morale in the police forces? It seems to me there ought to be this exchange, but when I hear situations such as that developing, then no one wins but everyone loses, particularly those of us in the community who rely on our police forces for that type of assistance.

I am concerned about the Ontario Police Commission and its actual role in the policing of Ontario. Its function seems to be—and probably this is where society is most familiar with the Ontario Police Commission—in terms of that body hearing complaints about police officers. It seems to me the public is not aware sufficiently of what this commission does. Again it's lack of a relationship and rapport between the police and the community at large.

I'm not sure if this is the vote under which I'd like to get into police training—I believe it's the next item—so I will reserve any questions I have about specific police training to that vote. But I am concerned about what the Ontario Police Commission can do in public relations in terms of specific zeroing on on specific problems in our community and providing the personnel and the expertise to deal with those problems.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for York Centre has covered a good number of items in his opening remarks of this session. I would like to turn first to some of the things we are doing in police training, dealing with community problems of the sort he raised—the racial tensions. Although, as you say, we can deal with this again if we wish under the Aylmer police vote.

Police training was subject to a thorough review by the Ontario Police Commission's advisory committee on general police training in 1974. The report on police training was issued in 1975. The minister agreed in principle to recommendations contained in that report and as a result the commission is in the process of developing a complete training system for the police service in Ontario.

The revised probationary constable training program was implemented in January, 1977. It consists of five phases. In phase one the constable receives a brief orientation in his own force. He is then sent to the Ontario Police College for part A of the probationary constable's course, which lasts for 10 weeks. He is given an understanding of the human relations aspect of policing in our modern society, and this understanding is reinforced constantly throughout his training period. After successful conclusion of this 10-week training period, he returns to his police force where he is taught local procedures unique in his particular jurisdiction. The constable is then given from 10 to 15 weeks of practical field training with a selected experienced police officer, when once more the human relations aspect of police work is stressed.

At the conclusion of this field training period, he returns to the Ontario Police College for a further five weeks, the objective being to consolidate the constable's academic and practical training, measure his progress through the total program and uncover any weaknesses which may still exist and correct them where possible. Then there are other courses, a course for junior supervisors has also been set up and was implemented on October 1.

Further training programs for senior officers are being developed and will be introduced in 1978, and an additional refresher course for constables with five years or more service is planned. Several specialized courses for criminal investigators, identification officers and juvenile youth bureau personnel, together with traffic enforcement and engineering courses, have been conducted at the college on a regular basis for several years.

Then I understand that during their time at Aylmer there are 24 periods of public relations, one session of which deals with prejudice and one session with minority groups; that is out of 24 periods on public relations, one on prejudice and one minority groups. Maybe they should be increased and that will certainly be taken under advisement.

We talked in a general way about racial tensions the other day. You dealt with the matter that we had in the Saturday Star; of course it's a concern to us and I have this report dealing with that item.

An article in the Toronto Star on October 13, 1977, entitled "East Indians Threaten Retaliation for Attacks," by Star staff writer Joe Serge, caused me to contact the Metropolitan Toronto police. I visited the superintendent in charge of the division involved, Superintendent W. Barker, 55 Division, at 101 Coxwell Avenue in Toronto.

The newspaper article does not properly reflect the situation. It may be that its timing was intended to attract attention for a mass demonstration against growing racism scheduled for Sunday, November 6, 1977 at 2 p.m. at city hall, Toronto, to protest the government's inaction on the physical attacks and discriminatory treatment of South Asians and other immigrant communities. This news story also appears to be an attempt to counter the editorial which appeared in the Toronto Star on September 1, 1977, entitled "Police Are the Ones to Handle Violence." That editorial stated the case much more accurately. It described how the Metropolitan Toronto police have increased their surveillance on the neighbourhood, have laid assault charges if the evidence justified it, have identified youngsters engaged in name calling and informed their parents of their behaviour. It also stated that the community relations squad had been visiting with community groups trying to bring people together, working toward better understanding and co-operation.

The recent news article identified Mr. Kuldip Singh Samra, the general secretary of the Shromani Sikh Society. He is well known to the Metropolitan Toronto Police and currently is involved in various matters before the courts which cannot be commented on. Similarly, the other East Indian, identified as Mr. Sian, storekeeper, is before the courts and nothing may be commented on in that respect. The Metropolitan Toronto police have maintained surveillance of the immediate area of the Sikh temple on Pape Avenue since August 29, 1977, and there have been no incidents there in the six weeks since then.

It would appear that because this is the only Sikh temple in the city, it attracts East Indians from all over the greater Toronto area. Consequently, their cars are parked in the immediate area and residents and their friends are unable to find parking spaces. The Metropolitan Toronto police arranged parking facilities at Gerrard Square and these were used by members of the Sikh temple for only a short period of time. They declined to use them stating fear of being attacked when travelling to and from their cars. However, there have been no incidents of such occurring.

Another problem is that the East Indians congregate outside the temple, standing on the lawns and thus annoying residents. The residents complain about the garbage left lying around the temple and the state of the building which houses the Sikh temple. It appears it is an old grain storage shed.

Probably, they are doing the best with the facilities they have, but as you can see, they are causing some parking problems in the area, which I suppose, not surprisingly, annoys the residents who live there. Also I suppose the crowds, although I don't know this location, probably are turning what used to be a relatively quiet area into a fairly busy area. That's no excuse for the people reacting the way they do, but racial factors aside, I would think from my municipal experience that whenever a large group of this nature moves into a quiet residential area, whether it's the Anglican church or United church or whatever it may be, frictions arise in the community.

I suppose the fact that racial differences are involved just aggravates it. I'm not making apologies for the residents there. What I am trying to say is that it is probably not surprising, regardless of racial origin, that there is some friction there.

As I said the other day, sometimes we expect our police to straighten out the ills of the world and the sicknesses of our society. I just feel that sometimes we ask the police to do too much. I feel they are doing as good a job as is possible, dealing with the kinds of cross-sections of society that they do; however, you may have more suggestions for us on that. I know that the senior police officers, both the OPP and the various large forces, get these copies of Hansard and glance over them and I'm sure the suggestions that the hon. member for York Centre has made will be taken into consideration by them.

You have some other specific items which you dealt with, such as morale on the police force. I think morale on the police forces is high. I'm not saying that some of the forces don't have morale problems but, generally speaking, when we look across the province I think morale is good, and I'll defend that morale for the OPP, the large metropolitan forces, and as I say most of the municipal forces across the province. We always have some complainers. Again, we look back to military days and there were always those in the services who were complaining about the management. To a certain extent, barrack-room grouching is a healthy sign.

Mr. Nixon: They used to complain about the Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That's right.

Mr. Nixon: But they always voted for him, of course.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I think that's a part of it. Sometimes you complain about these people but realize that they're probably doing a pretty good job under the circumstances. I'm not surprised if, when I was in the services, I didn't vote for the Prime Minister too, but we didn't always like the kind of orders that we got from the Prime Minister down to the petty officers—

Mr. Nixon: You were a yellow dog Liberal in those days.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: —who were charged with carrying out the orders.

However, I'll defend the morale. I think the morale is good. Certainly, there's some beefing and I think a certain amount of that beefing is a healthy sort of thing.

Let's turn to that breath test that you dealt with on Yonge Street. I'm not so sure that I sympathize with your constituent in that case. We've heard his side of the story, or you've heard his side of the story. We haven't heard the police side of the story. Your constituent was writing this in the cold sobriety of a Monday or Tuesday morning, but the fact was he did draw the policemen's attention.

First of all, I gather there were two cars involved, and I would take some exception to that if they're stopping somebody who appeared to be driving under the influence. I would wonder why they needed a sort of ganging up on him. It seems to me if you have two men in a car that would be sufficient to stop somebody of that nature, unless they suspected him of something more than impaired driving.

In any event, evidently he did do something to draw the policemen's attention to him. First, his lights were not on the way they should have been. The full beam was not on. That in itself is an offence. We don't know but what he was steering erratically or driving erratically. There is other evidence that is available in court other than the breathalyser test. In other words, policemen still lay charges on the whole basis, as you very well know, of staggering, glassy eyes and that sort of thing that we used to hear about in the courts.

The breathalyser is a more accurate and probably better test, but it doesn't mean that just because a person passes a breathalyser test that he should be on the road. I don't want to comment on the lady involved to any great extent. I don't know her, I don't know how much she had been drinking, but maybe the police, in their wisdom, decided that she was not in a fit condition to drive; not that she couldn't pass the breathalyser, but I'm saying just because you pass the breathalyser test doesn't necessarily mean that you are not a danger on the highway.

I think maybe the police did act reasonably. That is, I've come to that conclusion without hearing both sides of the story, but I can perhaps see shortcomings in the side of the story that you related.

When it comes to the case of paying the costs every time that the police are not successful in prosecuting or having a conviction registered, I think we'd make a mistake to introduce that kind of precedent. Just because the preponderance of evidence beyond a reasonable doubt is not proven doesn't mean the person was not involved in doing something improper.

Scottish law, I understand, not only has a guilty and not guilty verdict but another verdict called "not proven." I think that is the case with a lot of people here, where our law says they're not guilty it's probably a case of maybe they were guilty but we didn't have enough evidence to prove they were guilty.

To start into a policy of repaying the costs, or paying the costs, whether it's tow truck costs or whether it's costs of the day in court, for all of those people on whom charges are laid and convictions not obtained, I think would be adding unduly to the public expense and I think probably quite unjustifiably to the public expense as well. If you want, I can get further information on that case and get the police story. But I think you are only putting it forward as an example of the police not using the good discretion they might be expected to exercise from time to time.

[4:00]

Personally, I have had some experience with the police, as the hon. member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) knows, not for going two miles over the speed limit but occasionally for making an improper turn. I remember I made a right-hand turn on a street one day that was signed against it, purely for traffic reasons. This was before I was in this hon. House. I was aware I should not have been making a right-hand turn there. The policeman stopped me. I guess I was having a bad morning because I was a little bit curt with him and suggested that the job he was performing in stopping this right-hand turn really wasn't very important. Like so many other people, I asked him didn't he have more important things to do in catching criminals.

Mr. Nixon: That was a good start. What did he say?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: He was very polite. He said to me: "I am, sir." That cooled me out so quickly. From there on I couldn't be nice enough to him. I was the one who had started off on the wrong foot and the policeman was the one who came back with the answer that made me a little bit ashamed of my approach to him.

Mr. Lawlor: That was unlike the minister.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: We all have these experiences with the police from time to time. None of us likes to be stopped and reprimanded.

Mr. MacDonald: What we call our off days.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The police are the only people—I shouldn't say the only people—but in some cases the only people who ever enforce discipline on our undisciplined society in this day and age, and we don't like discipline when it's applied to ourselves.

On the other hand, there's the kind of reference the hon. member for York Centre is probably referring to. One day as I was travelling, I thought the policeman might have parked more conveniently in a different place. I suggested to him that it would be more convenient for the travelling public who were trying to get through a narrow space if he moved his car up a few feet. I think my approach was quite reasonable. He came back with a very snappy answer that if I couldn't get through that space then I didn't deserve to have a driving licence.

Now there was a case where I was trying to be helpful and I thought the police were not sufficiently understanding or co-operative. That incident, as opposed to the other one, left a bad taste in my mouth. The first one was a good taste. We all have these experiences. When your person wrote to you about being stopped unreasonably, I don't know whether they were as courteous as they should be. We express to them the need to be courteous. I think often they reply in kind. Despite that, they should give the answer the first policeman gave me, not the answer the second policeman I mentioned gave me.

On the Finch Avenue subway station incident, it is a matter of evidence. It could very well be that, although they made a note of the complaint, they see they have so little to go on by way of obtaining the necessary evidence to make a conviction they don't regard that particular complaint as seriously as either the citizen thought they should or as I think they should. I think they should make full notations of every complaint of that sort. I suppose the citizen who was making the complaint, although he was prepared to make a statement, might not have had any means of identifying the people he complained of. I gather you are suggesting they could have gone to a school nearby and maybe obtained that.

I have really little comment to make on it, except I kind of agree with you, again without hearing the police side of the story, that that matter should have been followed up to a greater degree than it was. I do feel that sometimes they instinctively know that no matter how much time they spent on that, they would probably not get the evidence they needed to lay complaints in court. I am inclined to agree with you that it was not, in view of what you are saying, followed sufficiently.

Again you mentioned the Downsview citizen, that is a citizen of South Asian extraction, who complained about an attack on his automobile in the garage and the subsequent breaking into his apartment. You noted these occurrences are becoming of greater frequency. I regret they are becoming of greater frequency and again I say that's society's fault rather than fault of the police.

I think your suggestion in that case was that they might have sent around to investigate somebody who was of a similar background or of greater rank. I gather they only made one call on them, and of course when the police get these calls they don't know what the background is, necessarily. Generally they want to send the closest patrol car to do the investigating.

There might have been a followup, I suppose, by somebody who was a little more diplomatic than the average policeman might be when he is working a heavy evening and making one call after another. I have had the experience of riding in a Metropolitan Toronto patrol car and know just how, on a busy Friday night, these calls often follow bang-bang-bang. They don't have all the time they might like to have to investigate each one fully and be as tactful as we would like them to be. But as far as having the right officer to answer the right complaint, it would be a little bit difficult unless you did that by way of a followup call.

On promotion of minority groups, we are doing our best. I think here again you can work discrimination in reverse. As you know, the Metropolitan Toronto force has not had over the years—although I think it has reflected society reasonably well—a great many people from East India or the West Indies in its ranks. It has some now. The problem is these are fairly new recruits and if you suddenly promoted them because of their background—although that could be one of the attributes for promotion—but if you did it simply because of that you would be practising discrimination in reverse. The OPC and the ministry are encouraging the police force to be reflective of the community it is in as far as its composition is concerned. I hope in due time those people being recruited in the last few years and at present will be promoted.

I don't know why the film was stopped. There are some rivalries among the three forces we have—the RCMP, the municipal and the OPP. I like to look upon it as healthy rivalry and in any of my approaches to the various commands involved I talk along these lines, saying yes we appreciate the esprit de corps in your own force. Let's talk about our forces as being number one, whatever that force may be, but remember that we are all serving the same people and that co-operation is the main element.

If you want to give us some more information on that film that was stopped, I'll be glad to follow it up and find out what the official reason was for so doing.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, I am sure if we listen to what the Solicitor General is saying today, it is that nothing is wrong in our society. We heard him saying morale of the police is good; training is good; the police force is doing its best; organized crime is under control; human relations between police officers and the public are also good; we are expecting too much from the police force; the Solicitor General is not accepting the role of the police in educating the public. I have, then, to conclude that we are living in a perfect society and the role of the police officer shouldn't be criticized at all.

I am sure if he is so optimistic about the whole view, and in particular about the role of the police officer in our society, maybe that's why, I have to conclude, the Solicitor General is so optimistic when he talks about organized crime—it is because everything is under control in the police forces.

I can only say good luck to him. I don't share those views. I think that we have problems in our society. We see the role of police officers among the public, the kind of attitude with which they approach our society. I note their lack of understanding. It seems the Solicitor General, until the end of consideration of his estimates, is going to defend the role of the policeman in our society by stating that there is nothing wrong and that everything is working properly.

In my opening statement I raised the point that something is fundamentally wrong in the relationship of the police officer with the public. The Solicitor General, it seems, since I raised the particular concern, has been adamantly opposed to the role of the police officer to educate the public. When we get to the Ontario Police College and the kind of training which the police are receiving, then we will easily and clearly see that the only program and training which the college is giving to the police officers is a paramilitary attitude and discipline. That's what the Solicitor General wants from the police officers. That's why they lack understanding when they approach the public.

We raised, as I'm sure the hon. member for York Centre also has been raising, the concern about racial attacks. The only response of the Solicitor General was that we can solve the problem if we raise the number of constables who are supposed to deal with this particular situation.

I'm sorry to say that the Solicitor General is hard to understand. There is a lack of policies which are supposed to be implemented among the police officers and the police forces of the province of Ontario, and there is something wrong going on at the Ontario Police College. His only response, as I stated before, is that everything is well and they are trying to do their best while members of the public are raising problems and concerns. Next year, I'm sure, we are going to hear from the Solicitor General that they are trying to do their best, instead of analysing and applying new policies and implementing new guidelines in order that the police forces are going to approach these problems in our society.

There is something on which I am sure the Solicitor General and myself don't agree. Maybe it's a philosophical approach that is completely different from mine and, if he is going to follow that course of positions, then I can justify the kind of words he has been expressing today and in the last few weeks in relation to the police forces as a whole.

Mr. Chairman, if you will allow me, I would like to talk about the Ontario Police College and what is going on there in relation to training courses. It seems that the Solicitor General has been addressing—

Mr. Chairman: I would say to the hon. member that I understand we're just on item 1. If the members wish to carry item 1, you certainly may go ahead, but I believe there is someone else who wishes to speak on item 1.

Mr. Lupusella: Then I would like to conclude my remarks for the moment and I can come back to the point of the Ontario Police College.

[4:15]

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make one specific comment about the discussion that is taking place now under the Ontario Police Commission heading. There have been a lot of comments made about the efficiency of police forces and the public relations of police forces and their work in the community with various groups and so forth.

I would just like to add one thing, that in our riding we have three police forces and all three of them are very well respected and, I believe, very efficient and capable; they are thought very highly of in the community. Also, there is the utmost co-operation between the three police forces in the riding and the OPP and the RCMP. I might add a third thing, Mr. Chairman, that being a border city, as we are, there is also unofficial but very tactful relationship with the police force of neighbouring Port Huron, Michigan, and the sheriff's office in St. Clair county. On many occasions the two police forces have helped one another and this has been seen many times at large public events. We have many American police over to help our Canadian police and vice versa. So we really have in that way a very good relationship between the various forces and the people.

The one thing that I wanted to bring up at this time, Mr. Chairman, was the composition of police commissions. For a number of years the municipal council—of which I was a member for a number of years—and the other municipalities in my riding, have talked about having a larger police commission, one that is more responsive to the people and to the municipal councils.

As you are aware, the budget of a municipal police force is a very large part of the municipal budget; and there is very little control of that budget and the expenditures of that department by the municipal council. Every year, when the budget sessions of the municipal council are held, the mayor, as a member of the police commission, reports to the council on the various expenses and the various undertakings of the police commission and the police force. But no matter what the municipal council thinks, it always ends up with the council saying, "Well, what's the use of going to the Ontario Police Commission?" The views of the local council and the people who are represented through that local council are seldom taken into sufficient consideration so that any change in the police budget can be made.

We now have one judge, the head of the municipality, and one so-called civilian appointee. This is an improvement to what it was when we had two judges and a head of the municipality, but our council in the municipality of Sarnia has said over the years that it thought it would be much more responsive to the people and to the council, and that expenditures could be looked at more carefully—in light of all the other budget items the municipality has to consider—if there was at least one more member of council on the police commission, and possibly another so-called civilian appointee to the police commission.

This has been the subject of a number of resolutions in the Association of Ontario Mayors and Reeves, when that body existed, and more recently in the municipalities of Ontario. I believe that many of the municipal officials feel the police budget is almost out of their hands and they can't do anything with it. I would like to stress this concern to the Solicitor General, because it is one that has been expressed by many people. You can ask any person who has been involved for any length of time in municipal life, and who has been both a member of the police commission and a member of a municipal council, as I have for eight years. It's very difficult to be able to get the council to get their teeth into the budget and to make any significant changes in the budget.

I would like very much to have the Solicitor General give this House his views on the existing composition of the police commission and the possibility that there might be a wider segment of the people represented on the local police commissions. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lawlor: His answer is it is the best of all possible worlds and everything in it is a necessary evil.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to make a philosophical comment on the words of the member for Lakeshore that here in Ontario at least it is not all that bad.

Mr. Lawlor: It is as close to paradise as you think you will probably ever come.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: It certainly is as close to paradise as the present government can make it, and I don't think any other party would do any better.

Mr. Warner: That only proves your limited vision.

Mr. Stong: You have to give us a try.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Dealing with this matter of police commissions—

Mr. Lawlor: I am going to send you a copy of Voltaire's "Candide."

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I read that once; I read it in French, too. I wouldn't want to try to do it today.

Mr. Lawlor: It didn't get through. You'd have to have the earthquake at Lisbon to move you.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: As I said before, Mr. Chairman, I hope to introduce in two weeks' time an amendment to the Police Act, which will deal in part with the composition of police commissions. I don't see us adding to those commissions for the ordinary police force. The suggestion of the hon. member for Sarnia that perhaps we should have five-man commissions instead of three wouldn't bother me, but I just don't think the volume of business warrants it. I don't see any great problem with that, if this House decided we should have five-member commissions, but I do think the three-member commissions have been working very well and that's what the Act will propose.

As far as the onus of proof is concerned for budgetary expenses, this has been raised in the past and the bill does propose that the onus be shifted. In other words, at the present time the police commission proposes the budget to the municipal council and if the municipal council doesn't like that budget it has to appeal it to the Ontario Police Commission. The proposal we will have is that if the council doesn't like it, it will be able to say what kind of budget it thinks the commission should have and then the commission would have to appeal it to the OPC.

Being aware of the financial responsibility that the council has, that is what our Act proposes. Whether that will make any difference or not, I don't know. I noticed just recently that the Metro Toronto commission has decided it has to put a check on some of its expenditures to the point of holding down the strength of the force. I don't deny these things are political decisions in part, but at the same time, tradition has been that we regard policing as such a serious matter and that there is a provincial responsibility for uniformity and strength—that is, success of policing—so that the police commissions should have that say rather than the councils being able to cut the commissions down unreasonably.

I think it's worth a try. Councils are responsible. After all, probably the councils and the political arm are more responsive to public—

Mr. Haggerty: Why doesn't the minister absorb more of the cost of policing then?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: It's a case of financing again.

Mr. Haggerty: You want to run the show.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: No, we're not beginning to pay all of the costs, as you know.

Mr. Haggerty: You're far from it.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: We contribute $10 per head in the municipality of the member for Sarnia for the costing of the police, but that's depending on what the budget is, of course. It may be a large part or a small part, but we're certainly not paying the major share in policing. We do feel there should be uniformity of effectiveness across the province and that is why the onus has been on the council to say that this is unreasonable or unfair. This bill will suggest the transfer of that. So we are taking some of the suggestions that the hon. member for Sarnia is making.

One of the big problems we have in the area of the member for Sarnia—and we will be able to get that straightened out one of these days—is the policing of the St. Clair River. We hope to have conferences of all three levels. That is one of the matters I want to discuss with the RCMP in the spirit of co-operation that we have.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, the member for York Centre raised a question a while ago which set my mind thinking along a certain line which we investigated during our recent sessions of the Select Committee on Highway Safety.

My feeling was, as he related that incident, that perhaps the police, while they perhaps should have been more courteous than they were, had a real interest in preventing an accident that might have occurred. It seems to me that here is an emphasis that we sometimes forget, that the police job is not only to apprehend criminal activity and to stop it, but also, as far as traffic is concerned, to prevent an accident which can occur.

Along this line, the matter was brought to our attention that too often people look upon the police force as simply one to catch the offender, forgetting that his job is also to prevent accidents occurring. In this instance, perhaps that's something the police were thinking about and that should have its emphasis.

In the whole field of enforcement and prevention, it was brought to the attention of the committee that in the overall picture in Ontario breathalysers were not being taken as seriously as they might be by the authority in charge, that we were, in effect, about 100-plus breathalysers short of an adequate supply for enforcement in the province of Ontario. That's number one. I wonder whether the minister has something here in his budget which is going to look after that. The $70,000 which is supplies and equipment listed here would hardly face up to that particular problem.

The second one which is far more important here is the use of the ALERT device, which, of course, is now being used in his own riding in connection with the RIDE program in Etobicoke, a device which I think promises a great deal for the future in the way of prevention of accidents. As in the case mentioned here, the person did not have the 0.08, but he might have been above the 0.05 which is the danger point where he becomes careless on the highway. The ALERT device will show the policeman whether that person is somewhere between the 0.05 and the 0.1 where convictions actually do take place.

In that case, we are hoping, as a committee, that we might have the kind of activity and the kind of legislation and the back-up of the police commission that would say to that policeman: "Use the ALERT and if that person is showing a blood alcohol content between 0.05 and 0.1, then he can be ruled off the road for 24 hours." That way, we'd prevent a great many accidents which do occur at that level, before the person is actually subject to conviction but where he's dangerous as far as driving is concerned.

I'm wondering if the minister has any plans for more extensive use of the ALERT device in Ontario. Certainly, I suppose, we're watching the Etobicoke experiment with a great deal of interest and perhaps that will have some bearing on it. The ALERT device, of course, is the first generation device along this line. I did read where the Japanese are putting out a device which is perhaps not as efficient as this but which is much more reasonable in price. Certainly a great deal of research is now taking place around the world in this field, where we will get more sophisticated equipment, where the policeman can have it in his hand and he can test the person right there and then on the highway and find out whether he's in a dangerous position or not.

It just seems to me that the important thing here, in this whole field which the member for York Centre has raised, is the question of prevention of accidents, and the whole emphasis here ought to be on giving the police forces some power of cutting down on the accidents that might occur at the level before 0.08 or 0.1 where conviction does take place.

[4:30]

In addition to that, of course, there's a whole matter of Fuzzbusters, on which the minister did express an opinion recently. This is not, perhaps, directly within this vote, but I bring it to the attention of the minister that this is a device for breaking the law with impunity. Can he say whether there are plans for abandoning that Fuzzbuster as we have recommended in our committee in the near future?

These are observations, Mr. Chairman, on which I would appreciate an answer from the minister.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I know the keen interest of the member for Yorkview in the matter of safety. I appreciate his addition of those words to what I was saying to the member for York Centre about the possibility of taking people off the road even though they were not sufficiently impaired to lay a charge against them, I support that.

The member for Yorkview attended the launching of the RIDE program in Etobicoke. He may recall that at that time I mentioned the need for safety on our highways, and indicated that if we wanted it, people would have to be less cognizant of their rights and more cognizant of their responsibilities. I think this is what we're getting into in this matter. People say: "The police had no right to arrest me because I could pass that test." I think we should recognize our responsibilities more and say, "I should not have been driving under those marginal conditions and the police were quite proper in suggesting that I get home by some other means than my own car."

I must admit, when I made that statement about being less cognizant of rights and more cognizant of responsibilities, I received some criticism for that. They thought I was trying to lessen people's rights in some way or another. I stand behind what I said. If we are to have safe highways, I don't think it's a case of exercising our rights so much as it is trying to recognize our responsibilities for driving carefully. Certainly, the member for Yorkview has stressed that point and I welcome it.

The OPP do not have breathalysers. I'm thinking of the two types. The ALERT is made for roadside testing and is not recognized in court as the official test. The official test is given by breathalysers placed strategically across the province in many municipal stations and in all but 100 of the OPP detachments. It would be nice to have breathalysers in all detachments across the province and that is our aim.

Our delay is not, however, simply in the obtaining of equipment but also in the training of these breathalyser people. You need about three people to a detachment who are qualified. To become a qualified tester you must take a course that is given in our forensic laboratory or in our forensic building. It's about a five-day course, so it means that we must bring the people down here from the various detachments across the province, give them that five-day course, which means that they're out of action, and then send them back again. So it's not just the cost of the equipment, but more particularly the training of three personnel in each of the detachments. We're proceeding as quickly as we can and updating the people, but it's something that perhaps we should be carrying out more quickly than we are doing. We'll put emphasis on it.

It's interesting to note, though, in connection with the RIDE program that we mentioned a short time ago, I understand there have been only 46 charges of impaired driving laid to date out of many thousands of people stopped and tested. Maybe most of our citizens are fairly responsible in their driving habits when it comes to drinking and driving.

On the ALERT device, the one that is used for roadside testing, I think they are now on the Mark II or revised model of it. We are waiting for that model to be cleared by Ottawa, they are the ones in charge. That's under the Criminal Code, as you know. They are also the ones who cleared the ALERT device. I think they serve a useful purpose, more psychological than actual, because if the person fails that test at the roadside he still has to be taken to the detachment or the other headquarters for the test that the courts recognize.

It increases police work in the sense that they are giving them a roadside test and then the subsequent test. On the other hand, some people whom they may suspect of being above the limit are now not taken to the station because they have taken the test at the side of the road and go on their way again. Maybe it has a detrimental effect in that way in that if they had to go into the station at least they would be off the road for that much longer.

However, it comes back to what we were talking about earlier. I believe the ALERT device is a good one and that we should have more of them. As soon as they are cleared by Ottawa I am sure more police forces, the OPP included, will be making greater use of them.

On radar detection devices, I said some time ago, and I still have cabinet approval for it, that I would be introducing an amendment to the Highway Traffic Act to outlaw this sort of device. It is one of those items that I also want to discuss with the two opposition critics. If we have sufficient support, we will be proceeding with it. If we don't have sufficient support from the opposition parties, I probably won't be introducing it. As soon as the estimates are out of the way that is one item I want clearance on from the opposition parties.

Mr. Young: Following the answer of the minister, certainly what he says is true about the present use of the ALERT device. It does mean the duplication of work, because the person who is breathing above a certain level must go then to get his breathalyser test. I think the feeling of many of us is that an amendment to the legislation would mean that the policeman has the right, at the roadside, simply to ban that person from driving for 24 hours if his breath tests too high.

That does mean legislation. It does mean some invasion of civil rights, or so many people have said in this respect; but I don't think it does. It simply means that person, if he feels that the device is not accurate, would still have the right to go and take a breathalyser test if he wanted to, if he felt that the ALERT was wrong. Also it means that I, as another person on the road who may not have been drinking and driving, have a right to travel that highway with the assurance that nobody is driving towards me who is an unsafe driver. From that point of view, the matter of civil rights has to be balanced off. I am just wondering whether the minister has any plans at all of making this kind of change in the legislation so that the ALERT machine can be more effectively used.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: We have no definite plans, but certainly it is under consideration. That's why the experiments that are presently going on or the pilot projects will be watched carefully. The report of the select committee will be taken into account, all of those recommendations, at some time. From there we will be either proceeding with it or not. But no decision has been made whether we will do what the hon. member is suggesting. It will be weighed after all the reports are in.

Mr. Warner: I will be as quick as possible. Earlier when we were on this vote, when we just got started, the minister read a letter pertaining to reports of racial violence in the media. I didn't catch the author of that letter. I am wondering if he still has the letter there in front of him.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Is that the report I was reading when I quoted the article in the Star, et cetera? That was from our own police liaison co-ordinator, W. A. Smith, an inspector with the OPP who is stationed in my ministry, who makes inquiries from the various forces, including the OPP. He does just that—liaise.

Mr. Warner: Yes, I am wondering, in the light of that kind of report which the minister has, juxtaposed against the reports we have had in the newspaper, probably some of the reports from community relations officers and certainly reports from other people, including the committee that was set up to investigate racial violence, if all of that suggests to the minister that we really have to have a citizens' complaint bureau in Metro Toronto and perhaps elsewhere to deal with this kind of situation?

On the one hand you have a report from the police officers, then you have other reports that are at odds with that. I was quite astonished when I sat and listened to it. There may be some truth in there, but I just can't accept at face value what that report says because my experience tells me otherwise—the experience of constituents coming into my office. When I go and witness the damage that has been done to their homes, to their automobiles, to their families and that there has not been any real follow-up in apprehending the people involved, then I am a little suspicious of that report you have.

I am wondering, though, if all of this says to the minister that perhaps the best way to handle this is by setting up the citizens' complaint bureau that I thought we were going to get a couple of years ago and for some reason was held back.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I don't want anything that I may have said here or in the last few days to be taken that I minimize the problem of racial violence in the province. All I have said is that by the time we have racial violence it is too late to call the attention of the police to it or to try and have the police correct a sick society. The problem is in our homes, and in our schools, and in our work places, where we as private citizens can let this kind of prejudice fester.

To ask the police, as the hon. member for Dovercourt seems to be doing, to be the solution and to be the educators against this sort of thing I think is unreasonable. That's all I am saying in this regard. I am not denying that it exists. I am not denying that everything should be done to get rid of it. But I am saying that the problem is prior to when the police come onto the scene. They are probably doing as much as anybody to rid our society of this. But it is not a problem of their making and to charge them with that kind of responsibility seems to me most unfair and not getting to the source of the problem, but trying to deal with it in some after-the-fact manner.

Yes, citizens' complaint bureaus I think will go a long way toward establishing a proper channel for dealing with citizens complaints so that they may be properly aired.

You suggested that something in this article from our own Inspector Smith was inconsistent or at odds. I didn't find it that way. I don't know if you want to give me a specific reference where you thought it was at odds. I think he was simply saying that the police are doing what they can. He was pointing out some very realistic problems that didn't have anything to do with racial matters at all, but also that there were some problems because of it.

But I really don't see anything very much at odds with what you are saying or what I was saying.

Mr. Warner: When do we get the citizens' complaint bureau?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: With the amendments to the Police Act.

Mr. Warner: And that's in this session?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I expect so.

Mr. Warner: I have two other specific questions.

Earlier in responding, you mentioned that out of 24 periods spent in training, two were related to what I would call some learning about cultural, religious or sociological background. Can you give me the amount of time those two periods represent out of the total?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I don't know whether they were 40-minute or 60-minute periods. But we will have somebody here in the next vote when we deal with the Aylmer college who can give us that specific information. But 24 periods of public relations—no I can't. I can't tell you the percentage of time that represents, but we should have that when we get to the next vote.

Mr. Warner: That's pretty alarming, obviously. We can get to that later.

I have two other specific questions and one is related to hiring practices. I have had a letter from the police commission. I was a little disturbed and I'd like some response from the minister. Apparently, when someone applies for a job as a police officer, if he or she is not successful there is no reason given. The police forces are not obligated to give a reason for not hiring the person. But further than that, apparently they also share the information among themselves, one police force to another.

The particular instance I had was that the person had approached one police force on a Friday and was turned down with no reason given. He then approached another police force on a Monday and was turned down again. The only way I think that it could have been accomplished was if one force was sharing the information with another.

I wrote to the police commission. The letter is up in my file but the essence of it was that, first, the police forces are not obligated to give a person a reason for turning them down. Secondly, they don't necessarily share information between forces but that information can be made available. Those, to me, would seem to be questionable practices. If someone is seeking a job and is turned down, surely they should know why.

Perhaps it's some reason which they can do something about. Once you get past the basic obligations of height and weight and eyesight and so on, if there is some other reason for the person being turned down for the job, they should know what it is so they can try to correct those faults.

I had two constituency cases, both in this vein, and in both cases those people really wanted to be police officers. But they just weren't given any reasons.

The last question is that the Robarts report again brings up—and this is in line with an earlier question—that the police commission should really be coming under more direct political control than they are at present. The citizens should know where to go with their complaints and they should know who it is that's running the show.

The police commissions are a pretty good place to hide behind; put the politicians out in the front line a little more. It's perhaps immaterial how you go about that in Metro Toronto, whether you want to make a board of control responsible or a particular alderman or whatever. It doesn't really matter, so long as you have some direct political control over that. When there are problems with it, as we have experienced in Metro Toronto unfortunately, and quite a few of them, and I don't think they should be minimized—the Morand report, for example, brought them out into the open pretty well—there should be a direct avenue to get at those problems and get them solved.

So I'd like to know when we're going to see that accomplished, so that those commissions are under more direct political control. Let's stop the handing out commission places, but let's have them more out in the open for the citizens to get at that.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The Metropolitan Toronto Act governs the composition of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission. The Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) probably will be the one to bring in amendments to that Act arising out of the Robarts report, and I don't know when that will happen. You might ask the Treasurer about that.

I do believe we'll get into discussions about this matter of more direct political responsibility for police commissions when we deal with the Police Act. Probably whatever policies we decide at that time will be reflected in any amendments that may be brought into the Metropolitan Toronto Act. I do not know why it would be that he would apply some place on Friday and go to another place on Monday and be turned down, other than it may be that they simply were not hiring. That of course is one possibility. I would have to look into the particular circumstances. A lot of the forces at the present time are not doing any active recruiting so maybe it did not take long to get it turned down.

Each force determines its own requirements. Some of them have been pretty adamant in setting out physical requirements. It may be that the person did not meet the physical requirements in either force. I think they generally tell them if that is the reason for the turn-down. However, the turn-down may be on the basis of an intelligence test, it might be on the basis of a psychology test. I am not sure that it is always to the advantage of a person's self-esteem to be told why they were turned down, particularly if they were turned down on the basis of an intelligence test.

Certainly when people are taken on as police officers there is some investigation into their background. They want to make sure that they themselves don't have connection with the criminal element. They want to know that they have got a good reputation. They are suggesting that we should have, and rightfully so, higher standards for police officers and so generally speaking, I support these higher standards when it comes to their mental qualifications and, more particularly, their attitudes.

And yet it is a little hard to turn somebody down on the basis of an attitude. If we have to turn somebody down on the basis that we thought that they might be rough on prisoners, or that they did not have, in our opinion, the correct psychological makeup to be policemen, it is pretty tough to justify that to a person.

In one sense you are telling us to be more strict with those whom we employ, and then in the next breath you are telling us be quite open and tell them why we are turning them down. As I say, those are matters of judgement and sometimes it is hard to substantiate those judgements with opinions which are acceptable to the applicant. In other words, if I said, "You would not make a good policeman because of your attitude," I am sure that you would be the first one to challenge that statement.

So I am not so sure that we want to open ourselves to telling them on all occasions why they have been turned down. In your particular case, if you wish to give me information on it I will be glad to follow it up.

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to direct two questions to the minister. One relates to the matter of police costs to the municipalities in the province.

In the light of the present constraints that are applying to municipal budgets through the Treasury of the province of Ontario, is the minister prepared, at this time, to provide additional assistance to municipal police forces? It is a matter now where municipalities have little control over the matter of the police budget and sometimes they may seem to be out of hand. The question is, where does the money come from? Does it go back to the local taxpayer, who has to bear the largest percentage of the cost?

While the constraints are there—I think it is eight per cent that is applied to municipalities—perhaps when the AIB guidelines are lifted next year, when contracts are being renewed and so forth, when these matters could be getting out of hand again as it relates to the police costs, is the minister prepared to provide additional assistance to municipalities for the per-capita rate costs for policing?

The other matter is related to the compulsory retirement age for policemen and firemen. Has the minister actually brought in any guidelines relating to the matter of retirement ages? Is it going to 60 or 65? There is some question about a decision brought down by the Ontario Human Rights Commission relating to the matter of early retirement at the age of 60. Are you prepared to bring in legislation that defines that particular area of retirement?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I do not foresee any immediate increase to municipalities for police grants. I do have some figures that may be of interest to the hon. member for Erie. In each year, there shall be paid to each regional municipality, a payment or payments in accordance with the population of the area municipalities within the regional municipality as follows: $15 per capita where regional municipality is deemed to be a city for the purpose of the Police Act; $10 per capita based on the population of each area municipality providing its own law enforcement by retaining its own police force, or being under contract for the policing of the municipality by the Ontario Provincial Police force in accordance with the Police Act.

So roughly speaking it's $15 for a regional municipality per capita and $10 for the other. However, more pertinent to the question you asked, indicated below is the increase in per capita grants from 1972. The regional payment in 1972 was $3.25 and that has gradually increased to $15 in 1977. The area payment, where the police force is non-regional, was $1.75 per capita in 1972 and has increased to $10.

I do not have concise figures as to increased costs for the police forces to municipalities. I do have a breakdown of what the various municipalities have paid. But I do not believe that their costs have increased at a greater rate than our grants to them.

I think our grants have increased more than their costs.

Do we have that information? It's just for last year is it? I'll send this across to the hon. member and he can take a look at it.

But with our budget restraints, I cannot see that we'll be increasing those grants in the near future.

Mr. Haggerty: The reason I asked the question of the minister is because the OPP are withdrawing their services from the village of Crystal Beach. I think it had a complement of 17 OPP officers. I don't know whether the population for Niagara region includes summer residents or not. I know that the town of Fort Erie experiences an increase in population from about 23,000 to an estimated 40,000 in the summer months. Is there any special consideration given to that municipality to borrow some of the cost of these additional summer residents moving into the community?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Not that I know of. As a regional municipality, they're getting $5 per capita more than the others and the region will be bearing the cost of policing that area. That's where Fort Erie and Crystal Beach have the advantage; the region will bear the additional cost for summer residents.

At the same time however, we've got to consider the advantages of the tourist industry. As you know, areas like Niagara Falls, Niagara-on-the-Lake and Fort Erie, as well as Crystal Beach, get a great deal of their revenue from the summer influx of tourists. The extra they spend on policing probably is not out of line with the dollars that these people bring with them.

Mr. Haggerty: The minister did not reply to my second question related to the matter of early retirement.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I don't recall it as being a major issue with the police. It has certainly been a major issue with the fire services across the province. Most of the fire services have union contracts with their various associations calling for retirement at 60 years of age. We have come to a difference of opinion with the Human Rights Commission which believes that it's an infraction of a person's individual rights—that we should not be able to force someone to retire at 60. The ministry feels that is a reasonable term in the contract and supports the retirement under contract, or by agreement, between the fire association and their respective municipalities. We support the 60-year forced retirement.

[5:00]

The Human Rights Commission has said otherwise. The last judgement of Mr. Justice

Hughes supported the firemen and their contract position regarding forced retirement at 60. That case was going to be appealed and I think notice was served by the Human Rights people. Informally, I have expressed to members of that commission my ministry's position. However, they are appealing the judgement and we will have to have the outcome of that appeal before we decide what legislation we may introduce.

The judicial process should be exhausted with regard to the clause before we change the law.

Mr. Bradley: Along the line of the member for Erie; look at your figures of $15 per capita in regions, and $10 per capita in area municipalities outside of regions. Do they not indicate to you, that the costs of having regional police forces across the province—I'm speaking specifically of Niagara now because I represent a constituency within the Niagara region—are far greater than previously—both to the region and to those municipalities outside of the region? Does it not seem reasonable that instead of establishing large regional police forces in a place like Niagara, the provincial police continue their operations within the region and allow the urban municipalities the use of a regional police force?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I don't want to say a blank "no" to that. We're still pretty early in our assessment of how the regional forces are going. Certainly the cost of regional forces in Metropolitan Toronto is much greater than costs were under the old setup of 13 municipal forces. But I wouldn't want to see us dealing with the sophisticated crime problems we have in Metropolitan Toronto, organized crime in particular, with 13 different forces.

Regional forces generally bring with them more sophisticated equipment. It means perhaps, more radios, and we have special grants for radio communications. It probably means more automobiles and that type of thing.

Mr. Bradley: That's for sure.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The costs do go up—

Mr. Blundy: An indictment of regional government.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: —but we expect the calibre of policing and success in dealing with crime will also increase. Some of the regional takeovers are fairly recent. This takeover is being completed in Niagara now. We are in the final stages in Durham and Peel. The Kitchener-Waterloo takeover occurred some time ago and it seems to be working out pretty well.

The per capita cost, as I have it here, in the Niagara region is $37.63, although they vary by region. That's actually one of the lower ones. Durham region is $37.09.

Mr. Haggerty: Look at the assessment.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Haldimand-Norfolk is $58.82, which may be of some interest to you. Hamilton-Wentworth is $45.09. So your costs are considerably less than Hamilton-Wentworth's.

Mr. Blundy: Yes, but compare those with one single municipality.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: York region is $38.11. I don't know how your Niagara region assessment compares with these, but your police costs are not out of line. But I agree that you can't look just at costs without looking at assessment as well.

London city is $37.80. You're about comparable to the city of London. I don't know how your assessment compares with London.

Mr. Haggerty: The assessment is about $150 million more than what the city of London is. The population is about 100,000 more.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: No, it doesn't affect the per capita cost; there's a greater assessment to spread it over, so that if your per capita cost, where the assessment is large—

Mr. Haggerty: It should be less.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Yes. However, your per capita costs in the Niagara region are not that out of line. They're among some of the lower ones. When we look at the city of London, of course, it's not a regional municipality and I believe that it only receives the $10.

Mr. Bradley: Following along in a similar vein and looking at the potential costs—you looked at costs and you pointed out that the takeover by the regional police is very recent and has been, to a certain extent, gradual. What people in my area would be concerned about is the administrative costs that will come out of this—the number of promotions that we'll have because we have more members of the regional police force, for instance and the extra administration that will result from the region taking over from the OPP. This is a kind of concern as well, and I'm sure that you're aware of it.

It's a compliment to the Ontario Provincial Police that residents in the rural areas are very, very satisfied with the calibre of policing in those areas by the OPP and, indeed, we're very reluctant to see them go. I express that concern for the future in the takeover and the ultimate buildup of administration which I think is going to result along with promotions and things of that nature. So, certainly, it will be worth while and, no doubt, your ministry will be keeping an eye on this to see what the costs are.

I could also mention a third situation which would cause some concern in my municipality. That would be the fact that there was a possibility that some of the police who would normally be servicing the urban areas such as the city of St. Catharines which is the largest urban area in the region, we would be concerned that some of the police might have to be ordered into rural areas in order that they might cover a larger area. Therefore, the level of policing in the city of St. Catharines might decline. I realize that in absolute numbers it probably won't, but otherwise, we might be able to have more police at our disposal where the crime rate might be anticipated to be greater.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I recognize those possibilities and we'll be keeping our eye on them.

Mr. Swart: I would just like to pursue the figures which have been presented by the Solicitor General a little further, and point out the situation in the Niagara region is not comparable what it is in Toronto in many respects.

First of all, it's not a continuous urban area and, secondly, because they are much smaller communities and because it is sort of a pure area, I think the member for St. Catharines would agree, we don't have the same degree of crime.

However, I would like to ask the minister if those figures which he produced, the per capita costs, are the figures which were projected for the 1977 fiscal year of the Niagara region, whether they were the 1976 figures, or whether in fact they are the projections of the full policing of the region by the regional police. That has only recently taken place as you've stated. If you're using either 1976 or 1977 figures, it's not an accurate comparison with any other place.

I might just add that there is a rather strong feeling in the Niagara region, a feeling which I share, that the policing is not as good under a regional force covering the whole peninsula as it was, generally, when they had the local police forces. Also, there is certainly a very justified strong feeling that there is not the sort of local accountability to the population in a municipality. The police force has become very distant from the people at the present time and I don't think that this enhances the operation of the police.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: To answer the member for Welland-Thorold, the figures we gave were for 1976. They are the last year for which we have complete figures, but of course 1976 was the year for the comparison figures for the other municipalities.

Mr. Swart: Most of the municipalities you quoted were totally policed, whereas vast areas of the Niagara region were still then policed by the provincial police. They have had to take on a great number of additional police now that the OPP have gone out and therefore the costs will be a great deal higher so that comparison was not accurate.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I recognize that. I think I did give Durham figures as well and Durham is going through the same process as the Niagara region is going through. However, I recognize they possibly don't give an accurate picture in view of the changes that have taken place.

When you bring in regional policing, I suppose some areas get a little less than they had before, but other areas will get considerably more than they had before. It's one of the problems you, of course, get with regionalization—that you try to equalize your services. If we apply that theory across the board the response time for the city of St. Catharines may not be as speedy as it was before regional police, but I would suggest in a good number of areas in the outlying parts of the Niagara region the response time is much faster. Probably the people in St. Catharines would suggest the policing there is not as good as it was. But if you go to the others they might say, "Yes, it is much improved." I think if you give this time to work out you will find regional policing for your municipality is an improvement, but we are keeping a close eye on this matter.

I don't see any other areas at the present time where we are likely to introduce regional policing for some time.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I have a couple of questions. I believe the $58.82 per capita for Haldimand-Norfolk is one of the highest per capita costs for regional police. Is there any relationship between assessment and the cost of policing or is there any consideration given in providing the grants?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I do have some figures here that tie it into $1,000 of assessment. Haldimand-Norfolk is $2.29 for $1,000 of assessment; the Niagara region is $4.28 for $1,000 of assessment. Haldimand-Norfolk's cost per capita, however, are $58.82 and the Niagara region $37.63, I have, as I say, many interesting figures here.

The Durham region, which is going through the same changes, its cost is $3.62 for $1,000 of assessment, so it's in between Haldimand-Norfolk and Niagara. But its per capita cost is $37.09, approximately the same as the Niagara region, so they don't appear to be out of line. But these, as I say, are 1976 figures. We will have to wait until the end of the current fiscal year to get some really significant figures as far as the cost of the complete regional policing in Niagara and Durham is concerned.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Is there any thought of cutting back on the assistance from the provincial police? What are the future plans in that regard? Are they going still to maintain the same forces as far as the provincial police are concerned?

[5:15]

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Oh, no, where the regional police have taken over all we will be doing is maintaining the king's highways in those locations. In other words, we are doing the patrolling of the highways in the regions, as we do in Metropolitan Toronto when we look at Highways 401 and 427, that type of highway, but the regions will be doing all the other policing on their own. Of course, our advisory services under the OPC are available to them. Our grants, which we talked about, are available to them. And in case of emergency the OPP or even other forces are always ready to lend assistance. But their first call for assistance, of course, would be to the OPP.

Mr. G. I. Miller: In your opinion has the co-operation then between the two forces been working quite well? I have had a few complaints about the co-operation between the region and about one covering for the other. Has this ever been brought to your attention?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I can't think of any specific incident that has been brought to my attention, but if you have them, let us have them, and we will follow through.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comment on item 1?

Item 1 agreed to.

On item 2, Ontario Police College:

Mr. Lupusella: I think I just finished commenting about the Ontario Police College in my previous statement, but I was dealing with the wrong item.

The Solicitor General has been making comments about the kind of courses which the police officers are receiving at the Ontario

Police College. As we know, the new police college was officially opened on May 6, 1977, in the presence of the Premier, the Solicitor General and government officials. At that time, I don't think I was around. However, it seems that there was a particular concern in the Legislature with reference to police colleges that they were too isolated from the community. I hope the Solicitor General, if other colleges are going to be built, will take into great consideration the isolation in which those colleges exist, far away from the cities and from people.

I think the main problems and the main complaints in relation to attitude and the kinds of roles which the police force is supposed to implement in the province of Ontario, start here at the Ontario Police College.

As I said in my opening statement, the police force in the province of Ontario is poorly trained. I am going to emphasize this particular loophole which presently exists, and I hope the Solicitor General will find ways to close those loopholes. What I would like to see from the Solicitor General is that his ministry provide some kind of leadership so that the kinds of courses, the nature of the courses, and the way the courses are implemented will be dictated by the Solicitor General, with representatives of other groups, in order that the right courses will be selected and the best training technique will be received by the classes.

Let me tell you just for a moment what's happening at the Aylmer college. The probationary constable's course has been extended recently to 15 weeks, with the course divided in two parts. First of all, the length of the course—15 weeks—is something the Solicitor General is supposed to take into great consideration. I don't agree about 15 weeks. I hope the Solicitor General is going to provide us with a breakdown of how those constables use their time.

On reading the annual report, it seems that 25 per cent of their time is spent on physical fitness. I'm not disputing the fact that the constables should be involved in this kind of activity. I want to criticize the prolonged period of time in which they involve themselves in physical activities. If they are going to spend so much time, 25 per cent of their time, on physical activities, I don't know what kind of training they are going to receive from the college. I am going to go through the content of the courses in the course of my presentation...

First of all, I think that the content of the courses should also be criticized in terms of the kind of principles in relation to education and in relation to human behaviour. As I mentioned in my opening statement, psychology or sociology should be part of those courses. If the Solicitor General will take into consideration my recommendations on the 15 weeks, I don't think spending 25 per cent of their time on physical fitness is going to be really effective.

The other point which I want to raise is that if the constables are going to spend 25 per cent of their time on physical activities, I'm just wondering, when they go back into the police force if they still have the same time to spend on practical physical activity. Therefore, I don't think we should emphasize it too much in those 15 weeks; 25 per cent spent just for that particular activity.

I'm not suggesting that we should completely eliminate this time spent on physical activity. I think we should prolong the period of time which they spend at the Ontario Police College. It seems that a few years ago the period was raised to 15 weeks from 12, and I hope the Solicitor General can correct me if I'm not using the right figures. I think we need more time and I think we need more selection and different kinds of courses, in relation to the content, in order that the police officers will get the most effective use of time spent at the Ontario Police College.

As I stated before, part A, of 10 weeks' duration, has no final examinations but all students try periodic tests and the results are averaged for a final mark. Part B, of five weeks' duration, includes examinations on all subject matter for the complete course.

Talking about the content, the courses in relation to recruit classes consist of criminal law, traffic law, statutes, courts, human relations, search, drugs, first aid, evidence, police procedure, firearms and physical fitness. I hope the Solicitor General, when he replies to my comments, is going to give me the background in terms of philosophy or principles involved in those particular items. I would like to hear from the minister what is the essence of human relations that they are teaching to the police officers.

I would imagine—and I'm just interpreting; I never went through the course and I don't know really what is going on, but I hope that in the human relations course they would emphasize those subjects which I mentioned in my opening statement in relation to psychology and sociology.

The Solicitor General has been reacting—and I think over reacting—to the point where he doesn't see the role of the police officer as an educator in our society. He should not be a doctor; I don't think anyone has been pretending that an officer should become a doctor as well.

There are contradictions which presently exist in our system. Certain contradictions in the role of the police officer are going to have to be eliminated, as far as I see it with the present scheme. As far as I see it, the role of the police now is just to implement the law. There is nothing which teaches them the human behaviour of the structure of our society in the province of Ontario. That is why I have been raising complaints. For example, when someone is taken to the police cells for drug abuse more consideration should be given to this particular factor because maybe the person is psychologically sick. I think that some kind of understanding in relation to human behaviour should be taken into consideration by the police force.

Physical education is really stressed at the college. I don't want to emphasize again that approximately 25 per cent of the full course has been allotted to foot drill and deportment through arms training, physical fitness, self-defence, swimming, water safety and participation in sports. I have never heard the minister making particular statements about the philosophy of the ministry which involves those particular items, like the use of firearms. Maybe at the college they teach the constables how to shoot. But as to the technicality of when they are supposed to use firearms, I have never understood what the minister's position is all about.

For the year 1977-78, as that's the program we are dealing with, Mr. Chairman, let me tell you what the training and educational committee prepared at the centre for distribution to the period instructors: Evidence; miscellaneous provincial statutes; the Highway Traffic Act; arrest; break and enter investigation; court preparation and conduct; and domestic complaints. I hope the Solicitor General is going to make certain comments in relation to domestic complaints. In other words, in considering the content of those courses, what the college is teaching to the constables is just the bureaucratic implementation of the law, how to present evidence, how to interpret the provincial statutes, the Highway Traffic Act and all of this stuff. I have to get to this point. If the public has a complete and different image about the police force in the province of Ontario, that they are tax collectors and that they penalize people just when they violate the law, I don't think that they are completely wrong.

The Solicitor General is completely rejecting the idea of educating the public. Educating the public doesn't mean that they should not lay charges. I mean they should do that—it's part of their role. But the kind of approach and the way of implementing the law is something which is bothering people and a lot of complaints have been raised in relation to that.

[5:30]

The full schedule of the courses at the training and development centre will include an orientation course, a techniques of instruction course and in-service training instructors' course as well.

I want to comment on the content. The courses are too short and I hope the Solicitor General is going to do something about it. I don't think that a 15-week period is a reasonable time in which to train the constables, considering that 25 per cent of their time is spent on physical fitness.

I would like to hear the minister talking about policy directions on each program. That's something in which I'm sure a lot of members of this House will be interested.

I want to have an answer about psychology and sociology—I think these are two important items which should be taken into consideration. I'm sure a lot of problems arise in relation to the lack of understanding in the police force when they approach the public.

I think the Solicitor General is supposed to provide such leadership in those programs. I think the Solicitor General should have an impact in relation to policies. I don't know what the position of the government is—if it's leaving those policies in the hands of the Ontario Police College or if the minister has some particular impact in order that those loopholes that are raised from time to time by members of the Legislature and by the public may in the long run be eliminated.

Another thing that is bothering me, Mr. Chairman, is the reason why police leave the force. That is something to which the Solicitor General should address himself.

Statistics from December 31, 1976, show the number of officers leaving the force to be 745. Of this number 99 retired and 24 were dismissed—I would like to know the reason for the dismissals and what the complaints against those policemen were. There were 115 resignations requested. Why were their resignations requested? Seventy-one joined another force; that is a normal routine. Forty-two were dissatisfied—I would like to have an explanation of that—and 369 had other reasons—that's an item to which I would like the minister to address himself; really give us a reasonable explanation of why 369 officers leave the force for "other reasons." I don't want to make any comment in relation to the deceased police officers.

The reason why I am raising this particular problem is because of the cost of training. I think the Solicitor General should get involved in that particular factor—why so many officers are leaving the force. Police force costs are becoming astronomical. The total cost annually is around $500 million, and I think the Solicitor General should find out reasons and causes and how those problems can be eliminated as well.

The Solicitor General has been raising the issue that the morale of the police officer is primarily good. That's a simplistic answer to say that the police officers are fine while there is a high number of officers leaving the force.

Constable training is very well emphasized on the background information which the Solicitor General sent to us: "The cost of training per student-week rose to $156.72, based on the number of student-weeks for 1976 and an estimated $2,885,000 expenditure for the fiscal year 1976-77. This increase is partially due to increased costs associated with the new buildings, inflation and a build-up of a second staff in the fall of 1976 to prepare for implementation of the new probationary constable training program which was introduced January 4, 1977.

"However"—and I'm quoting from the background information—"it was also increased by about $27 per student-week due to a drop of about 4,000 student-weeks from the work load of 1975." I would like to have an explanation of those figures, especially in relation to the drop of about 4,000 student-weeks from the work load of 1975.

The cost is rising, it is becoming astronomical, and I think that the Solicitor General should consider the whole issue of why so many constables and so many officers are leaving the force. That's why I'm going to address myself to the phenomenon which might take place, that some officers are going to be laid off. I think the Solicitor General should be particularly concerned about those officers because in the long run we might need those officers again and we have to spend more money to retrain them—money which can be saved.

I raised this particular problem in my opening statement. It's a situation which the Solicitor General should face and I hope that he's going to convince the cabinet that inaction on this is going to be detrimental in relation to the amount of money which is required again in the long run to retrain those officers. That's a simple principle which the Solicitor General should take into great consideration.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The member for Dovercourt dealt with a number of items, some which are in this vote and some of which were in the previous vote. I will try to make some comments in regard to them.

I think his first question was directed to the isolation of Aylmer. That can have some good things attached to it and it can have some bad things attached to it. Generally, when these students come to us we want them to have their mind on their work. We don't want them to be running around to the nearest town for relaxation of one sort or another. I would suggest that the fact that Aylmer is not close to a large city probably helps the students in their attitude. It allows them to concentrate on the program that's there. It keeps them living as a unit in that they spend most of their evening time with one another.

Apart from the fact that some of the students might like to be closer to the bright lights, in the interests of the policing of this province and in carrying out the concerns that you express—namely, education—Aylmer is in a pretty good location for that. When you make any decision, you can always cite the reasons why the decision should have been otherwise. The decision was made years ago to place Aylmer there. It was an old air-force base. That's why it was originally selected. Accommodation was available.

I think we've had good reason for carrying on the college at that location. It is not that expensive to reach. It is fairly central as far as the large municipalities of this province are concerned and it has the advantage of having the students concentrate on their work rather than on activities away from the college.

I would like to see these courses much longer than they are. I would like to see policemen able to get all of the extensive courses that my friend from Dovercourt is suggesting they should have. It's fine for opposition members to want all of the good things of life, and that is what they're there for, to urge that we should have them, but then in the next breath they criticize us for the cost of policing.

Some of the costs for sending these people to college are borne by the municipalities that send them there. They have to pay their salaries when they're away. Most municipalities do not want to forego the services of these policemen for long periods of time. You can say: "Why don't we pick up the cost?" The province can't pick up the cost of all of these things without raising our taxes some place or having the deficit budgeting which we have been hearing from the other side of the House. It's a case of trying to get the most value you can get for the money that's spent. And that's exactly what we're doing. We try to pack as much into these courses as possible.

I gather from my friend's remark he would like to see us deal a little more in such subjects as psychology and human relations. We do spend, as I say, some time on just those matters. I understand the two subjects are scattered throughout the 15 weeks of training period. Overall about three hours are spent specifically on racial discrimination and minority groups. You can say three hours is not sufficient. That is three hours on those two subjects specifically, but all the way through the course stress is laid on the personal aspects of policing, the fact that they're dealing with people, the fact that they're dealing with people of a variety of races and racial backgrounds and that they must use a psychological approach to very many of them. That stress is carried throughout the course but specifically for three hours on those subjects.

The course was proposed by a study group and supervised by a committee of the advisory committee. Human relations are dealt with—human behaviour, prejudice, minority groups and interpersonal relations. It's stressed by all of the instructors throughout the entire course. I don't know what more we can do.

You're suggesting that we should spend less time on physical fitness. Physical fitness includes the matter of drill, small arms training, swimming and water safety, as you read from the prospectus of the course, the college calendar. Policing is a very physical job. I don't know how we can change it. It would be nice to think that you could deal with people purely on a mental basis, but a great deal of policing is physical.

You probably saw the combination of psychology and physical policing working on Saturday night at that hostage situation. Certainly, the physical powers were there to back up policing—and I don't think any of the citizens of this city would want us to be without that kind of muscle—yet at the same time the fact that people were released from that very trying situation without loss of life and with very little injury was probably because of the great deal of psychology that many members of our police force have, including Chief Harold Adamson of the Metropolitan Toronto police and many of his officers.

So when you say psychology, if you have ever seen psychology at work, I think you have seen it in the two Toronto situations, one last spring and the one last Saturday night. We do place emphasis on it and to us it is very important, but I am not, at the same time, for reducing the amount of physical training that our policemen have.

Mr. Lupusella: I am saying extend the period of time.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: All right. I don't know exactly what you are saying to me. At one point you are saying that I am not in favour of police education in this field. I don't know how you got that idea. I am very much in favour of the police doing some education, but I am saying that the real onus for education of the public is much earlier than that, and I don't like you suggesting that I am not in favour of the police carrying out educational programs in human relations. I certainly didn't say that at all, and if you would listen to what is said instead of paying so much attention to your notes there, you might get the message that I am trying to give to you.

Mr. Lupusella: Can the minister explain how the policeman is carrying out this particular duty of educating the public, because I didn't understand the message then? Would you please explain in more practical terms what the police officers are doing in our society to educate the public?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I would suggest that my good friend speak to the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) or to the member for High Park (Mr. Ziemba), and he will know some of the actions that the police, of this city at least, took in regard to trying to deal on a day-by-day basis with these racial problems. They know and they have been co-operating with the police rather than being critical of the police.

There are many police officers across this province who deal in public relations, who attend various public bodies, the meetings of service clubs, et cetera, and give lectures on just this thing. What I have been taking exception to is you blaming the police for some of the bad racial—

Mr. Lupusella: No, I am blaming you for policy directions. The responsibility is on your ministry. I am not accusing the police.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: All right, you think they should be spending more time on training and they should be the ones who are doing all of this training. Probably the police of this province have more active training in human relations and racial discrimination than any other group, and I am saying to you it's too late when the police have to get into the act. This should be done much earlier instead of expecting the police to handle all of this. The police are doing it and I am in favour of them doing it, but there's a limit to how much education the police can do.

They have thousands of other duties besides spreading good will amongst the various races of this province, so let them do it, and I hope they will continue, but there's a limit to how much emphasis they can place on it. You were reading some of the responsibilities that police have in the calendar. It goes on to many other things, such as enforcing the liquor Acts of this province and, of course, the Criminal Code—and most people in this province still look on the police as the enforcers of the Criminal Code.

Let them stop one of you for a breach of the Highway Traffic Act, which takes a considerable amount of their time too, and the first question you ask him is why he's not going around spreading good will amongst the races. You will ask him why he's not out catching robbers. In the eyes of the public the policeman's main job is still to maintain law and order, and I think they are doing a pretty good job on that.

You have asked why there is the drop in the work load at Aylmer. Again, it gets to the matter of cost. I understand that some of the municipal forces, and probably Metro Toronto in particular because of the entrance of the two-man car system in that year, were not free to send as many people down to Aylmer as they had originally hoped and planned to do. Again it is a matter of costs, it is a matter of whether the policemen are required more back home or in the college.

We hope gradually to extend operations at the college within the economic means that we have at our disposal.

Mr. Lupusella: First of all, in relation to the 25 per cent of physical activities which are taking place at the college, with the present scheme of 15 weeks, it is my belief that 25 per cent is too much of their time. If you want to keep a plan for physical fitness, let's extend the number of weeks in order that you can incorporate other subjects, plus the physical activities which the constables are getting at the college.

In reply to the point that I am criticizing the police officers, I am criticizing the minister for lack of policies and directions, I am not criticizing the police officers. Police officers are taking directions from their peers. It is a duty and responsibility of the minister to redirect those policies in order that problems in our society will be eliminated.

Mr. Chairman: Does the minister have any further remarks?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, there is one item the member for Dovercourt raised that I did not deal with.

He was looking at some figures for municipal police forces—that the authorized strength for municipal forces was 12,285 as of December, 1976; that some 1,225 were hired during that year; and that 745 left the force. The breakdown that I have is retired, 99—I assume that doesn't require any explanation—dismissed, 24; and resignation requested, 115. Maybe you feel that requires some explanation, but here again we come to this conflict where all of us in this House want our police to be of a high calibre and high standards. Occasionally we do find police who don't meet those standards, and I am sure you would be the first ones to want us to let those people go. Those are the people we find to be unsuitable for a variety of reasons for police service. I am suggesting that you are looking at those two figures with a jaundiced eye, that is 24 dismissals and 115 resignations requested.

It may be that those figures should be higher. Maybe you would want them higher to obtain the kind of people and the kind of standards that we think we should have.

Now, "joined another force"—that doesn't need any explanation either, I don't think.

Dissatisfied, 42. When you look at the industrial change of personnel, people taking on a job and leaving it, that figure is not very great. We must put in with that "other reasons," 369. So you have some 411 people—against a figure of 1,225—who are dissatisfied or move for other reasons—who leave of their own accord in this day of job mobility. I don't think that is all that great. I think you will find it is much lower than in industry.

The overall attrition rate in municipal forces is six per cent, much below normal industry. In the OPP, the attrition rate is lower than that, some three per cent.

If you want good policing in this province, I think you have to expect to have those who decide for themselves that they are dissatisfied or whom the forces decide are unsuitable for it. So I'm not alarmed that the 369 left of their own accord or for other reasons. It doesn't mean that all the 369 were dissatisfied. Some of them may have left for health reasons or—

Mr. B. Newman: Better jobs.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: —more money. They may have gone into some other sort of security work. Those figures are not alarming to me at all. I might suggest that the figures of those dismissed or of resignations requested—in view of the calibre of the people we want—maybe that's too low.

To complete the figures—deceased, 25; and that meets us all, eventually.

Mr. Lawlor: Dealing with police forces is a very ticklish business. All members on all sides of the House are loath to tackle the issue straightforwardly as we do, for instance, on economic matters or the way the educational system is handled or in practically any other ministry.

We all, for curious reasons, approach this particular problem with kid gloves. What was mentioned earlier by the member for Sarnia is particularly true with municipal commissions—and I'll get around to the police college in a minute.

Mr. Nixon: I thought that commission one was carried.

Mr. Lawlor: Municipal commissions: that's pretty well a blue stamp job. No one interrogates, no one pries, no one goes into it. They listen to the somewhat blatant type of statement made by the minister about what jolly good fellows the policemen are, et cetera. There is and there has to be, up to a point, a reverence, if you will, or at least a deep respect for the police force. In the very type of work they do, some areas of secrecy involved, militate in the favour of their not being pried into. They simply can't be pried into.

At the same time, in these estimates down through the years—certainly on the municipal level where 25 per cent of municipal taxpayers money is spent on the police force—there is never, nor do we feel free to make, the swaddling type of analyses of these budgets. If municipal councillors call it into question, there is almost an immediate and equal reaction coming from the chiefs of police.

It's an invidious business where they say, "All right, if you're going to cut back on it, we'll cut out those services which are the newest, freshest, most vulnerable, most exposed to the community, most community conscious, et cetera." The youth corps comes under the axe, you see; not other internal operations.

There's a kind of threat involved, and I think that's bad. I think that's bad public relations. I think there's not enough give and take between the politicians and the force, that that particular kind of bedizenment should be brought into being and that sort of threat brought out, which immediately causes the politician to run for cover.

In an open society where we are clinging to basic democratic concepts, et cetera, we cannot allow—and it is impermissible for any agency within that society—to enjoy prerogatives and special functions and degrees of secrecy and a hesitant attitude, even a cowardly attitude, on the part of its official representatives. That's what we're here for, that's what people elect us to do—to be forthright enough to move in on these particular issues.

We don't. It's regrettable and it's not being done. When Robarts, therefore, mentions that the police commissions ought to be more directly involved; it's that sort of thing that he is after in other words, I think he is more delicately aware of participation in our society than the minister is. The minister holds back on these things. He's got a sort of stick in the mud, status quo approach to reality. He thinks that human nature is somehow fundamentally depraved, that any move for change is almost invariably a move for the worse—

Hon. B. Stephenson: Depraved or deprived?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Just judging by my own, Pat.

Mr. Lawlor: —that this won't rock any boats. As far as humanly possible, he leaves everything as close to remaining as it is. It is a case of "Beware of the wolf just outside our door,"—a typical, archetypal, conservative mentality. What can you do with it?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Not much.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1977

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

On vote 1603, supervision of police forces program; item 2, Ontario Police College:

Mr. Chairman: I believe before the dinner hour the member for Lakeshore had the floor.

Mr. Lawlor: Before the dinner hour, I was making some remarks which were meant to be, and I am sure the Solicitor General (Mr. MacBeth) took them to be, completely impersonal remarks. They had nothing to do with him personally. They had to do with the state of mind. True, he is shrouded in that dementia to some extent, but that's neither here nor there. We remain above mere personalities, if I can put it that way, in this House. States of mind are terribly important, even in this House, mindless as it mostly is. It is the state of mind which I was concerned with. I'll just say one further word on that and then get onto the proper vote.

It's to say to the opposite side we're not perfect, as though the opposite side didn't know that.

Mr. Young: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Lawlor: Secondly, as though the opposite side were, as on this All Hallows Eve, seeking for goblins, witches and various forms of mythical creatures, such as perfection—we're not asking you to shell out—

Mr. Worton: This is Hallowe'en, my friend.

Mr. Lawlor:—nor are we such cretins that we think perfection to be possible. We are all, to some degree, Manichees in legislatures; knowing the frailty, if you will, and even the wickedness in human beings. But what we do think is feasible, and which we beg for on occasion, is a little inching up the slippery slope of a greater possibility than has yet dawned upon the government and the ministerial function that's presently under scrutiny.

We don't want perfection; just a little. We just want improvement; some slight, if possible, improvement. They seem, over there, if you listened to it, to have subverted that particular stage of the argument as a crying for the moon or something like that. It is a rhetorical trick which you use—and I mean this impersonally—constantly throughout these estimates, which I find somewhat irritating.

On item 2 of the vote, the college, my only submission to you in this set of estimates, in this way, is something you said earlier today that has to do with the public perception of the role and function of the police. Because of any number of television shows, I suppose, it is in the North American consciousness that the police are out rounding up robbers and that most of their lives and time are dedicated to a fastidious reading of the Criminal Code. This is the chief overview. That isn't true at all; it's a complete myth.

Earlier in these estimates, a few days ago, I mooted the situation of perhaps considering doing a study—I'd like to see one—as to what allocations of time over the whole police apparatus are dedicated to various forms of activity. I would put it to you that the average policeman, in his life, doesn't encounter in a direct and personal way that many rapes, that many robberies and certainly not that many murders. When he does, he immediately calls upon the specialists; the morality squad, the fraud squad and the homicide bureau to move in. They take over. These men are specially trained and skilled.

That's where the training of the police lies, in a diverse professional way directing their attention to these things. It is being done, but to pretend that the average policeman is overwhelming or primarily or even secondarily concerned with that is to distort the whole possibility. Far more of his time is spent with respect to traffic offences and with respect to guidance of traffic. I would suspect—and I'd love to see the figures—about 75 per cent of police time is spent in doing community work in the very broad sense of that, aiding people in trouble in one way or another and not in laying charges and not in leading or hauling people off to jail. This is somewhat commensurate to what is the de facto or actual job, from day to day, for the rest of his life, as long as he is out there working. It is likely to be in that kind of proportion or somewhere like that.

It cannot be completely that; they do have to study the Criminal Code to some degree and to some extent, and that is a concentrated and demanding study.

But there is the far wider implication—and when my friend speaks of educating them, I am sure that is partially at least what he has in mind—of the attitudes, the deportment, the ways of behaviour, imported partially from contemporary psychology but from basic human decency generally, which doesn't particularly have to be hammered away at. But the sociological should be given the knowledge of the currents running in a vastly changing society, a society which is changing its modes of styles of life and its deportments probably now about every five to seven years.

Our youths' mentality, their attitudes and ways of acting, are altering. They alter constantly, not just because of the growing-up process, but as an overall cultural thing. We must have sensitivity to that, awareness of that, and the feeding of it into the police, because they are the ones responsible in terms of the maintenance of degrees of order in a society. They must have a sense of the currents and how to forfend against them or direct them or give them purpose and meaning within a context.

Our jails are loaded to the doors; we all know that. Our courts are coming to an appalling state of snarl; we all know that. We will come later in these estimates to the police role in helping to bring that about. They have made their contribution. I will spend a moment on it.

All these areas live in some kind of isolation from each other. You are the overall minister, over all the Justice portfolios. There is this self-imposed isolation. The judges say it is not their job, they don't give a hang as to whether the jails are full; that is for the Ministry of Correctional Services to look after. The police over here say, as far as they are concerned they will lay all the charges in the world, it is for the courts to look after, it is not their problem; they are doing their job.

But somehow, some kind of coherence is going to have to be established among all these branches to work together in the greatest degree of harmony and with the least detriment to the general citizenry. Putting people in jail doesn't often very much help them or the taxpayer whose interest is affected.

You talk about restraint and wring your hands over there in this particular area. Do you coalesce? Do you bring the various segments together into some kind of mutual interrelationship and working arrangement? On the whole, standing over here, no you do not. I don't see you are doing it at all. Therefore, on the police training thing, I do not think there is a proper balancing out as to intercommunity relationships nor a heightened sense of the role of the police as community officers.

[8:15]

When we talk about mitigating the role of the military aspects and those things, we mean recognition of these men who—because of their usual brightness, their physical aliveness, and because some of them are the best elements in our population and open their minds and open their lives to a particular kind of hazardous job—take the full brunt. People who are prepared to do that are, to some degree, quite extraordinary human beings. And we must give them credit for that too. This particular kind of individual is, perhaps, more willing to attune himself than most caught up on routine jobs—those who do mechanical chores, et cetera, and whose sensibilities are dulled and deadened to some degree, by that kind of occupation.

That's not the role of the police. The policeman can be, and most of them are, very sensitive, alive human beings. My feeling is that you don't develop the kind of sensitivity I'm speaking of. You don't give sufficient encouragement to it, nor is your police college set up to handle the best thinking in this particular field. What makes people tick? What is the fundamental thing? Why do certain groups in our community, namely criminals, make an exception of themselves vis-à-vis the law? Why do people do that?

Take a look at that young guy last Saturday night. Did you ever see a more bizarre case of mixed paranoia and schizophrenia? Here is a human being living in an impersonal society who feels that he isn't given enough attention. So what did he do? He dressed up in cowboy clothes, for heaven's sake, and went into a trust company office and held everybody at bay. He shot 14 times into the ceiling and the wall. It was quite bizarre.

And what was he doing? He was trying to get attention. Maybe you think that's too simplistic, but the individual said: "Why do you think I'm standing here? I'm trying to get attention. I know I'm not going to get any but having been here long enough I've been enured to inattention. I rather enjoy it now. It's a part of the smell of the place."

That's a sense of self-worth. We don't breed it. We don't give much recognition to it. It will take a lot of time to begin to get some gleanings of what really causes this particular kind of grotesque activity in society. How do you approach it? How do you forfend against it?

I gave Adamson some credit the other night, you know. He says he usually doesn't make deals with liquor or with guns. You can see why. Feeding a person liquor in that kind of jeopardy is unquestionably likely to heighten the temperature rather than to cool it out. But that was a smart move. He used good psychology on that occasion.

The single 40-ounce bottle appeased the fellow. That was the first time he'd been given a gift in months. Maybe it was the first time he'd been given anything but a slap in the face in his whole life; who knows, this is quite possible. So in that particular context, it worked. The Metropolitan Toronto police and the provincial police, on the whole, have a sense of that. But I'm sure it's not taught.

If there's one subject that's taboo among men in public life it's psychology. You should never talk about it.

Mr. Smith over there is a psychotherapist. He never talks about it. I thought it very strange. He never mentions it; and yet it runs like a disease through our society, all the way through. And if you want to feel better tonight—we all are a bit infected—sometimes we say that health is what we do with our own sickness; what do you do with your own sickness? Do you use it well? Do you turn it to account? Do you help other people? Do you give blessings? Do you take all the time? Do you take everything you can get? That's the difference, right there.

All right. I think some of the elementary lessons are necessary. How often does a psychiatrist, not any psychiatrist—because half of them are nuts too—but some psychiatrist in whom you have confidence and who has a deep sense of the interpersonal come in and speak to the police college? These are the currents that run.

The criminal mind is not all that different from yours and mine, except it makes exceptions for itself which we don't think we are justified in doing. Our sense of responsibility is such that we deny ourselves the exception.

There are first rate people around, at McMaster and all over the place in the fields of sociology. Stay away from the guy who deals only with numbers. He's a menace, but the fellow who is aware of the plight, particularly of youth with whom you largely deal—overwhelmingly deal—is the man. You have to choose your people with great care; those who are going to lecture there—not anybody by any means; one out of 15 perhaps, and I am being generous now.

Okay, that's the basic nostrums I would forward to you this evening. If you can do that, then you can fructify and bring about very great changes. There would be no diminishment in the role of police. It would be an enhancement all the way along. No criminals will escape who otherwise would not have done so, but there will be a lifting of the quality of the whole society, because the police are so central to the heart of that society.

I will end by saying that to this date I get a feeling that now it's done perfunctorily, more by rote, less by sensitivity; and less blessed by orientation and a way of looking at the world; rather than by a kind of mechanistic saying, "We will meet the demands of the wretched opposition, because they will be raising Cain anyhow, so we will throw in a little sociology here, two-and-a-half hours on a Tuesday afternoon"; that kind of thing." I just don't think that works.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. minster have any comments?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth. Yes, Mr. Chairman. I buy a great deal of what the hon. member for Lakeshore has been saying. It's good to listen to him as he philosophizes in a very practical way on the kind of training the police college should give to policemen.

I understand they have some 24 periods of 45 minutes each, representing some six per cent of their time, dealing with matters of public relations and community affairs. Now that goes further than the three hours dealing with psychological problems in particular. When it comes to public relations, I understand that some six per cent of their time is spent on that. Maybe it should be more.

Mr. Lawlor: Fifteen for a start.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Well, we could all take figures out of the air and certainly 15 per cent is better than six per cent.

We should look at the progress the college at Aylmer has made. As you know, it has expanded dramatically in the time it has been there. We are announcing in these estimates an increase in the length of the courses. So we are making progress in giving the police, the young police officers, better and more formal training. As we give them this more formal training, we are trying to put the right academic background into it as well—including the kind of things that the member for Lakeshore and the member for Dovercourt have been talking about. As those courses are increased in length, as I am sure they will be over the years, I am likewise sure that the points that you have made will be the points that need emphasis.

You are right that a very small proportion of the average policeman's time is spent in dealing with the criminal law. He deals with the whole gamut of human relations, whether it is settling a domestic fight or trying to persuade some youngster that it is time he went home and didn't create a nuisance on the street, or risk his own personal welfare by being in places where perhaps he shouldn't be.

Mr. Joe Mennill, who I think is probably in our last budget session with us tonight, is retiring at the end of the year. He has been the principal of that college. He has a wide background, but his academic background in the field of teaching is probably as predominant as his police background. Certainly when it comes to teaching the police, he has not simply taken the point of view that some policemen might, that all he has to be taught is the martial sciences and not the philosophy of good policing.

He has handed me a note dealing with—I shouldn't say his philosophy, necessarily, but the attitude of the college on the problems you raised. "The candidate must be prepared to handle any situation when it occurs, thus he needs to be trained for these emergencies. His day-to-day experiences since he was born have given him more or less skill in dealing with people. We must pick those who have developed these skills, and then sensitize them to some of the more critical human interrelation problems with which he may be faced. Many have courses in sociology and/or psychology."

Not only do they all get those, but some go on to specialize in other types of courses that we offer from time to time at the universities or elsewhere—specialized courses of one sort or another—and he is reporting that many take courses in sociology or psychology.

So we are not forgetting these things. I agree a great deal with what you are saying, and don't want to take issue with that. I know that many police forces, Metropolitan Toronto, for example, have officers who do nothing but community work. They go into the schools and talk to the young people about dealing with the police and keeping out of trouble. My ministry has put out a very good movie that was well received which tries to teach young people the danger of getting involved in any type of criminal activity. That's all part of the training you are asking us to do in the community; that is training in the community and we do do that.

Just a week or so ago I was reading an article in the OPP Review on the OPP detachment at Rockcliffe in the Ottawa-Carleton region. From reading that article, you would think 95 per cent of the Rockcliffe detachment's time was dealing just with matters of public relations. I guess the problem is that instead of specializing, as we do in our police forces today, with some people dealing specifically in criminal intelligence and others in community relations, that they are too specialized. Perhaps all police officers, whether in criminal work or even in traffic—and maybe traffic above all—should have more training in public relations and in the arts of psychology rather than leaving it for specialists in community relations. I think if there is a message you are giving us, it is that this should be universal in approach rather than letting a few specialized officers deal with public relations.

I've taken your lecture, and I regard it in part as such, to heart. I gave you 100 per cent of my time when you were speaking, so I feel your own psyche should not be disturbed by your wish of attention, because I find it is always good to pay you attention, that you have words of wisdom to impart.

You said police budgets must be open to scrutiny. I agree with you. I agree they should be at the municipal level, as well as at the provincial level. I find it, as a minister, difficult to deal with figures when you want to say how much is spent on a particular item at the House level. I think that can be done much more effectively at the committee level, where we can pass papers back and forth and have more detailed discussion as to what is being spent on this item and what on that item.

But I assure you there is very little of our budget that is regarded as confidential. We have one item there dealing with rewards which are actually paid through the Treasurer. There was very little of that spent this year. I don't know what it was, but very little.

Parts of that may be confidential as to whom those payments are made.

We don't have that much in the field of security that I think we need have any hesitation in telling you what is being spent on security. If there is any part of the budget on which you want further figures or further information—don't necessarily ask for it now, though it's your right to ask for it if you want it now—I think it would be more satisfactory to get it from people such as Mr. Lorne Edwards who can give you all the detail you want. I assure you there's very little, if anything, sacrosanct about our budget.

Mr. Stong: Ordinarily, when I have to agree with my colleagues on the left, Mr. Chairman, I do it with very much regret. But I must say, the only thing that I regret with respect to what the member for Dovercourt (Mr. Lupusella) and the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) have said is that I did not say it first.

I agree basically with what they have said. I'm very much impressed with the fact there is a lack of direction and a lack of thrust towards public relations in police training, as is evident from the material supplied to us in preparing ourselves for these estimates.

Earlier this afternoon I recounted an incident in which the police had stopped a car on Yonge Street. I in no way recounted that story with an intention to fetter the discretion of police officers, because we cannot, if anything we must give them more freedom to move in our society. I related that story for the sole purpose of indicating, as my two friends on my left have indicated, that we must be aware of the fact that police are concerned with public relations. They do represent the authority of the law when they wear the uniform, and society is becoming more and more dependent on the police.

The minister said earlier that it is not the job of the police to educate the people. Let me tell you, from my experience, people complain and the complaints that I receive—it is amazing that members of the opposition get complaints when those sitting in the place of authority don't get those complaints; I'm wondering what that means. Perhaps the people in authority don't listen; perhaps their ears are closed to these problems.

I find the government is five years behind the times in dealing with the people. The government should lead, but in this case it's holding the police back.

The people have no one to turn to in society. And Toronto is no exception; as a matter of fact I think Toronto probably stands on feet of its own in this respect. Crime is on the increase.

Why is crime on the increase? It will continue to increase so long as we protect our anonymity, so long as we do not become known and allow ourselves to be known by our neighbours, so long as we don't take an interest in the people in Toronto, our neighbours.

You've probably stepped onto elevators; and riding down from the 15th floor, that elevator will stop at every floor to take people on or discharge them. What does everyone on the elevator do? They stand looking at the numbers light up and go out rather than look at one another in society.

Mr. B. Newman: Right on, absolutely.

Mr. Stong: The police must be and are the only vehicle that the people trust and the people look to. Whether the government is prepared to accept this or not, the police must play that role.

We cannot force members of our society to go to psychiatrists. We cannot force members of our society into the schoolrooms again to learn these things. Members of our society are not going to pay to go to lawyers or professionals for this type of advice. They look to the police who represent the core and the power of this province. In that area, they are the only ones the ordinary person in society will turn to.

That's the police officer, the man who wears the uniform. And that man must be adequately equipped to meet every single incident he confronts; whether it be a robber, whether it be a small child shoplifting, whether it be a woman shoplifting, whether it be a break-and-enter, whether it be a youthful offender, an older offender, a person charged with fraud. No matter what the incident—whether it be a domestic dispute, whether he's called in to settle a situation, whether he's driving along the street and sees young people congregating—that police officer should be trained to stop his vehicle and go over to speak to those young people, whether there's an incident to be investigated or not. Those people need the police officer. His role has changed. The complexion of society has changed, and we have not kept up to it. We will not allow our police to keep up to it so long as we continue along the line we have in the training.

I would like to know the qualifications of those who apply for the jobs. What qualification—last answer? What do you do in screening process do they go through in their training to determine whether they have developed the skills of which the minister spoke in his last answer. What do you do in screening these people to determine whether they have developed the skills to deal with people?

Are they the aggressive type? Do you look for the passive type? By what criteria do you judge whether a person has developed these skills that are so important and of which you speak?

What is the average academic achievement of an applicant for the police force? What are your requirements? What do you demand? What do you hope to attain?

What are you offering to people in society to attract professionals to the police department to serve us? For instance, fraud is a very specific area of crime. What tools and vehicles are at your disposal to attract professionals, such as accountants, such as lawyers—not all lawyers are dummies, you know, some of them are pretty smart.

Mr. Cureatz: Name one.

Mr. Warner: That's right, Sam, he was talking about you.

Mr. Cureatz: I knew he was

Mr. Stong: We have to attract that type of individual, that type of professional to keep on top of the sophisticated types of crime.

Also, what strategy, what policy decisions have you made in the training of young or new applicants to become police officers? I think there are several policies that conflict here in our present-day training. For instance, the young police officer who is trying to get hooks, trying to get a promotion, trying to get into the detective branch, measures his success by the number of charges he lays, the number of apprehensions he makes and the number of convictions he may attain or achieve in the courtroom. That's the criterion by which he judges himself. A policeman is overlooked, in my respectful submission to you and the ministry, if he can get along with the people in his community.

I know a police officer who served for over 40 years on the police force north of my town. It is now the York regional police force. I remember when I was in high school working for Hydro in the summer time. We stopped in at a restaurant. Officer Douglas Murray was a police officer for the Whitchurch township police at that time. I remember being at one of our coffee breaks at 10:30 one morning in a restaurant when the officer brought two young fellows into that restaurant and sat them each down on a stool.

He said, "You sit here; and you sit there." He sat in the middle. He was obviously investigating something. Whether it was something that these two young lads had done or whether they could give him information, I don't know. At any rate, his approach to them was to sit them down in a restaurant, in that atmosphere—and they all had a Coke. They sat there and they talked.

We never see that today. Maybe the issue is that police officers don't have time. The fact of the matter is, in my respectful submission, the police officer is going to have to make time in order to keep up with the demands and the needs of this complex society in which we live.

That is one conflict in my mind, in the training of an officer. He sees his promotion being dependent upon the charges, the apprehensions and the convictions. In so far as he does that we no longer see any record made of the number of warnings a police officer may issue. Why don't we use that as a criterion to judge the number of contacts he has made with people in society? Why doesn't he keep a record of the number of warnings, simple warnings that he has issued to people or contacts he has made in that respect, and make them public rather than judge his procedure only by the number of charges he has laid?

He is also confused by the fact that, rather than lay one charge in a given set of circumstances, he may do better to lay seven. You get travelling too close, careless driving, failing to stop; the whole line to cover the same set of circumstances—dangerous driving, careless driving; the whole gamut is before a person who goes to court. It clogs up our system, it clogs up the court, it clogs up dockets, maybe it will lend itself to plea bargaining, but that is not necessarily right either, in my respectful submission.

I agree with my colleagues from Dovercourt and Lakeshore when they ask for more psychology or sociology courses being offered to the police officers. I think that's very important, I think it's mandatory in today's society that the police officer be a person who is not necessarily aggressive but can be aggressive when the occurrence dictates.

There's one other thing that did occur to me when I looked through your material and when I looked at the type of course that's offered. We have supervisory courses offered, we have criminal investigation; and I'll have more to say about that in a few minutes. We have identification, we have police administration, we have traffic surveillance, we have traffic control; and we have youthful offender, down below these are seminars offered about the youthful offender. It would seem to me that should be a mandatory course rather than an option. If I read this material correctly, the seminars appear to me to be an option rather than something that's mandatory or compulsory for every single police officer who is trained and going through courses.

We have drug training. That should not be an optional course either. In my respectful submission, that should be mandatory for every police officer, because every police officer who has dealings with youth at all on the street, ordinarily and in most cases, gets involved with the drug scene somehow. He must understand it and he must understand the drug user. But, more important, he must understand the aspects of society that lead to the use of drugs.

I think he must understand that the young drug offender, of whom we demand jail, can see the hypocrisy in society. He knows he experimented with marijuana, he knows he experimented with something more heavy. He goes to court and he hears the prosecutor and he hears the police demand jail. He goes to his own home and looks in the medicine cabinet and sees what his parents have in there—uppers, downers, mood changers and mood levellers. Our society is based on drugs.

Young people see the hypocrisy of this whole system; but the police don't and it's time they did. In my respectful submission, this is an important aspect of training that is being overlooked. That's the type of psychology of which I speak. I'm sure it's the same thing for my friends.

We're also looking at crowd control. I wonder what makes up that course. Are the philosophy and the strategy of the training of a police officer first to place him in position of aggression? Must he be the mover? Must he put the person at the other end on the defensive so that he maintains control? Is that the strategy and the policy of investigating?

Let me turn to criminal investigation. In my respectful submission to you, the question of police investigation of criminal offences is based on the almighty dollar sign, on trying to save it. In so far as we're trying to save the dollar, we must cut down on our methods of investigation. We leave the sophisticated methods and we turn to the obtaining of statements from the accused. If the police officer can base his case on the so-called voluntary statement of an accused, then his time of investigation is cut down. Time after time, people before the courts will be fighting their charges, based on the obtaining of a statement which they say was either beaten out of them or that promises were made to them to get this statement. They complain about being rough-housed in our police stations. It seems to me that if we changed the law—and I know this is out of the Solicitor General's jurisdiction, but it is something perhaps the law can direct its mind to—if it was made compulsory for accused persons to take the stand at their trial, then we would not need statements; if we did not need statements, then I think that there would be more guilty pleas entered in our courtrooms to offences for which people are charged than there are now.

I have represented people in the criminal courts, particularly young men, who have gone through what they call the "good-guy, bad-guy" routine in the police station: you have one person who comes on heavy and the other person who is a "nice guy." This is the type of situation they are confronted with.

What happens? They go to court to plead not guilty because they are angry that a statement was extracted from them, albeit maybe the statement is true—we are not even questioning that—and they want to have the last shot, the last fling at a police officer in the courtroom. It wastes the court's time. It is a complete bog-down of the court system.

We blame it on Legal Aid. I don't think the fault lies so much with Legal Aid as it lies in the basic misunderstanding of people in the community who feel that they have been mistreated and go to the court system to get some kind of justice. They do it not so much to get off the charge as to get around a statement they feel was extracted from them in circumstances to which they object.

There is no degree of sophistication in our investigation in many cases, particularly when you go to court and time after time the case is based on a statement extracted from an accused person.

In so far as police investigation is based on the notion of aggression, which is the policy and the philosophy of the ministry—and I am not laying all the blame on the police department, because the police department is only carrying out a basic philosophy that filters down to it from the top—in so far as that is the basic philosophy and strategy, we are letting society down.

It seems to me that the judges are aware, and perhaps the police are too, that society will tolerate a certain amount of rough-housing of individuals for chargeable offences: "I will tolerate it in so far as it does not apply to me." There is a basic hypocrisy that people feel there as well. The judges are aware of that.

we do not talk to one another and the only trusted individual is the police officer, who must fill a role, then we are going to have to change our policy and employ methods of investigation that are more sophisticated, that are perceived to be fairer and are, in fact, fairer. I believe, then, that we will be cutting down the number of court hours, the wasted court time by people who resort to a plea of "not guilty" just to justify the fact that they made a statement in certain circumstances with which they do not agree.

In his statement I think the Solicitor General indicated that 45 minutes was the amount of time he gave for the study of community affairs. I believe we have to extend that. I am not against other items to which he alluded; for instance, the physical education. I think that is necessary. And being a swimmer, myself, I was glad to see that that is included in the program. I also realize that the drill, the military aspect, the shooting practice—that is all necessary. We demand that of the police. There is no doubt about that. I do not have difficulty with that at all.

But I do have difficulty with the fact that members of our society are complaining about the bad public relations that emanate from their relationships with the police. The cases I quoted this afternoon, were cases where people were not charged with offences, because if they were, we could easily say: "They were charged and they are upset and angry because they were charged." I avoided those cases. There are all sorts of that type of case.

The cases to which I refer you dealt with an investigation, a witness observing an incident and complaining and the treatment he got. Another person, although it had racial overtones—separate the racial overtone aspect and we still have a dissatisfied person. Another man is driving home and is investigated. He made it quite clear to me that he was not complaining about the police powers to stop him and investigate him. He was upset because he did not get a proper explanation of why his wife was not allowed to drive and why he could not be reimbursed for his vehicle.

I agree with the minister when he suggests we cannot get into paying for vehicles that are impounded. I agree that's a good principle and I wouldn't like to see it changed. But I think the main complaint is the lack of appreciation for the people with whom they're dealing and the lack of an explanation when the time and the occasion warrants it. That's what this part of the training of our police officers is all about in fact: the criminal investigation aspect, whether it's aggressive or too aggressive; and the other aspect of public relations with the ordinary people on the street, when they look toward police officers as the mainstay and the thrust of the law of the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to correct one impression that I may have left. I said in the field of public relations they have 24 periods of 45 minutes each, not just 45 minutes.

Mr. Stong: That was my error, I'm sorry.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: You asked about the skills you look for when we are hiring police or police candidates. As you know, they're probationary for a period so that the final decision is not made, necessarily, at the time they are taken on the probationary strength.

Each of the municipal forces sets its own standards. There is some guidance from the OPC, but for the most part they decide what their standards will be. My information is that about 46 per cent have grade 12 education, 40 per cent have grade 13 or better, and the other five per cent are university graduates. That only adds up to 86 per cent. Even my mathematics would not allow me to get through on that; oh, the remaining 14 per cent have less than grade 12.

Mr. B. Newman: Is that new appointments or is that staff?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: No, I understand those are new appointments. So we're still getting some people on who do not have grade 12.

Mr. Reid: Very few.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Does that include the native people's band constables, or just municipal forces? My information is that it includes the band constables as well, all police; some of them may be in that field.

Mr. Stong: Does the starting salary vary?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Yes, the starting salary varies with the municipality involved, so that the only place you will have uniformity is in the OPP. I do have a set of criteria here for the OPP, which in view of your question you would be interested in.

"Our recruitment selection process consists of a five-phase program. Each must be successfully completed for an applicant to be eligible for appointment to the force. The five phases are as follows:

"1. Application screening: Each new application is reviewed to ensure that basic requirements are met and appropriate documents have been submitted; that is education documents, vision acuity reports where applicable.

"2. Entrance examinations: Administered at each of our 17 district headquarters at approximately one month intervals by our in-service training personnel. The examination consists of: (a) Otis self-administered tests of mental ability. It consists of 75 questions with a 30-minute time limit. This test measures logical reasoning ability."

Mr. B. Newman: Are those multiple-choice questions?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I can't tell you that. The nod from the sidelines is yes.

Mr. B. Newman: Surely you can devise something better than that.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Well maybe they can. I take it they are listening. I am certainly not an authority on these mental ability tests, never passed one myself.

Mr. Reid: That's why you are in the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That's why I am in government anyway.

Mr. Reid: If you passed, you wouldn't be where you are.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I might be out being successful.

Mr. B. Newman: That's right.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: This is still in the second phase: "(b) Essays. The applicant is required to write a paragraph or two on five designated job-related topics which are marked on the basis of organization, presentation, spelling and grammar." Now the last two would rule me out I know.

"(c) Two psychological, personality inventory tests; one the Minnesota multi-phasic personality inventory"—

Mr. B. Newman: We have no Canadian tests on that? We have to go to the United States?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: "It consists of 400 true or false questions designed to reveal deviant behaviour, that is, depression, psychopathic, deviate, schizophrenia and paranoia."

Mr. Reid: We should give that to the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Snow: No we should give it to the opposition.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Some of us might pass it; I am not so sure.

Mr. Reid: Not one of you would pass the paranoia one.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I must admit it is much tougher to get into the OPP than it is to get in the cabinet.

Mr. Reid: That's for sure.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: "We receive a written personality assessment on the remainder—"

Mr. Reid: For obvious reasons.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: "—in which the psychologist highlights his area of concern and identifies specific traits both negative and positive for our attention. Occasionally he will recommend rejection of a candidate usually due to some deviant trait identified through his assessment.

"5. Final review: When all areas of investigation and assessment are completed and received at the uniform recruitment section, the director of career management branch of the senior recruitment office will review the completed files on candidates, weighing their individual achievements in all phases against the total achievements of others being considered in the process.

"A decision is then made whether to accept or decline the applicant's offer of service having in mind the best interests of both the applicant and the force and in view of the relatively few positions we have to offer.

"(Note: It can readily be seen that a candidate would seldom be rejected on the basis of psychological evaluation. Rather this information is used as a means of support in the assessment of other data compiled throughout the various phases of the selection process."

So members can see that the OPP have a rather sophisticated system, and I am sure most of the large municipal forces have a similar sort of assessment process. Some of the smaller forces, of course, are not quite so sophisticated; and exceptions, as I have said, are certainly made for the band constables in the OPP.

Now as to detective work, let me deal first with the number of convictions made. We had some discussion, as you know, the other night on the matter of convictions. I suppose there is some suspicion about a policeman who very rarely makes a charge. In other words that he is too soft or he is not doing his job. I can see a senior officer being suspicious when some policeman goes day after day without making any charges and other officers are making a good number of charges.

I am assured, however and I hope it is so—I trust it to be so—that that is not the basis upon which policemen in any of the forces are judged; that is, their ability to make charges and get convictions. The last time we were discussing this, the member for Parry Sound (Mr. Maeck) who has some police experience with the OPP, made reference to the fact that one of his senior officers advised him along the line that it wasn't how many convictions he made in a particular area, but the relative peace and security of the community that was important. Peace and security is often reflected in the attitude that the public do have towards the police, so am not going to find fault with what you are saying.

[9:00]

I agree with you and your hope that perhaps more warnings could be given. I mentioned again the other day how difficult it is, in a large municipality like Toronto, to go on giving warning after warning, because you don't know whether it is the same fellow who is setting you up on every occasion, unless there is some follow-up system to the warning. Maybe that is what we should try to target on, some sort of follow-up: "Operator so-and-so was warned about this offence on a number of occasions." However, that gets into a great deal of bookkeeping and bureaucracy, which we don't want to encourage either.

So discussing all of those problems, I hope we are striking a good balance, because I believe, as you are saying, on many occasions a warning is the proper answer.

You raised an interesting point when you talked about the way a Constable Murray, in your youthful experience in York North, used to handle some of his young people. I wish we could do more of that. I myself mentioned that the other day, but when you try to do that today you run into problems with a lot of the well-meaning citizens, and maybe some of the human rights people who take the attitude you have no right to examine a young person in that way. You lay a charge; you don't sit him down on a stool and say, "You sit there and you sit there."

I regret that, because I think that's the way it would be best to handle a lot of these young people instead of getting them mixed up with the family relations court with the problems and stigma attached to that. I wish the policeman could take a youngster into the station, give him a lecture of sorts, probably a little more tender than the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) has given me tonight but along the same lines, and send him home.

But having done that, you as a lawyer know all of the problems you get into. What right did you have to do this to my child? Did you arrest him, was he charged with any offence? So sometimes society creates its own problems in dealing with that type of case as expeditiously and perhaps as effectively as we would like to see it done.

I agree that statements are no substitute for a good detective ferreting out facts. I haven't had that much experience in the criminal courts. I am ready to accept what you say, that frequently if they can get a nice clean-cut statement it is easier to deal with it than going out on your own gathering the evidence, either by statements from other people or actually finding facts to piece the case together; so they will resort to the statement.

I hope our police are doing otherwise. I agree that if they do have an open and shut case on the basis of facts, it would be much quicker than trying to convince the judge of the proper warnings and all the rest of it, which as you know must be given when you rely on statements alone. I don't know what percentage of our criminal cases are handled with statements as opposed to evidence of another nature. I'm ready to take what you are suggesting, that too many of them are on statements.

I know the police are listening, not only the OPP but many of the others, and we will follow that suggestion up with them.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Chairman, I have two particular questions. I am assuming that the college deals in crowd control and I am wondering if some portion of that also deals with the use of horses in crowd control, if that method is still taught?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That question was so brief, Mr. Chairman, that it hasn't given me time to get the answer. I do know that there are very few forces across the province that have mounted units, although some forces do.

The answer is a negative nod, although I know that as far as Metropolitan Toronto is concerned, they have a good number of mounted policemen, and their course is extensive. I think that police college time is better spent on psychological training than in the use of horses, because so few units have mounts available.

Mr. Warner: I wonder then, in light of the minister's remarks, if he is prepared to make some statement to those police forces which have horses and are using them. I've had several experiences; one, in particular, is most vivid in my mind and the minister might recall it. That was during the Becker's strike in Scarborough where the use of horses, to begin with, was not in the least necessary; secondly, it was potentially dangerous to men who were on a legal strike; and in fact it became dangerous to the police.

One of the police officers sustained an injury due to the horse being there. What was so ludicrous about the situation was that the strikers were facing transport trucks. I just don't understand why it seemed to be necessary to have a phalanx of horses on the one side and transport trucks on the other, leaving the men who were on a legal strike in between.

Fortunately, through the issue having been raised in the House, the police the next day removed those horses; but to save face, of course, they simply put them on the other side of the road.

Again tonight, as we came in the building, the police were assembling horses out in the members' parking lot. I assume not to keep us in order—at least, I hope not—but apparently to be used over on Yonge Street later on if it's seen fit because of what has become the traditional party that's held over there among the gay community in Toronto. In anticipation of some potential difficulties they bring the horses out; ludicrous, absolutely ludicrous.

If the minister says that while it's not the kind of thing the college engages in, that there are more productive things to be doing in terms of training our police officers, perhaps that message should be made pretty clear to all of the jurisdictions within the province of Ontario, so that this practice of using the horses, if not eliminated completely can be brought under some pretty severe restrictions. Obviously, among other things, we can't be at all places at all times to watch what's happening, and unless people are monitoring these things the police use them indiscriminately. It's beginning to irritate. It obviously more than irritates those people who are unlucky enough to be on the scene when the police decide to use the horses. There must be a better way of crowd control than using those horses.

Could the minister make some sort of statement along those lines?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, all I can give is my own understanding, which I must admit I have received from various police authorities. Reading about the matter of crowd control—and I guess it's not just from police authorities; I think it's generally recognized that the best way you can control crowds is by mounted units.

I see them in operation at parades in Toronto when they're trying to keep people back on the sidewalk. Most people are intimidated by a horse, particularly when it stands much higher than the average person; you move back on the sidewalk when a big horse comes along beside you. You see police officers trying to do the same work, and it takes three or four officers locking hands to hold the crowd back and do the same work that one mounted officer can do.

So I would disagree with what the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere says, that it's ludicrous to use horses in crowd control. My understanding is that it's the best way to control crowds.

You were mentioning that there were some assembling here tonight. I didn't realize that. I'm certain that it's not to look after the decorum in this House; it's probably for use on Yonge Street.

One of the members asked me earlier if the Metro police were taking sufficient steps to guard the safety of the citizens; those on both sides of that Yonge Street traditional party. I said I thought they were, did she want me to make some investigations? In any event, here the forces are being assembled and the suggestion from another member of the House is that perhaps that is not the best way to do it.

The police have a difficult role in trying to keep order. One of the safest ways to do it is with mounted units and I am glad to know that those mounted units are out there. I hope they won't be needed, but I think they will be far more effective than crowds of policemen or motorcycles trying to run up and down in front of that crowd. I think they are the best way to handle the kinds of crowds that they may have to deal with tonight.

Mr. Warner: Obviously we are going to disagree on the last point. A more effective way, it seems to me, where the majority of the circumstances now seem to call for the use of horses, is to simply outlaw strike-breakers because there is the source of the problem. That's why those horses were on the scene at Becker's and certainly at Sandra Coffee, as is going on now.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I would point out to the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere that we are discussing Ontario Police College methods and I don't think outlawing strike-breakers is a policy under discussion. Crowd control would be, but not strikebreakers.

Mr. Warner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I take it for the most part, between the comments that came from the member for Lakeshore and the comments from the member for York Centre, as well as some of the comments of the minister, that perhaps we are making some headway in trying to get a different direction, a different kind of philosophy about policing in Ontario. I am wondering if the minister imparts all of this to the police chiefs across Ontario, and in what way.

I'll back that up by saying that the other day I was a little dismayed—now mind you it was a radio report; it was a voice clip and it may not have been the entire thing, perhaps I'm taking it out of context—but I heard the police chief of Metro Toronto listing all of the items that they are going to have to cut back on, the things that they wanted to add but won't be able to through the Treasurer's (Mr. McKeough) efforts in this regard. Out of the list of about 10 or 12 things—morality squad and fraud squad and so on—was missing what I would have thought to have been somewhere near the top of the list, and that is community relations officers.

As I say, it was a voice clip on the radio. Perhaps they didn't include all of his speech, but from the 10 things that I heard listed none of them was the item of community relations officers. Yet from the remarks that have been made tonight, both from this side of the House and from the minister, it would indicate that community relations officers particularly in Metro Toronto are a pretty desperate need.

How does the message that we have heard from the minister tonight and the comments that have been made—I take them to be constructive comments—by both opposition parties, how does all of that get imparted to those police chiefs around Ontario, so that we can in fact bring about some change in direction and perhaps a little shifting of priorities?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Regretfully, sometimes when the police are confronted with the hard facts of trimming their budget the community programs appear to be the ones they look to first. I suppose it's a simple answer. If you are a police chief and have people complaining that the urgent calls that are made to the police are not answered, or it takes too long to answer them; or that there are traffic snarls on the highways or accidents involved; they are concerned with the matter of hard policing and they say those are the services that I have to continue. The community relations programs are something where it is a little more difficult to see the day-to-day advantages. Their tendency might be to say, "Cut the community relations programs."

[9:15]

I didn't hear the tape you referred to. I don't know whether it was taken out of context or not. Not with reference to Toronto but certainly to some other municipal forces around, I know that when curtailment of expenditures are asked for, very often that's where they look. I don't want to call them fringe services because I don't regard them as such, nor does the police college regard them as such, but I'm afraid when the choice has to be made, sometimes that's where the chiefs look for their curtailment and their savings.

There was another part of your question. How do we communicate this to the various forces? Our communication is through the Ontario Police Commission. We have no power to direct the various municipal forces and to tell them they shall not cut community relations officers. We can, through the Ontario Police Commission, tell them our concerns about it, but only by way of suggestion and not by way of command. If that's where they want to cut, that's up to the local politicians. We'll have to give them guidance otherwise, as well as the other suggestions we may make to them.

Mr. Warner: I might say to the minister that when he talks about the police force having to make a choice in terms of where they are going to cut when the money gets a little scarce, the automatic first place to cut may be the community relations officers. It seems to me there are a couple of reasons for that and I think it's something to which the minister can direct himself.

An hon. member: Who is that person in the Pierre Trudeau mask?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: He is in the right place.

Mr. Stong: Who is that masked man?

Mr. Warner: Did the minister do that as a distraction?

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Reid: It's part of a horse.

Mr. Warner: Maybe that's what the horses are out there for.

An hon. member: Which end of the horse?

Mr. Warner: He might as well be here. He's not doing much good in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I don't think he is one of my friends.

Mr. Walker: I don't think he is a member.

Mr. Chairman: Will the member please continue?

Mr. Warner: It seems to me there are two particular things and it requires some direction from the minister and the minister's office. One is in terms of the philosophy which has to come out to those police chiefs and the second is in terms of the content of the courses at the police college. I have spent some time working with community relations officers both in my riding and outside and I have spent some time working with local police officers as well. There is a feeling—I don't know how widespread it is but I think it would be fairly common—that somehow the community relations officer isn't a real policeman. Somehow because he's not in a uniform, because he's working with youngsters and because he's trying to keep kids out of jail and keep kids away from being arrested, he's not a police officer.

In fact, I recall one extremely good community meeting where we had the community relations officer, plus a detective there. The community relations officer described himself as "I'm the guy to keep you out of jail, and this is the guy who is going to put you in jail." It's from that very strain that's there, that very tension that those men—and I assume there are some women doing community relations work—get the feeling that they are not really a part of the police force, that they're not really as good a police officer as the ones in uniform.

Now it seems to me that there are two ways in which you can help to overcome that and in so doing say to the police captains that this should rank a little higher on their list of priorities. One is by taking a different look at it in the curriculum at the college, putting it a little higher on the list, putting some more importance behind it, maybe offer it as a specialty. That is sometimes the way they do it in other lines of work. You single it out as a specialty and you ask someone to take it up and give them some extra remuneration.

Perhaps another way is to try to convince the Treasurer that some extra dollars should be provided for police forces which hire community relations officers. In other words, exempt them in some way from the normal budgetary restraints based upon population. If you have a certain size population, you warrant so many community relations officers and those will be paid for directly by the province.

I think there are different avenues for you to explore. Those police forces have to start changing their attitudes, and they have to start moving in a more positive direction so they don't always list community relations officers at the bottom of the list. Those people do some pretty important work. As I mentioned before, having worked with community relations officers I do know the kinds of valuable work that they are able to achieve.

You cannot count up the number of youngsters who don't end up in jail because they encountered a good community relations officer, and realized that. It is difficult to measure the worth of those officers. It is extremely important.

As my very last question of the minister before I finish, I would like to know how many of applicants to the college, how many of the students who come in are female and how many are male? And of the instructors, how many are female and how many are male? Have those percentages—not the numbers so much, but the percentages—changed very much over the last five years? In other words, how does the government's affirmative action—or it could be viewed as affirmative inaction—that is rampant in most ministries apply to your ministry?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Insofar as community relations goes, I don't believe it necessarily requires a reply. I agree in a great deal with what the hon. member for Scarborough-Ellesmere is saying. I think community relations work is important. We should be trying to prevent crime in the schools and in any place we can find it. They are not only dealing with the prevention of crime, they are dealing with matters of safety on the highways and all the rest. So we will do what we can in that respect.

You have suggested that we should gauge our grants accordingly. As you know, the municipalities are asking for fewer strings, fewer conditions attached to our grants, and that is the policy we have been following. I am not so sure we want to get into conditional grants in the field of policing, but we will have to do what you are asking by way of persuasion and request rather than by way of direction from the Solicitor General.

But those are important subjects in the police college and they will continue to be identified.

You asked for definite figures in regard to the number of male and female applicants. I find that those figures are not available to us tonight. We will get them for you. The same applies to the matter of instructors. I might ask if we have any female instructors on the staff at the present time? None?

Mr. Warner: Not even a token?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: We have two Waterloo students who are teaching in the physical education area. There are many women on the staff in the office, but that is not what you are asking about. You're asking about instructors. Whether two is an improvement or not I can't even give you that answer tonight. But we'll send that information over to you or have it by next session.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I don't intend to be lengthy but I did want to ask the minister if he is giving any consideration to increasing the number of individuals from various ethnic groups applying for positions with various police forces. We do live in a period where our society is multi-lingual, multi-national and, also, multi-discriminatory. Is the minister considering giving some type of recognition so that we could increase the number of individuals who speak more than simply English and/or French in police forces?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The answer is yes. We have suggested to the various police authorities across the province that their forces should, as closely as possible, represent a cross-section of their community. That creates some problems in trying to meet the standards that we discussed earlier; not all applicants can meet the standards. Some forces have made exceptions to their standards in order to accommodate the new Canadian population. But we feel that they're got to hit a balance between maintaining reasonable sound standards and the cross-section that we talked about.

Mr. B. Newman: Would the minister consider advertising in the various ethnic groups' papers to encourage the new Canadians to apply to some of these forces? I would assume that the selection of them is "all things being equal."

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I think we could do something along that line. It's difficult for us to advertise for the municipal forces because of their wide standards, but we might publish a few general advertisements along that line in the ethnic press to consider policing as a career, or something along that nature.

Mr. Roy: I just wanted to make a brief comment following some of the comments from my colleague from York Centre and the reply by the minister.

I can recall, and I guess the minister will too, going back three, four or five years, when we talked about specialized training and the type of training that the police should be getting and the type of courses that would be in the best interests of a well-rounded police officer. I'm glad to see that some of the suggestions that we made in the past are a part of their training.

My colleague was talking about encouraging police to give warnings rather than lay charges, and I think he made a good point. I appreciate that it's very difficult, especially when there are fewer and fewer small towns, with more regionalization of people in large urban centres and things of that nature. That becomes much more difficult to do because there's less proximity, people don't know each other as well. As the minister has pointed out, very often there's a feeling in the community that if the police come around, people who are on a civil rights or human rights kick say to the police: "If you're going to lay a charge, lay a charge and, if not, leave me alone," or "leave my kid alone."

I frankly think that there has to be a change of attitude. I feel as one who represents a community that the pendulum has swung just about as far as it can go when you get to the protection of the individuals, the different guidelines that we've set up, the different laws for the protection of the individual, and things of that nature.

I would think that with proper leadership on the part of government, and on the part of the police officers, that the general public and the parents will appreciate more and more somebody taking their kid aside and saying: "What are you doing here?" or maybe even discuss with the parents what is happening. Undoubtedly there is a feeling and I think there is a trend, even among large police forces, to try to establish a presence within areas so that their will be some relationship between the community and the police officers who are patrolling it. I appreciate that's more difficult.

Very often in some of the large urban centres the only time anybody sees police officers is in a police cruiser because the policeman on the beat is no longer around. I am talking about suburbia, where people have to get around in cars and the relationship between the police and the people who are supposed to co-operate to ensure the safety of the community is more difficult. I think it's important that we take leadership, that the ministry take leadership and that police officers are encouraged to take leadership to convince parents that very often the police officer having this type of talk with the young lad or young lady, or with the parents, is in their best interests in the long term. The police officer shouldn't always be forced into a situation where he has to write a ticket, lay a charge or things of this nature.

As a parent of some young people myself, I would really appreciate it if the police officer came over to my place and told me about my son or daughter who was out breaking windows or doing things of this nature. Similar things happened to me when I was a young lad back in Saskatchewan. My colleague was relating an experience that he had when he was working for Hydro in the summer. I can relate experiences back in Willow Bunch, Saskatchewan, where the RCMP detachment was right next door to my place. We used to raise hell, and the police sergeant would come over every morning to my mother and say, "What problem did he cause last night?" and he would take me aside and say, "What the hell are you doing wasting your time around here?" and that sort of thing.

It seems to me that we have to look at a sort of a different approach. I appreciate what the minister says about there being a danger. There's not only the danger of the parents saying, "Lay a charge or leave my son alone." The other danger is that giving a warning or laying a charge is sort of a value judgement which can be questioned by certain people. They say, "You give a warning to the son of Such-and-such because he happens to be your friend or a big shot and you just lay a charge against the son of Such-and-such." I think that's one of the pressures that are on police officers, that you don't take chances and you lay charges against everybody.

I think we have got to go back to some of these old values. The pendulum has swung about as far as it can go in terms of us saying we have to regiment every action of police officers individually within a code of civil conduct and everything else. The time has come when we should look at some of the old values and take leadership here and say: "The police don't have all the answers. The police can only be effective if they get the co-operation of the community."

I appreciate that it's going to require the leadership of a lot of organizations, institutions and individuals to get that, but I think it can start with the police. I think we should emphasize that sort of approach more and more today because, as the minister himself knows, funds are not unlimited even for his own Ontario Provincial Police force and it's going to be awfully difficult to put more and more bodies out there. We are going to have to make best use of the resources we have, and one of the ways of doing it is to encourage that type of co-operation. With this type of leadership, maybe we will educate a few parents as well, because some of them need educating.

I would like to say that I found the comments of my colleague interesting. As the minister has stated, there are a few problems in doing that, but I think the increased emphasis in the future will be that more and more people will realize that governments don't have the answers, just as they realize that police officers don't have all the answers. He is just one poor individual out there in the community, and he can't do it all by himself. He needs the co-operation of the parents, just as he is going to need the co-operation of the judges, the courts and everyone else working within the system. But I think leadership is essential, basically because the police officer is one of the more important and visible individuals within the community, and it's important that we start there.

The other thing I wanted to ask the minister deals with the Ontario Police College. The minister can correct me if I am wrong, but I don't see anything in the Ontario Police College dealing with the training you have established. The Ontario Police College is to establish sort of a standard for police forces and police officers across the province, increasingly, more and more women are becoming a part of the police forces—is there any place in the Ontario Police College where women get training? I don't see it any place in your book. Maybe the minister can point it out to me. Do we have the sort of facility where we can give the same training to women police officers as we do to the male police officers?

If you will permit me, Mr. Chairman, having asked the question, I would go a step further. It's important when we have established an institution like the Ontario Police College, which sets minimum requirements of excellence or training across the province, that we take leadership from this level as well through the Ontario Police Commission with regard to standards for individuals within the forces. I am not talking only about standards of excellence in intelligence or training, or grades in school, but also physical standards. I thought standards of height and physical requirements were the same for all police forces across the province; I am told they are not.

It would appear the Ontario Provincial Police, and I think Metro police and many of the other police forces, are ahead of the Ottawa police forces which apparently still have the five feet eight inches requirement which establishes a more rigorous standard for women than most other police forces. I am talking about a standard across the province, and this is something that should be looked into.

As much as I value the Ottawa police force, and I have many friends there, I think they have a position which is indefensible. Why would they have a higher standard? I guess there may be more male chauvinists on that force than some of the other forces across the province.

But I would like you to advise whether you are going to take steps to establish uniform standards and whether you have any facilities or institutions to give the same type of training to both male and female police officers.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The hon. member for Ottawa East raised two subjects. The first, this matter of warning and a return to some of the tried and true methods of policing practised in our younger days, certainly in my younger days. I can't say much about it but, amen; I agree with what he is saying. I will ask the forces to consider these methods. I think it has to do with the community approach we were talking about earlier—getting the police into the community, the schools, the home and school associations, service clubs, and organizations of this nature.

It will take public understanding of what they are trying to do. Certainly, it is an approach that has my endorsement. I only wish we could do more of it without being met by a lot of people who say, "I am going to stand on my rights," and not look at some of their responsibilities as parents and individuals.

You asked about the standard of training for the various forces. I understand the standards at the Ontario Police College are the same for everyone after they enter. In other words, they all must pass the same examinations and I gather even the women must pass the same type of physical test the men go through. The Ontario Police College at Aylmer does handle women recruits and they are taking the same training the men take both in the classroom and in the physical exercise.

The last time I was down to a graduating class the women were in that precision squad marching. It was a treat to see them step out with the men. As far as smartness is concerned, they're every bit as capable as the men when they're in that precision squad. It consists of about 30 people. I think the last time I was down there about five of them were women. They were every bit as smart and sharp and as able as the men in that squad. They go through the same tests and all candidates must pass the same examinations.

Dealing with Ottawa, I think the hon. member for Ottawa East may exercise greater influence around this House than he does with the Ottawa police force. They are still free to set their own standards and they do. Ottawa seems somewhat more reluctant to vary its standards to try to accommodate the women than most other forces across the province. We have suggested to them from time to time that they should do so. I have had some correspondence with them in regard to the matter and some people have written to me in connection with complaints about the standards of the Ottawa police. As long as they are free to set their own standards as they presently are, they don't have to listen to us. At the present time, they are not listening to us in the matter of the recruitment of women.

Mr. Roy: Just to pursue this point, I think in Ottawa it's five feet 10 inches, isn't it? I said five feet eight inches but I think they require five feet 10 inches, whereas the Ontario Provincial Police and other forces have adopted a five feet four inches minimum height for women. I would think maybe we should push them. I hadn't realized that there was such a discrepancy. Secondly, don't you think you should consider that the standard should be uniform across the province?

I understand the necessity of having some flexibility that responds to the requirements of that particular community. But do you think that should be one of them? Would that be trampling on something when you're talking about something as basic as that? I think there's very little doubt that a police force which continues to have the requirement of five feet 10 inches is eliminating—what would you think?—80 per cent of the women in this province?

I'm looking at my colleague from St. George, a very capable gal. She would be eliminated from being a member of the Ottawa police force.

Mrs. Campbell: Thank you. I haven't volunteered.

Mr. Roy: She'd make an excellent police officer, I'm sure, had she not decided to pursue her career with such excellence in other spheres. The point I'm trying to make is that it would appear that when you have that sort of standard it is discriminatory. It seems to me that if the Ontario Provincial Police and all other major police forces accept five feet four inches, nobody is going to convince me that their standards of excellence or their efficiency as a police force are diminished by the fact that they've lowered the standard to accept the reality of today that women are accepting their place at all phases and at all levels of society.

Maybe we should put more pressure on them. I hadn't realized they had been in touch with you and that you had corresponded with them. In your answer, you said you suggested they look into that. For all intents and purposes they have disregarded your suggestion. If that is the case, it would appear that maybe we'll have to raise a bit of hell in Ottawa. Maybe we haven't done enough.

I didn't want to do anything about it in Ottawa until I had, in fact, talked to you to see whether you had any views on it, whether you had any correspondence. If that is the case, I would say frankly, Mr. Minister, that you should get in touch with Ottawa and say if they don't feel on their own that they want to change their standards—because we consider that standard to be discriminatory towards women—if they don't want to do it, we'll change it for them. I think that is the type of thing the community could see was not a bad approach to take with them.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Of course, if there are any kinds of standards at all they become discriminatory, whether they are intelligence standards, whether they are academic achievements or whatever they may be. I have been in touch with the Ottawa police through the chairman of the Ontario Police Commission. His memorandum to me—that is, the memorandum from Elmer Bell back on September 8 in regard to a particular case and since that time I have been in touch with Chief Seguin of Ottawa—advises me that the regulations of the Ottawa board have always been quite firm in connection with height.

Until World War II the height qualification was six feet. To accommodate some returned men who were excellent prospects, the height qualification at that time was reduced to five feet 10 inches. So if they could reduce it to accommodate some veterans maybe they can reduce them again to accommodate some women.

In the meantime, I think that one person who has written to me has probably appealed to the Human Rights Commission and they may be looking at it at the present time. But, we will be glad to urge Ottawa. I think a few women on that force would be an attribute to them and I would like to see, as you are suggesting, that they make it possible for women—or more women, I guess there are some women who are six feet, I know there are some women who are six feet but I guess there are not that many six-foot women who are applying for the Ottawa police force. I would like to see them lessen their height standards for women so that more could apply.

Mr. Roy: I might just make this comment, Mr. Chairman, to the minister. I am told in Ottawa there are only six of the force of 586, in fact, who are women and they have been there for quite some time. Chief Seguin is a nice fellow, a good fellow. I get along well with him. But he is a former football player and I think he dates from the days when the only fellows who were on the fire department and the Ottawa police force were either the hockey players or the football players.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That kind of discrimination.

Mr. Roy: It was a tough go for him. I'm surprised he didn't put a weight requirement in there and say that the guy had to weigh 225 pounds. In any event, I think that you and I, Mr. Minister, can work together on this. Obviously that has got to be changed because it is certainly discriminatory.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I would apologize in advance if I am being repetitive. I've been pursuing other duties and missed some of the debate this evening in the House. I, too, wanted to speak to the matter of the community cop in Metropolitan Toronto, and I have to express the opinion that in my view it is one of the most backward steps which has been taken by the commission.

Is the minister aware of the fact that this particular group is the group which has in the past and was proposing now to carry on seminars with the Human Rights Commission as a result of what is deemed to be an increasing violence in the racial tension in our community?

If he is not aware, I would hope that he would discuss the matter with the Human Rights Commission, because if there is anything we need in our community today, it's people who have the expertise in human relationships, working with the community who can at least dissipate some of these problems for our cities. To think that this group would be the very group that is under the gun at the moment is totally incomprehensible to me if one is concerned with the broader issues in such a community as we have here.

I suppose the next people we will lose will be our cops who patrol beats, because we do have them in Toronto and I believe that the experiment has been singularly successful. We have them in certain areas of downtown Toronto and I would hate to see them go too, to see them all get back into cars and continue this somewhat difficult chore of trying to keep order from the cars.

I'm pleased that the question of women in the force has been raised. But while I thought Toronto was very much ahead of the rest of the communities in Canada—and we have a magnificent woman in Fern Alexander in charge of the youth bureau which has been, as I see it, somewhat eroded—with the community cop perhaps now being removed, the men on the force will renew their battle for extra wages because women in their opinion are not performing all of the functions which they perform. That has been an ongoing battle. Has it been resolved or are we still facing this from time to time?

I don't know how the police are to look after a city like this, but it does seem to me that if you have a force, and if this government is concerned about racism, about the type of violence that we see, perhaps the minister himself might intervene to see if there is something that can be done to enable us to keep the community cops who really are tremendously useful in various areas. They really bring a very human element into the community. Some day, perhaps I'll be able to submit to you some examples of the sorts of things that I have been acquainted with, things that they've done in the community which perhaps go quite beyond what we see as a police function. Yet it is of tremendous usefulness to the medical profession and others in the community.

It seems to me that we have to try to stop departmentalizing and compartmentalizing our activities. Perhaps we should, in co-operation, take a new look at what we are talking about, so that we can try to prevent some of the things that are happening.

Your colleague has made reference to the increasing incident of violent crimes by women. This, of course, may be that they have been so brutalized by the failure of the various governments to recognize what is happening to them in our society. Yet again, we are compartmentalized into what we could do. As I pointed out to the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton), perhaps some of them are becoming violent because they are battered themselves. They are starting to retaliate.

But if you have the kind of service that is represented in the community police officers. I do believe that we can make great gains in the understanding of people as to the whole function of the police.

I would ask the minister if he would be prepared at least to have some discussions with the police commission in this city to that end, expressing to the commission our concerns here in the loss of that particularly important element in the police force.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I don't know that that decision has definitely been made by the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission. I gather it was just one of the alternatives that they may be considering.

Mrs. Campbell: All the more reason to talk to them.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: But I will be quite pleased to speak to some of the commissioners and ask them to give careful consideration to that. I see a bit of an inconsistency here, when this is a decision that the local politicians can make. The suggestion all the time is that we should be giving local politicians more control over their force and that the province should not have quite so much to say in regard to those who run it. At times like this, and with reason, you are suggesting that it should be the Solicitor General who gets in and gives them some guidelines and instructions as to who should qualify to be police officers and also in what fields they should put their emphasis.

It does remain with the local commissions to make these decisions at the present time, but I am not averse to making my views known to them, and certainly discussing the problems, and I will do so with the Metro people.

I think I commented on police women the other night, but the hon. member for St. George was probably not here at the time. There is no question that police women on the force serve a very useful function. But many of the police chiefs just feel that they cannot assign to them all of the same duties that they assign to their male members of their forces. I accept that and I think it is with reason.

The police officers—and when I say officers. I am referring to the senior officers on the forces—are quite protective of the women on the force. They feel, I guess, sort of a father's responsibility to a daughter rather than as one man might feel toward another man. I can understand it and I think it is commendable and I think it is good. So that if it is a situation where violence is at all likely, they certainly do not want to send a woman into that situation alone. In some circumstances they are even loath to send a male officer supported by a woman officer.

So there are those practical realities involved. Certainly I am not critical of the senior police officers who take that attitude because I think it is commendable and one that they have to use great discretion in. So, there is much room for women in police activity in the force but I am not so sure that it is 100 per cent. That is not the right way to put it—I think there are places where women can better serve than men, but I still believe that there are some places where men can serve better than women. That is one of the realities of police work.

[10:00]

Mrs. Campbell: Following the statement by the minister, I recognize what he has said. Yet, if one looks at the type of police work that women are asked to do in those very areas of mugging, violence, prostitution, all of the aspects of organized crime, I feel very strongly that it isn't quite accurate to say that they are not sent in, because they are very suited to the type of investigation that you want to carry on in areas of organized crime. Those are not easy assignments and they certainly are fraught with great danger.

I think we ought to be very clear in what we're talking about when we say that we should be protective of women and all of this. Women are applying to get into the police forces. It seems to me that if they have an explanation on what they may well be up against then that is the degree of responsibility to them.

I would think that with this sort of an attitude one could say that, perhaps, promotions would not be very readily available to them. When the minister is getting the other information, we might take a look at their standings in rank in the forces across this province and what kind of progress they are able to make in the force.

Perhaps that would give us some clues as to what is happening with the police.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: As I said, there are certainly some positions that women can fill better than men. When I say that police officers are protective, I think that when they are in some of these potentially dangerous situations, they are pretty closely guarded, as would a male officer be. They are kept in pretty close contact and, similarly, a male officer would be given the same kind of protection. But when you're looking at a barroom brawl, I think someone my size might be a little more suitable to go in to help quell that than somebody a little bit smaller.

Mrs. Campbell: I wouldn't take that for granted.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: However, as far as women are concerned, they have certainly shown that, apart from their stature, they certainly don't lack any courage and they have every bit as much courage to take on some of these jobs as the men have.

Mr. Bradley: First I would like to make a comment on the line of questioning that the member for St. George has pursued and a brief comment in conjunction with what the minister has had to say.

No doubt, he is aware of a particular difficult situation that arose in the regional municipality of Niagara where one of our female officers was subjected to a rather savage beating after arriving on the scene of a break-and-enter. She attempted to hold onto the individual who had committed the crime and was beaten with—I don't know whether it was a lead pipe or some instrument of that kind.

She did receive a recommendation for some kind of medal or some kind of distinction which, it would seem to me, did very little for the damage done to her appearance and to the physical state of her body on this particular occasion.

So I can understand why police forces would be rather reluctant to move very quickly into specific areas with the use of female officers. It's probably very easy to criticize this lack of application of the female officers except when we face some of the realities which you have already mentioned.

My question, though, deals with the police colleges and I'm looking for information here. My first question would be, is there any kind of compulsion for municipal police forces to send potential officers to police colleges? Is there a requirement for that?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The answer is no.

Mr. Bradley: Do you have any plans for that kind of a requirement in the future?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: In the future, yes. I would think we would come to that. At the present time we still have in this province some very small police forces. Some of them are three- and four-man forces so you can understand if we forced one person from that size force to go to police college it would make quite a dent in their strength.

At the present time it is all by persuasion, but I can see, as forces get larger and some of the smaller forces disappear, that training will be compulsory. I would think, however, that it would not need to be that because most of the large forces want to take part in it and readily comply where their size and budgets permit.

Mr. Bradley: Who would pay the cost for the tuition for a police officer of a regional or city police force to attend the college, and how much would that tuition be?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The province of Ontario pays for tuition and travel but the salary of the man or woman during the time of the training is paid by the local municipality.

Mr. Bradley: In the light of the fact that the municipalities are facing difficult times, financing various areas of their activities through the property tax—which we recognize as being regressive—are you giving consideration to paying the salaries of those officers at the particular time?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Certainly not at the present time, and if we listen to the Treasurer, as some of us on this side do, it might be assumed that the municipalities are not having such a tough time with their financing as the province itself is having. They seem still able to afford some of the luxuries which the province is trying to curtail. I am not sure that the municipalities are under any greater stress at the present time than our own provincial treasury.

Mr. Bradley: Well, Mr. Chairman, I will just disagree with the minister on that and not get into a debate.

Mr. Chairman: Shall item 2 carry?

Item 2 agreed to.

On item 3, Ontario Police Arbitration Commission:

Mr. Blundy: In speaking on this item, police arbitration, I will be very brief, but I do want to put forth to the Solicitor General a view on police arbitrations that is held by many municipal people—and former municipal people. Over the past few years, we find that many of the police associations are only too ready and willing to go to arbitration. We have seen instances in the past—and I am sure that the Solicitor General knows of such incidents—where a police commission may offer an eight or 10 per cent increase. The police association is, perhaps, asking for a 10 per cent or a 12 per cent increase, and after practically a year of talks it goes to arbitration; an arbitrator is appointed and they come back with 14 per cent.

What I would like to see done—and I know that this is something that many municipal politicians have asked for in the past—is that the Ontario Police Commission would appoint a panel of trained arbitrators, arbitrators who have some background in salary negotiations, some background in labour laws and so forth.

What happens is that a man is appointed—used to be judges or retired judges, although I understand that it is not the case now—and all he is interested in is having the arbitration hearing, making a settlement and getting his fee without any regard to the municipality that is going to have to pay the bill. Many of us have said all along that public service salaries have led among inflated settlements made in this country during the last few years, and this has been the case, I think, under the present form of arbitration. I believe that we must have arbitrators but I am asking that the Solicitor General consider setting up a panel of arbitrators who are trained to do the job and to do it to the best of their ability, to look after both the police association and the police commission and, consequently, the taxpayers who are paying the bill. There is a great deal of work that can be done in this area because there are more and more arbitrations, more and more police associations going to arbitration all the time.

I would be very pleased to hear what the Solicitor General has to say about that and what is planned in the future.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: There are two possible procedures for the police associations and the police authorities to follow when they come to an impasse. The final step is arbitration and that is compulsory. All in all, I think it is working very well. Naturally, when arbitration is compulsory, it has a tendency to be more generous than if a strike was the alternative. It is probably the associations who benefit from the fact we have arbitration, because generally, some sort of compromise is made.

However, more recently, we have been using with a high degree of success, a pre-arbitration procedure of conciliation. We have been helped in this by the anti-inflation controls, because the police associations know what their limits are as far as the Anti-Inflation Board is concerned. The conciliation officers have had a great deal of success in settling many police impasses in this way. I am pleased with that.

Of course, some of them are still going to arbitration. That is the second procedure which can be followed and, of course, is final.

You suggested setting up a panel to hear these arbitration matters. That is, in effect, what we do have. We don't have any permanent arbitrator at the present time; we do have a panel of nine people, who have heard various arbitration matters for police during 1976. They are: Professor G. W. Adams, Dr. A. P. Aggarwal, Professor P. G. Barton, Mr. Kevin Burkett, Professor Gail Brent, Professor D. D. Carter, Professor R. H. McLaren, Professor J. W. Samuels, and Professor K. P. Swan. That is exactly what the Police Arbitration Commission does. It seeks out qualified people, and sets up a panel of arbitrators. The arbitration commission meets from time to time to go through this selection procedure. Then they say, "Yes, we will accept certain people," and I have read off the names of some of those who have been accepted and have been doing that arbitration work.

What we don't have at the present time is a full-time arbitrator. We are getting along reasonably well without one. A lawyer by the name of George Ferguson used to do that work. George was appointed to the bench, so in the meantime, we are getting by with a panel of part-time arbitrators. I think it is working very well.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Chairman, along the same line as the member for Sarnia, one of the problems in the appointment of arbitrators—and you mentioned some very competent and experienced individuals—is that these arbitrators are usually people from the upper income brackets who are used to living at a particular level in terms of their income and benefits. Therefore, they are more inclined to be generous in their awards.

If you were to get a person, for instance, who worked as an industrial worker in a small plant in one of the towns or cities of Ontario, I wonder whether he or she would be as quick to make these kinds of awards.

Secondly, I see a number of professors on that particular list. I am not opposed to professors, but I wonder whether we are top-heavy with academics in this group. It seems to me we need arbitrators who are familiar with the ramifications of the awards they are going to make; the financial ramifications and the operational ramifications. This again seems to be one of the problems.

[10:15]

I heard mentioned as well, somewhere in the conversation, what happens when the AIB is removed. There are a lot of people, some in this Legislature, who are itching to get rid of the AIB. But commissions and municipalities are fearful of the removal of the AIB because they know, even within the awards that have been made, they were at the upper limits of what the AIB permitted. I think we can all envisage what's going to happen when that's removed and everybody thinks that somehow he has to catch up.

There are a couple of areas where I'm obviously being repetitive of what's happened in the past here. One of great concern to police commissions, obviously, is that of the two-man patrols, in instances for instance where they may be on from 7 in the evening to 7 in the morning—something of that nature—when really the prime times might be between 9:30 at night and 2:30 in the morning. It seems that arbitrators have made decisions in this particular area and the commissions have been stuck with them, cutting out the flexibility that they have and increasing the cost they might experience.

A second concern would be arbitrators' awards which call for an equal number of men in each squadron there may be within a regional police force. I don't know whether arbitrators have anything to do with OMERS or not. Perhaps OMERS is outside the arbitrators. This is a third concern. I know that what those who are financially responsible on commissions would be concerned about is the unknown costs or the increasing costs of financing OMERS. They would be very concerned about that.

I look at those specific areas and see them as being potential dangers. I also see problems in negotiation, before they even get to arbitration. I think this is important as well. I'm diverging a little bit, I recognize, from the arbitration itself, but I point this out because it has to do with pre-arbitration. I am referring to the makeup of the commissions. It seems evident, even to those who in the past thought that having a majority of appointed members was reasonable, that now we do need a majority of elected officials. For instance, where we have a five-man commission, at least three of those members should be elected officials who know the financial ramifications of decisions which are being made and, therefore, in the negotiating process are perhaps more fiscally responsible than those who don't have to answer to the electorate at any particular time.

Commissioners, I know, are concerned not only because of arbitration, at the fact that they are losing control of the expenditures for policing. The Police Act gives the chief of police wide authority to make decisions which have an increase in expenditure. Without even arbitrators having to make these decisions, the chief of police himself seems to have a lot of ability to make certain decisions under the Police Act which are going to result in increased expenditures. We all know that this comes into arbitration, but we all know that the chief of police in any particular area looks at the finest features of other municipal police forces and wants those for his police forces, just as I'm sure the members of the police association look for the best features in other areas and try to put those features before arbitrators as being absolute necessities instead of something that's desirable for particular areas.

I won't beg the Chairman to be as tolerant as to allow me to get in a plug for getting judges off the commission, because I realize that would come in another vote. But I think we recognize the conflict of interest, nevertheless, that a judge would have in serving on police commissions. I won't mention where, but there are some examples where it is obvious there is a need to have someone other than a judge serving.

The last point I would make in this regard, and I don't know whether it would come within the parameters of an arbitrator or not, is the fact that the chief of police has a staff under him that deals with financial administration. It has been suggested by some that perhaps this financial administration should come under the jurisdiction of the regional municipality, for instance, using their particular staff.

I make these suggestions and ask for any comments you might have on the points I've made.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: My reply will be short. You suggested we have too many professors on there. The problem is to get arbitrators who are satisfactory to both sides. Sometimes you can find a lawyer who is acceptable. Sometimes you go to the academic field. If you went to, say, management, the associations would not be happy. On the other hand, if you went to somebody closely associated with the police associations, the police governing authorities would not be happy.

So it is a case of trying to find people acceptable to both sides, and believe it or not there are not so many of them around who do have those qualifications. But I agree, we should try to enlarge that list and get it more diversified.

It's interesting that the member for St. Catharines commented on two-men cars. I think many people, both inside and outside police circles—and police officers themselves—are now questioning the value of two-men cars for a variety of reasons; some of which you mentioned—the lack of flexibility, and safety. We've heard that sometimes when police are in the company of another police officer they feel they have a sense of security they shouldn't have, where if they were alone they approach all situations with caution. If they have somebody with them, sometimes they don't use as much caution. So even on the matter of safety it's being questioned.

At the present time, you're looking at Metropolitan Toronto. I shouldn't say this because I don't know what their arguments are, but I assume they are saying that since they are stuck with the two-men cars they can't lower the number of patrols there so they will have to look for community officers. I am glad to see that the member for St.

Catharines is raising that point and questioning it.

Just one more point on arbitration: Generally you find that the associations, because they have specialists for their counsel, come into these arbitrations better prepared than do the various municipalities.

The municipalities have a counsel who is generally dealing with many facets of municipal life while the police—and the same applies to fire as well—come in with specialists in the field who know all the arguments and who have presented them many times. So with a little more preparation on the part of those representing the municipalities, or if they dealt with more specialists in the field, they might have better success before the arbitrators and enjoy some of the success that the associations, both police and fire, are at present enjoying.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to address myself to two areas on this particular vote.

As I understand it—I am making an assumption here—in the event of an arbitration there probably would be three persons in attendance: the chairman, a person representing the municipal police governing body and a person representing the police force. In your support material for these estimates you indicate that besides the chairman, there are two commission members who represent municipal police governing bodies and two members who represent police forces.

I am wondering if, in fact, there isn't a type of built-in conflict of interest in this particular makeup in so far as all of these persons are paid from the same trough and therefore owe their allegiance to the same branch of government. In that area would it not have been better to have this arbitration commission—which I assume is the body to determine arbitration—selected, except for the chairman, from appointees at the time of the arbitration from the respective fields and thereby avoid any suggestion of conflict of interest that may arise?

The second point I would like to raise on this particular vote is: When the arbitration committee sits down to make a determination, what is the policy or what are the guidelines it uses to arrive at that decision?

You mentioned too the strike or conciliation. I am not convinced in my own mind that the day and usefulness of the strike as a vehicle for determining anything have not passed and that the strike movement has not outlived its usefulness. It seems to me that perhaps in this day and age and with the needs of society, we should consider other vehicles for settling disputes.

I'm wondering if some of the guidelines for the arbitrators would be the same guidelines we set down by legislation in this House for the teachers' strikes in terms of final-offer selection so that each party presents its own package and the arbitrator then determines which complete package meets the needs of that dispute. In fact, we would cast the responsibility on both parties, both from the municipal level and from the police force level, to come up with a reasonable solution to their own problem. They would be secure in the knowledge that an arbitrator was going to select one complete package and they were both going to be stuck with that package.

Is it not better, I ask in my respectful submission, to have this type of guideline for arbitration so that both parties will act in a reasonable and responsible way in the determination of their own dispute?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I appreciate what the member for York Centre is saying in regard to the possibility of opening other avenues for settling disputes.

At present I don't feel that need is there. As he knows, police cannot strike under our laws; they must go to arbitration. Although I think the fact that there is forced arbitration means the associations may do a little better than they might otherwise do, the kind of settlements that are reached are not unfair, in my opinion.

We've had very few complaints. I know the municipalities are always suggesting that it's the arbitrators who are forcing them into these higher salaries. But I'm not so sure our salaries in this province are out of line with the kind of responsibilities we're putting on the police and the kind of qualifications we're asking them to have.

I don't feel there is enough wrong with the system to start looking for the kind of alternatives we have developed for the school teachers, which as you know is a rather long procedure and eventually leaves open the door of a possible strike.

However, there's no reason that this arbitration commission can't continue to examine those things, and I'm sure they'll read the member's suggestions in Hansard.

When we refer to the Ontario Police Arbitration Commission, it is a group of people composed of two from the associations and two from the governing authorities, together with Rory F. Egan from the Ministry of Labour. They set the standards for arbitrators, try to issue some guidelines to them and select who will be eligible to do the arbitrating. They themselves do not do any arbitrations. They don't hear any arbitration hearings.

They are simply the people who report to me as to their proposals for new arbitrators, issuing guidelines for them and handling the mechanics of arbitration. In other words, they look after setting the hearings and things of that nature. There's only one permanent person employed in there, and she is the woman who sets those hearing dates and handles the paperwork involved. So I think there may be a little mistake as to the duties of the arbitration commission.

The commissions themselves, when they go out, are one-man commissions. Of course, they can hear representation from as many people as they want and as many counsel as want to make presentations, but they are one-man commissions.

Item 3 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Shall vote 1603 carry?

Mr. Roy: There is one matter of hearings under the Police Act.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: That is a statutory item and it's not to be voted on.

Mr. Roy: But we can talk about it, though, can't we? I don't intend to be very long at all on that particular item.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: May I ask the hon. member if he will be less than two minutes?
[10:30]

Mr. Roy: I think I could probably make it in two minutes and 31 seconds.

Mr. Chairman, this amount seems to be reduced considerably from 1975-76 and from 1976-77. I just want to say briefly that I still feel there are matters under the Police Act which are unfair to police officers. I have said this on many occasions before and I will repeat it again as it is important. If we are going to ask our police officers or people in authority to make sure they follow the rule of law and give an individual all the safeguards and all the advantage of the safeguards we have created in our law, then when they have problems they should be treated equally fairly and justly under the Police Act.

I have said for years—and I have not seen major changes come into the Police Act—that there are many proceedings under the Police Act which, in my opinion, are unfair to members of the force. It seems to me that possibly there are fewer complaints, but I have seen many police officers who find themselves in a certain situation. As an example, it used to be that it was the chief of police who would decide to investigate a situation and very often he would decide to have a charge laid under the Police Act. Then he would turn around and be the judge. You can see the problem that that causes.

I suppose I am speaking for nothing here actually because I have said this many times before and I have not seen any changes come along under the Police Act. But I think it is an important point and I will say again, even if I have to say it over a number of years: If we are going to assure that our police officers give an accused every safeguard, they have got to be treated fairly when they have problems.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Our proposed amendments look after internal complaints. I think for the most part that is what the member is talking about. We will be dealing with that in the Police Act revisions which will come up shortly. This is a statutory amount put in at $1,000. It certainly may go well above the $1,000. The matters that my friend was raising will be dealt with under the amendments to the Police Act.

Vote 1603 agreed to.

On motion by Hon. Mr. MacBeth, the committee of supply reported progress.

On motion by Hon. Mr. MacBeth, the House adjourned at 10:32 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1977

The House met at 2 p.m.
Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

CORPORATIONS TAX

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: Mr. Speaker, later this afternoon I shall introduce a bill to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972. This bill will represent a major step forward in the government's tax simplification program.

For several years now, the government of Ontario has been committed to a program of tax simplification, and of course my ministry has been heavily involved. I would like to take this opportunity to recommit my ministry to the objective of tax simplification. At the same time, I would stress that tax simplification is a meaningless exercise without the service and accessibility such an undertaking requires.

However, Mr. Speaker, by its very nature tax simplification is a slow and deliberate process. Thus, I think it is essential that an appropriate balance be struck between the equity of the existing tax policy and the need to make that policy understandable.

The bill I will introduce this afternoon will significantly simplify the administration of and compliance with the Corporations Tax Act of Ontario. This bill will not represent a change in the government's tax policy, but it will embody a significant change in the application of that policy.

As this House is aware, the Ontario Corporations Tax Act closely follows the Income Tax Act of Canada. The exceptions relate to matters concerning the tax policy of the Ontario government.

Since 1972, there have been at least five major amendment bills by the federal government to the Income Tax Act. Even though Ontario paralleled more than 95 per cent of these changes as they applied to corporations, it has still been necessary for Ontario to produce large amendment bills to give effect to the numerous amendments at the federal level. To put it another way, under the current Corporations Tax Act, Ontario must amend its legislation in order to parallel federal changes. Deviations occur unless preventive action is taken.

Since 1973, this House has approved more than 1,000 amendments to the Corporations Tax Act, most of which were required to parallel federal changes. Taxpayers have had to keep abreast of all these changes and interpret the intricate detail of two statutes. The proposed bill will contain provisions to correct this situation; thus, in the future Ontario will automatically tie in to the Income Tax Act of Canada, unless we choose to differ.

The purpose of the bill is threefold: First, to provide tax simplification by bringing the Ontario Corporations Tax Act more closely into harmony with the Income Tax Act of Canada; second, to provide the tax incentives required for investors in venture investment corporations; and third, to provide some administrative amendments including changes to the appeal procedure to make it fairer and more flexible. The end result will be a reduction in bulk in the statute, and an increased comprehension of the statute. Consequently, I think a significant increase in ease of compliance for taxpayers will follow.

In March of this year, I decided that there could be significant benefits if some regular forum were established to provide the ministry with access to private sector expertise. Similarly, taxpayers not only could have access to our thinking, but also could have the opportunity to comment before decisions were reached. Accordingly, I invited several organizations to participate in this forum.

I am pleased to be able to introduce to the Legislature the members of the tax advisory committee who have provided valuable assistance in the design of a simplified corporations tax. These four groups and their representatives are: First, the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario, represented by Mr. Larry Eddy; second, the Ontario chapter of the Canadian Bar Association, represented by Mr. Robert Lindsay; third, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, represented by Mr. Irving Rosen; and, finally, the Tax Executives Institute, represented by Mr. David Craig.

I would like to take this opportunity to publicly thank the members of the committee for their effort and for their valuable contribution, and I look forward to receiving comment on this bill from all interested parties. I would like to have them recognized at this point, Mr. Speaker; I wonder if they would stand please. Mr. Lindsay could not be with us today.

This bill will represent the first large-scale simplification of any tax Act conducted by any jurisdiction in Canada. Although it is a significant achievement in the area of tax simplification, it is also flexible enough to avoid compromising the government's ability to implement new tax policies in the future as they are required.

The bill represents neither a change in revenues nor a change in policy. It does represent hard evidence that we are aware of the potentially onerous impact of public administration upon the private sector.

Taxpayers and their advisers will benefit in several ways. First, there is certainty. Taxpayers will know that where the Ontario Act is intended to be the same as the Income Tax Act, it will be exactly the same. Second, all intended differences between provincial and federal law will be highlighted. Third, the number of legislative amendments required will be drastically reduced. I think that all members will agree with the purpose of this bill and will wish to support it during its detailed review later this month.

ONAKAWANA LIGNITE DEPOSITS

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, two months ago I announced that drilling crews from Onakawana Development Limited were at work at Onakawana in northeastern Ontario, in the final stage of an extensive exploration project to determine the economic feasibility of extracting lignite from coal deposits there. I mentioned at that time that there are some 190 million tons of recoverable lignite at Onakawana which represent a significant but undeveloped potential energy source native to the province of Ontario. I also mentioned that if the exploration work then taking place should establish that economic extraction is possible, the deposit would be a valuable asset in terms of dollars, jobs and energy.

I would like today to inform the members that the Ministry of Natural Resources is this week hosting a series of open-house public meetings in northeastern Ontario at which the local people and other interested members of the public have been invited to participate in an information exchange on the proposed development of the Onakawana lignite resource by Onakawana Development Limited and to provide us with their views, concerns and suggestions.

We want to make sure that from the outset the public is provided with all the facts about the proposed development. We see these public meetings as an integral step in the process of assessing the project before the company carries out further engineering and environmental studies.

The open-house meetings will be held at Moosonee, Cochrane and Timmins. The Moosonee meeting will be held tonight, the meetings in Cochrane and Timmins on Thursday and Friday respectively. The meetings have been widely publicized in northeastern Ontario and notification of them has also been carried in the Toronto press.

It is our understanding that a wide cross-section of local people intend to take part in the sessions, which is most encouraging to us. The results of the open-house meetings will assist the Ontario government in making decisions as to how the lignite resources at Onakawana should be developed.

I would also like to advise the members that it is the intention of the Ontario government to place the proposed Onakawana development under the Environmental Assessment Act. This is consistent with the recommendation of Task Force Onakawana in 1972, and the company itself has indicated a desire to ensure that any development of the lignite deposits would be carried out under environmentally-acceptable conditions.

It is our hope that all interested members of the public will take this opportunity to join with us in planning the development of Ontario's coal resources.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Mr. S. Smith: A question to the Premier, Mr. Speaker. Referring to material that was tabled by the Minister of Energy (Mr. Taylor) in the House last Thursday, and more particularly to a memorandum from the chairman of Hydro to the minister in which he says that, "The chairman told me there was a possibility it would be much better if none of the information were given to Dr. Smith, but was left to come out in a public inquiry," will the Premier now say if the government is or is not prepared to have such an inquiry by a committee of this Legislature, and if he is prepared to do so, when will he present the appropriate motion to the Legislature, and is he prepared to consult with opposition parties on this matter?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I can't comment on the particular letter itself, because I haven't read the letter. I understand there have been discussions among the House leaders as to the appointment of a committee to deal with certain matters related to Hydro. I think that as those discussions continue and we firm up just what items or matters should be discussed and in what order, this is certainly one that can be considered.

But I think my best recollection is that there are some other matters; I think there was some discussion on the question of the monitoring and on one or two others, nuclear energy, et cetera, that would be part of this committee's responsibility. So, I expect the House leaders will be continuing to discuss this and we will arrive at a reasonable and logical way to approach it.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, and with great respect, given the fact that the House leaders have been talking about this for three or four weeks now and that we're consistently given assurances there will be some kind of further negotiation, can the Premier simply state for this House that the kind of information we need from Hydro will come before that committee, that the committee will be struck immediately and that the committee will decide for itself the terms of reference and when it wishes to obtain this information from Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm sure the Leader of the Opposition would want to follow what I think is a fairly reasonable approach that we have developed and which has been supported, by and large, by his party. That is that we would have general terms of reference, voted upon by members of this House, to give the committee some guidance. I don't think the Leader of the Opposition would want it to be any other way.

Mr. S. Smith: I rise on a brief supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier simply guarantee that this is going to come forward within the next week, because we've already been waiting about a month for this matter to be dealt with?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not sure that I agree that we've been waiting for a month for this matter to be dealt with. I haven't been privy to the discussions between the House leaders; they've had a number of matters to resolve. We're in the process of working out certain terms of reference for what I think is a priority matter as far as this government is concerned and that is the reference to the standing committee on Natural Resources of Inco and the issues that have been raised by that situation. I hope to have something for the House on Thursday.

And with great respect, Mr. Speaker—in that we're both being very respectful today, the Leader of the Opposition and myself—we will move ahead with it. There are a number of other responsibilities. There are certain conflicts in terms of timetabling, in terms of certain members having to discharge those responsibilities. But I can assure the hon. Leader of the Opposition, yes, we will have a committee and I expect we will deal with it, I can't say within the next three or four days, but we will deal with it shortly.

Mr. S. Smith: I thank the Premier for his answer. I will look forward to hearing from him.

BENZINE LEVELS

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of Labour; this has to do with the fact that the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health in the United States has recommended, as she may know, a new standard for exposure to the cancer-causing agent, benzine, in the work place. Is the minister aware that they have now adopted a one part per million standard and that the occupational health and safety administration branch issued an emergency temporary standard of one part per million in May 1977? Will our present standard of 10 parts per million be lowered to the standard of one per million?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that we've already accommodated that recommendation of NIOSH.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of a supplementary: Do I take it then that in Ontario there is now a standard of one part per million of benzine in the work place and, if so, can the minister explain whether plants where benzine is being used in this province are presently being monitored? Can she table in this House the reports and the findings of such monitoring procedures?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes, I shall attempt to do so.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary, if I may: Is the minister saying that when the regulations embodying the standards for seven particularly hazardous substances under the new Occupational Health Act are tabled, one of them being benzine, it will be at the level of one part per million?

Hon. B. Stephenson: That is my understanding.

ACTIVITIES OF RCMP

Mr. Lewis: I'd like to put a question to the Attorney General if I may. Could I ask him, on behalf of the democratic process generally, and on behalf of this party in particular, to seek from the federal government, from the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General, an understanding of, or particulars about the investigation which was launched by the RCMP, so it is alleged, into the activities of members of the New Democratic Party in the years 1971-73 in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, yes, I am quite prepared to make such a request to the Minister of Justice and the federal Solicitor General.

Mr. Lewis: Without putting an undue trust in the judgement of the Attorney General—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Just as a matter of clarification, Mr. Speaker, I assume the leader of the NDP is talking about New Democratic Party members of this Legislature?

Mr. Lewis: No. Well, it may be, one never knows.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The New Democratic Party in Ontario?

Mr. Lewis: Yes. By way of supplementary, would it be possible, given what we consider and obviously others consider to be extremely disturbing allegations attributed to the RCMP of investigating the activities of various members or factions in well-constituted political parties in this country, the NDP in Ontario at the time, can I ask the Attorney General to demand the information, to peruse it carefully, to make some kind of report to the Ontario Legislature and then to allow us to see whether it might be taken further, say, to the extent of a request for a commission of inquiry?

Mr. Conway: You don't mean the Waffle, do you?

Mr. Lewis: I suspect it went further than that.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: My answer, Mr. Speaker, is yes.

ACTIVITIES OF OPP

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Solicitor General a question? Could he indicate to the House whether the Ontario Provincial Police has, in the pursuit of its duties or felt obligations, looked into activities of people associated with native peoples' groups or with some of the activist groups in relation to native peoples' organizations and movements and if so, on what basis and if so, what was the purpose?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: In the interests of security they keep an eye—and I think I have been asked that question before and used these words before—they keep an eye on a variety of groups. But the member has asked for some specific detail and I will certainly get that detail to the member.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary: I assume the Solicitor General's answer will embody whatever the measure of security it is he thinks should apply, but since he has now said there are such groups looked at by the OPP, could he at least name the groups in his reply? I assume that wouldn't violate any security.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I don't have all of the details now and rather than guess at names and get some of them incorrect, I would rather check the information first, sir.

PRAXIS INQUIRY

Mr. Stong: I have a question for the Attorney General. Yesterday in answer to a question by my colleague, the Leader of the Opposition, concerning the Praxis break-in the minister categorically denied the involvement of the police. I quote from Instant Hansard wherein he said:

“ . . . I can state quite emphatically, Mr. Speaker, that on the basis of the interim report that I have received, there is no evidence whatsoever of any police involvement of any police force, RCMP, Metro Toronto police department or any other police department in this break-in, no evidence whatsoever.”

Could the Attorney General tell us what the terms of reference were for the OPC's investigation into the Praxis matter and will he tell this House whether allegations concerning the receipt of stolen material by the police were considered by the OPC and if so, what their conclusions were?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: First, Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the Legislature yesterday that I did not have a complete report. I made it quite clear that was the information I had up to the time of the break-in and the absence of any police involvement. I indicated that there was some further investigation ongoing in relation to any documents that had been stolen and that I was still waiting a report from the OPC in that context.

The hon. member may recall that this investigation was requested as the result of a letter that I received from the federal Solicitor General indicating to me that a member of the Parliament of Canada had given him certain information or made certain allegations, or perhaps he was simply passing on certain allegations that had been made—and I think that's a more accurate way to describe it—that would indicate that certain members of police forces in Ontario, including Metropolitan Toronto, may have been involved in the break-in. As I recall the history of this matter, that is what prompted me to make this request for an investigation by the Ontario Police Commission.

Mr. Stong: Supplementary: There may not have been a police officer involved, but would the Attorney General assure this House that no agent working for the police was involved, and would he supply us with the terms of reference of this investigation by the OPC?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: At this point in time I don't have a copy of the letter that I wrote to the OPC and I don't recall the nature of the contents, but I can assure the member that I would be quite prepared to advise the House as to the terms of reference in that respect.

Certainly, when I am talking about police involvement, if it came to our attention that someone retained or used by the police as an agent was involved at the request of or motivated by the police to participate in this break-in, that to me would mean police involvement.

Mr. Stong: A further supplementary: Would he assure this House that the police were not passively acquiescent in any alleged breaking of the Criminal Code by receiving the stolen goods and not taking any investigative steps?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I must admit I have some difficulty in understanding that last question.

Mr. Stong: I can repeat the question.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't think it would help me for the member to repeat it.

Mr. Stong: I want to make sure the minister understands it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I hope the member understands the question.

Mr. Stong: I understand the question. Will the minister guarantee that the police were not passively acquiescent in receiving stolen property?

Mr. Sargent: Were they in bed with them?

Mr. Roy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Wiseman: Welcome back, Albert.

Mr. Speaker: How can there be a supplementary to a non-answer?

Ms. Gigantes: You let me have one the other day.

Mr. Speaker: Try it.

Mr. Roy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Attorney General, if I may, when he talks about no involvement on the part of the police; undoubtedly he is aware that to receive stolen documents is an offence. Can he assure this House that, in fact, the police did not break the law by receiving stolen material?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the member for Ottawa East yesterday, and the day before—

Mr. Roy: I have been here often when you are not.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —I indicated that I did not have any final report at the present time in relation to what occurred to the documents after the break-in, so I can give no assurance one way or the other to the members of this Legislature until we have some final report.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, is it not a fact that the Attorney General has an interim report, and can he assure the House that the interim report gives no such indication that there might have been the receipt of stolen goods by somebody on behalf of the police.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There is nothing to add to the answers that I have already given to this matter.

Mr. S. Smith: No assurance?

INDUSTRIAL WASTE DISPOSAL

Mr. Deans: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Can the minister indicate where the liquid industrial waste that is currently being dumped at the Ottawa Street dump in the city of Hamilton will be disposed of after the dump is closed in the very near future?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the region is attempting to establish a sanitary landfill site in Glanbrook. I would assume that if the Ottawa Street site is closed to industrial liquid waste, it will have to find another site.

[2:30]

Mr. Deans: I assume that, too. The question I'm asking the minister is: Where will they be dumping it after the dump is closed?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There are around five million gallons a year, I guess, or something like that—not quite that much; somewhere in between. We'll know better after our waybill system is in operation a little longer.

But in any event, much of this is now being solidified by way of a fixation process being carried out at the Ottawa Street dump at the present time. We're hoping that once this experiment has been completed, there will be fewer problems in the applicant finding another site to dispose of industrial liquid waste which would be subject to this type of solidification.

Also, when the site is closed, it's quite possible that the process will be used to close the Ottawa Street site; in other words, by way of a cover. This is a rock-like material that results from the solidification which can be used to cover the existing site and then hopefully another location will be found.

Mr. Deans: One final supplementary, if I may. Since the minister obviously agrees that it cannot go to Glanbrook—they don't want the dump anyway—and since the Ottawa Street dump is intended to be closed in the very near future, and since there is no application for an alternative site, and since the process the minister talks about has not yet been finalized or approved, what are they going to do in the meantime?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: First of all we still have to have a hearing for the Glanbrook site, so I wouldn't assume that the Ottawa Street site will be closed much before next year, or certainly this time next year.

The certificate that has been issued to the company now carrying out this experiment will expire next June. Some time between now and then they will make application for another location to carry out this experiment and for permanent disposal of industrial liquid waste.

Mr. Deans: Will that require a hearing?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes.

IMMIGRATION POLICY

Mr. Reid: I have a question for the Provincial Secretary for Social Development in regard to Ontario's immigration policy. Can the minister tell the House what policy guidelines Ontario has in regard to immigration to the province, in view of the fact that the majority of immigrants still come to the province of Ontario, and what input she had into Bill C-24 and the regulations under that Act?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, we are still awaiting the regulations that will be in the new Immigration Act. We have had opportunity for several meetings with Mr. Andras and latterly, Mr. Cullen. There has been no direction yet as to the mechanism that will be established for ongoing consultation with the provinces and with the federal government.

The Act has not been proclaimed as yet, but we expect that that will happen momentarily.

Mr. Reid: Supplementary: Because Ontario has the jurisdiction under the British North America Act, and Quebec, in fact, has taken a very strong role in immigration policy, has the minister indicated to the federal government that the government of Ontario wants only people from certain areas of the world with certain skills, and that, in fact, these people must be directed to particular areas in the province of Ontario?

Can she share with the House the suggestions she's made to the federal government in this regard?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: There has been no discussion at this point in time of that kind of direction from the provincial government to the federal authorities.

Mr. Reid: We have no policy with regard to immigration in Ontario?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Right.

PROTECTION OF HUNTERS

Mr. Samis: May I ask the Minister of Natural Resources what he is doing to protect the rights of Ontario hunters in the St. Lawrence River between Gananoque and the Quebec border, where, as he's familiar, they're obliged—at gunpoint—to pay licence fees from the Indians' St. Regis reserve, as well as the government of Ontario, in waters marked by his ministry as belonging to the province of Ontario.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There are probably a couple of problems in that particular area. One is: Where does Ontario end and Quebec begin? That has been in dispute for some time. The second is: Where does the St. Regis band have jurisdiction? I understand in the case of Indian bands, and this particular Indian band, charging a fee to hunt on what they consider to be their own reserve, that we have not entered into the argument. We believe that to be a federal matter. We are waiting for a clarification of the actual boundaries before we take any action.

As far as the Quebec-Ontario boundary is concerned, that has been an ongoing dispute for some time and I really don't have a mechanism at my disposal to prevent some of the Quebec enforcement officers from coming out and claiming one is fishing in Quebec. I think one just simply needs to be a bit cautious when out fishing there because, as the member knows, one doesn't need a licence on our side of the border, but does on theirs.

Mr. Samis: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker — and I point out to the minister the question doesn't refer to Quebec. Would the minister discuss with the Attorney General and the Solicitor General what measures are being undertaken, I reiterate, to protect the rights of Ontario citizens in Ontario waters so they don't have to pay double and so they can exercise their constitutional rights and in view of the fact that no claim has been filed with the federal Ministry of Indian and Northern Affairs as to this new jurisdiction being claimed?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Certainly we are not going to request an Ontario citizen to pay two licences if he is hunting on land that is not part of an Indian reservation.

Mr. Samis: I think the minister misunderstood the question, Mr. Speaker. I am asking about people who are being forced to pay—to the band obviously—in waters and territory recognized by his ministry and the ministry maps as Ontario waters and Ontario land, and not part of the St. Regis reserve.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The problem is that it isn't recognized by the Indians as not being part of the St. Regis reserve and that is the thing we are trying to clarify.

Mr. Roy: Supplementary: Is the minister saying really that after 35 years of Tory rule in this province they haven't even determined the boundaries of the province yet?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would suspect one might say after many years of Grit rule in Ottawa they haven't figured out where the boundaries are yet.

Mr. MacDonald: Do you both feel better now?

Mr. Lewis: That's one thing we could do, Mr. Speaker, without public ownership.

SMALL BUSINESS ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Eakins: A question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism: Today marks the first meeting of the minister's advisory committee on small business. Will this meeting be open or closed?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The initial meeting will be closed, to introduce the members—

Mr. Stong: Why?

Some hon. members: Why?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Just wait until I finish answering the question. I never heard such a group that asked questions and then wanted to answer them themselves. I'll tell them a hell of a great deal more intelligence is going to come from this side than from that side.

The reason, obviously, will be to introduce the members from various parts of the province of Ontario and to describe to them very clearly the terms of reference, and then set them on their course. I have no doubts as time proceeds down the road we will have meetings by the small business advisory committee.

Mr. S. Smith: Why does that have to be closed? What is so secretive about it?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The intelligence coming from that side this afternoon is nil, so why don't the members opposite sit and be quiet for a moment?

We will then travel throughout the province and have an opportunity of meeting with various people in small business.

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary: Would the minister consider in the future a format of a meeting similar to the PMLC and would he consider the inclusion of the opposition critics on the committee?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the racket being raised by the opposition caused my answer to be unobserved by the member. I said that this committee will travel, likely throughout the province, where the members of the third party and people in the business community will have a chance to present their position, their cases and their observations in relationship to legislation and other programs of this House.

Mr. Breithaupt: Once the course has been decided.

HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

Mr. Foulds: A question of the Minister of Labour: What steps is the minister willing to take as guardian of the Human Rights Commission to prevent the kind of apparently vindictive action taken by the Ontario Minor Hockey League Association in withholding the coaching card of Barry Webb of Huntsville, apparently because he testified at a Human Rights Commission hearing on the behalf of Gail Cummings, a 10-year-old girl who wished to play hockey?

Hon. B. Stephenson: In difficult situations such as this one apparently has become, the staff of the Human Rights Commission does its best to conciliate the problem between the two partners or the two parties to the problem. That is precisely the role which they will be attempting to fill in trying to resolve an action which I would think on the surface would appear to be patently unfair.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Doesn't the minister think that there is an important point of principle that must be established publicly by the Legislature—that a person who testifies before a Human Rights Commission inquiry cannot therefore be punished for that testimony? And isn't she afraid that if this is not resolved quickly and publicly that intimidation of this kind will prevent witnesses from testifying at Human Rights Commission inquiries and therefore nullify the power and the effectiveness of the Human Rights Commission?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not quite so cynical I suppose about the motives and the directions which the citizens of this province will follow. I believe that those who are specifically concerned, who feel that they must assist in bearing the burden of enhancing the role of human rights will come forward in any case. I would hope that the response to this specific action will not become general and we shall certainly do our best to increase our educational programs to ensure that it does not become general. But I firmly believe that most of the people in this province would not act in that kind of apparently vindictive way.

Mr. Lewis: It won't get him back his job.

DRUG PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Leluk: I have a question of the Attorney General. In May of this year the drug magazine, High Times, was not permitted entry into Ontario by Canada Customs because of its questionable content. Since this magazine is now being printed and distributed in Ontario and in Canada, has the minister's legal staff had the opportunity to assess its contents and do these contents, in fact, contravene section 422(a) or any other section of the Criminal Code of Canada? The second part of my question: It is my understanding that this matter came up for discussion last week at the meeting of the Attorneys General in Charlottetown. Would the minister inform this House as to the outcome of those deliberations?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member mentioned, the federal authorities took steps to prevent the admission into Canada of this magazine, known as High Times. Since that particular time, apparently, they have moved their publishing operation to Ontario and I understand that the police authorities have not yet been able to learn just where this magazine is being printed.

The Premier of Prince Edward Island, who is also the Attorney General of that province, brought up the issue of the matter of High Times at the Attorneys General conference in Charlottetown last week because of his concern. It was generally agreed that under the present provisions of the Criminal Code a successful prosecution might be difficult.

There is some issue as to whether, for example, it might be prosecuted under the counselling sections of the Criminal Code, but again, there is some doubt expressed as to the likelihood of a successful prosecution of this magazine which seems to be directed mostly to encouraging people to use drugs. The consensus of the provincial Attorneys General who were at that meeting was that amendments should be considered to the Criminal Code and the provinces will all be participating in making recommendations for amendments which would cover this particular problem. It's then going to be taken up by a meeting of the Deputy Attorneys General in approximately seven or eight weeks time.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: In view of the fact that I find it rather difficult to believe that the minister can't find where the magazine is being printed, would he tell us what steps have been taken to obtain that information? Also, it was my understanding that he had launched prosecutions against some distributors; can he tell us what the state of those prosecutions is now?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think the hon. member has been in the Legislature long enough to know that the Ministry of the Attorney General is not an investigative or police agency so we are not in the investigation business. Secondly, there are to my knowledge no outstanding prosecutions against this magazine or the distributors thereof. I've already indicated to the members of the House what are considered to be the inherent difficulties in a successful prosecution.

INDUSTRY RELOCATION

Mr. Roy: A question to our globe-trotting Minister of Industry and Tourism: I'd like to ask the minister—apart from congratulating him on his haircut—what initiatives he or his ministry are taking to combat the initiatives taken by some northern US states, which have taken the initiative to lure away Canadian companies from Ontario and from Quebec, especially into northern New York? I'd like to ask the minister whether he has taken any steps, in view of the fact that last year some 40 companies moved from Ontario and Quebec into the northern US, especially New York State, including 25 companies from Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: To answer the last part of the question first, we recognize very clearly that there were some companies in Ontario and Quebec that did take branch plant operations into the northern United States. They went there for the simple reason that the cost of production was less. They could produce their goods and send them into other parts of the United States at a lesser cost than they could do it either in Quebec or Ontario.

Mr. Sargent: Less taxes too.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: That could very well be, Mr. Speaker, less taxes—also the payroll and a few other things, the social amenities in this province, are somewhat greater than they are in the United States; we recognized that fact right at the start.

The first part of the question was “What have we done?” We have made available to municipalities the opportunity of low interest-rate of money for the development of industrial parks. Indeed, we’ve made OBIP loans available to industries to establish in, particularly eastern and northern Ontario, to help them establish at a lesser rate that would make their production system and the end product more attractive on the market.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary to the minister’s question—

Hon. Mr. Bennett: It was not my question.

Mr. Roy: —to the minister’s answer: In view of the fact that the initiatives he has talked about are not new initiatives, but initiatives they have had going for some time, and in view of the fact that these initiatives have not worked and Canadian companies are going to the northern US, what new initiatives or plans does he have to encourage Ontario companies to stay within Ontario, and what plans does he have to make our production more efficient?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Very clearly, I wish the member would get it straight that these companies did not leave Ontario. They set up branch plant operations in the United States; that we clearly understand. The fact remains that they set up their plants in the United States to keep some degree of stability in their firms. The fact is they could not sell their products being produced on this side of the border.

I do not admit that the plans we have in place, the OBIP plan and the industrial parts program, have not assisted. There are still applications being dealt with the development corporations in northern and eastern Ontario to assist companies to establish.

As far as labour rates are concerned, that’s something that has to be dealt with at the individual manufacturing level, between the employees and the employer, or the union and the employer.

Let me go on to the next phase of it. The Premier, the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) and I have said very clearly and distinctly that in the field of productivity there is more than just labour involved, and the cost of labour. This province has been seeking out—on a world basis—new foreign investment and new capital for the development and advancement of industry in the province. Indeed, we must find companies that are prepared to put more time and money into research and development in this province. With those investments in place—

Mr. Lewis: How are you going to do that?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: —and that’s what we’ve been doing through the ministry’s encouragement—while we haven’t been successful in all areas we recognize the fact there has been a great deal put into place and the fact that there are still employment opportunities in eastern and northern Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, this is intolerable.

Mr. Wildman: A supplementary: Could the minister report to the House on the results of his initiatives to try to ensure that the jobs at Anaconda will be saved, in spite of the upgrading of the—

Mr. Speaker: That’s not a supplementary.

Mr. Wildman: It has to do with—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa East with a supplementary.

Mr. Roy: In view of earlier statements that the minister made in July when this matter was brought to his attention, I wonder if he could advise us whether he’s prepared to stand by an earlier statement that he made in July. He said that if US firms were, in fact, luring Quebec companies into the US, it was an awful game to be playing; but the minister said that he was going to get in that game himself, to be competitive with the US and lure Quebec firms into Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The member should go on to read the rest of the quotation. The Premier has said it and I have said it, and let’s make it clear once again in this House—

Mr. Roy: The Premier, especially.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Let’s make it very clear in this House to the hon. member and to the people of the province of Ontario, that in this day of trouble for Quebec we, as a province, have not gone into Quebec seeking their industry.

Mr. Roy: That’s not because of you. That’s because the minister’s hands were tied by the Premier.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: They were not tied by the Premier, one bit.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member was saying it was the Liberal policy to do it. He said it on Friday.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: It's a policy decision of this government and I stand by it, and I think the member should stand by it too, because there's a thing known as national unity to be considered.

Mr. Roy: Don't worry. Don't worry.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You are in trouble now. You are in trouble.

Mr. Roy: Who was reprimanded by the Premier?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: My ministry is well aware of certain firms in the province of Quebec that have indicated possibilities of their moving. They have been to this province and they have been to other parts of Canada; indeed, they've been into the United States seeking out a potential place for locating. We have not tried to lure them into the province of Ontario because we do not think that—

Mr. Roy: I hope not.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Will the member let me finish? We do not think that in the long range it's to the advantage of this province or this country. We do not.

We believe while we might today secure some firms from the province of Quebec into Ontario, in the short term it would be beneficial, but on a long-term basis it has no profitability to this country whatsoever.

Mr. Wildman: Firms from Buffalo are moving into Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: And so I stand by my word—that if we are aware of the fact that there are firms that want to come to Ontario—

Mr. Sargent: Why don't you sit down?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The member for Grey Bruce is sitting down and that's where he should be, let me assure him.

Mr. Roy: To think we let this loose on the whole world.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You don't want to listen.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The last part of the question by the hon. member is one that I'll answer directly. I said that if we found that there were American states penetrating some of the companies, whether they be in the province of Quebec or other provinces of Canada, then we would put our forces in the Ministry of Industry and Tourism to work to try to persuade them to stay on the north side of the border—in the province of Ontario, for the good of this economy and the economy of Canada.

An hon. member: Well, while you were away, they were leaving.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary to the original question: Can the Minister of Industry and Tourism say what steps the ministry is taking in order to stop production and jobs being transferred to the United States at the direction of, or under pressure from, the head office of subsidiaries resident in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Where we find there is such a situation developing, we have sent our people into the United States to speak with their management. If the member has some particular ones that he is thinking of, if he'd let me know, I'll follow them up with our records to see whether they are the same ones.

Mr. Wildman: Anaconda.

An hon. member: You could easily find them.

Mr. Cassidy: Anaconda.

An hon. member: Twenty-five firms last year. You should know.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary on this, the hon. member for London Centre.

Mr. Peterson: This is a supplementary with respect to the first supplementary the minister had today. He referred to the initiative of the government, of the Premier running cap-in-hand to Japan and various other countries to ask them to buy us out or to invest here in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't wear a cap.

Mr. Reid: That's because it's in your hand all the time.

Mr. Peterson: In the process the minister was addressing the question of capital shortage here in Ontario. Is it his view that the huge government spending and the deficits created thereby, and the necessary intrusions into the capital market by governments, helped to cause this problem and what is he going to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I wouldn't want to prejudge whether the intrusion into the capital marketplace by governments has caused this shortage or not. Indeed, there is a lack of confidence in investment in Canada at the moment.

The Premier of this province and the Premiers of several provinces in this country have gone into the foreign market to try to put back a degree of confidence in investment in Canada and the various provinces. We're not alone in travelling in the world market. Thank goodness, we do go out into the world market.

There's only one way—and the federal ministers are doing a fair job; I give them credit for travelling in the world market and trying to build a degree of confidence in the economy here and the opportunity of investment. The only way we're going to encourage people to invest in this province and in this country is if the people in the higher political offices go out and speak with the industrialists and the investment community. In that way we'll generate the confidence which is necessary. The businessman then follows up to sell his particular commodity, product or technology which will then turn an advantage to this province.

CONDOMINIUM LEGISLATION

Mr. Philip: I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. A couple of weeks ago he reported that the report of the Kealey condominium study group would not be tabled for yet another eight weeks, even though the minister's predecessor had stated it would be ready in March 1977 and the Premier had promised it for June 1977. Is the minister prepared to approach the Premier at least with a view to releasing Darwin Kealey—

Mr. Cassidy: Just release him that's all.

Mr. Philip: —to prepare the kinds of legislation which will come from the report so that at least we can get some legislation before us and as soon as possible following the tabling of the report?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, we think it would be appropriate first to receive the report of the study group, which is no doubt going to be a fine and extensive report, in view of its author. Only after we receive the report will this government consider going to legislation. It's a habit we have of waiting to get the report of the people who have been asked to study it before we prepare some legislation.

Mr. Swart: Where's the Municipal Elections Act? We've been waiting for that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Having said that, let me assure the hon. member that the report, I'm told, is at the printers. It will be a matter of, I think, three to five weeks until it is available.

Mr. McClellan: Is it being written by hand?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Hon. members will have it as soon as I have it, and we will be considering it forthwith after that, hopefully with some legislation next year.

Mr. Philip: Supplementary: Is the minister aware of statements made by Darwin Kealey in the Toronto Star which confirmed the minister's new delay but also stated, and I quote: "The report will avoid Band-Aid solutions to existing problems such as defects in construction," and can the minister tell us whether this means that legislation will not deal with the number one problem, namely the ripoff of consumers by construction companies, or is he planning on writing to the construction companies to ask whether they're ripping off the public?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I thought I'd have the member for Welland-Thorald write a little contractor in Buffalo to get that information for me.

Mr. Swart: You won't get it from me.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I want to make it clear that there is no ministerial delay involved, as the hon. member tried to slip into his first question. The report has been submitted to the printers. I haven't seen it.

Mr. MacDonald: They must be the slowest printers in the world.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So the comments of the hon. member with regard to some of the other matters, that it won't be a Band-Aid solution and so on, may be true, but I haven't seen the report. When I see it—and, as I say, hon. members will see it as soon as I see it—then we can both comment upon the action to be taken.

Mr. Warner: In the fullness of time.

Mr. Philip: A further supplementary: If the minister hasn't yet seen it, and if the minister is not prepared to make statements on it, would he then at least inform Darwin Kealey to stop setting off false alarms in the press before we have an opportunity to look at the report?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Firstly I want to reaffirm there's no point in saying, "if I haven't seen it." I haven't seen it. The answer is that Mr. Kealey obviously has seen it and is quite free to comment in a general sense without, I would think, disclosing any of the specifics with regard to how comprehensive the report is going to be.

[3:00]

I might say that I think very many people who are awaiting the outcome of the report and the subsequent legislation and who are worried about their rights, are, indeed, entitled to some assurance by the author of the report that it is not going to be an interim or piecemeal document. I think it's quite appropriate, normal and healthy for the author of the report and the head of the study group to say: "Look, we have produced a very comprehensive, wide-ranging report." I think that's healthy and important, and if he wants to say it time and again, I will encourage him to provide that assurance.

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Hon. J. A. Taylor: On Friday, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition asked if I would explain an apparent discrepancy between figures cited in two documents—

Mr. Lewis: You are in his pay. I am sure you are on his payroll.

Hon. J. A. Taylor:—which I had tabled concerning the construction of the Bruce heavy water plants. The first set of figures, $416 million for 1975 and $506 million for 1977, refers only to the Lummus portion of the construction costs on plant B. The second set of figures, $567 million for 1975 and $739 million for 1977, refers to the Lummus portion plus the Ontario Hydro portion of the costs.

The Leader of the Opposition asked if these differences—he called it a discrepancy—were in any way related to a hand-written notation on one of the sheets which said: "First two sheets only for ministry." The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, the difference appears to be that the Hydro portion was originally estimated at $150-some-odd million and it ended up at practically $260 million. Can the minister explain the discrepancy in the Hydro portion of that contract?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Again, if the hon. member will look at those figures—the Hydro portion in 1975 was $151 million and in 1977 was $233 million. The explanation was given previously.

Mr. Lewis: That was a little better. I wouldn't give you a passing grade but that was better.

EDWARDSBURGH LAND ASSEMBLY

Mr. Conway: A question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism: What is the reaction of his office to the interim ministerial report referred to in the recent report of the Ontario Land Corporation with respect to the disposition of the famed Edwardsburgh land assembly as "an experimental farm for eastern Ontario"?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I think if the hon. member would read the Hansard of last night's estimates committee, he would find my remarks in full. I said I thought that in the long range, we will continue to have the land available for heavy and large industrial development, but that I thought it was important at this stage, while economics are down and there is little possibility of locating an industry for that particular park, it was best that we put the land to some use and we are following the recommendation as described in the Dillon report.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: Are we to deduce from that that this showcase for the industrial development of eastern Ontario is to be allowed to lapse into some kind of experimental farm in the absence of any concrete initiatives to produce the kind of industrial development that this government spoke so glowingly of two and a half years ago?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we spoke very glowingly of it two and a half years ago.

An hon. member: You didn't.

Mr. Roy: That's right. You didn't know about it until you were appointed.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I think if the hon. member would look at the economics of the times, they were somewhat different to those we face today; not only in Ontario and Canada but in the world situation.

Mr. Roy: That's because you're in charge.

Mr. Foulds: The minister just can't manage the economy, can he?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: If the member for Ottawa East were here more often, he would know what was going on.

Interjections.

Mr. Nixon: The minister just got back from a world trip at the expense of the taxpayers.

Mr. Roy: A round-the-world trip.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: At least mine was on behalf of the people of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, for a short period of time we intend to use it between the Ministry of Natural Resources and my ministry in its further exploration.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: There's nothing out of order. We have had enough time on this. The hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine with a new question.

Mr. Roy: There is evidence of your record in Edwardsburgh. You do a helluva job.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Watch your language.

BURNING PCBs

Ms. Bryden: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Will the minister explain to the House the precise difference between a certificate of approval for experimental burnings of PCBs and a certificate of approval for regular burnings? In particular, will he clarify the status of the certificate of approval, dated January 8, 1976, issued to the St. Lawrence Cement Company in Mis-

Mississauga—I have a copy of this—which authorizes the burning of PCBs without any reference to experiments, and which has no expiry date and no limit on the volume of burnings to be allowed?

Is this certificate of approval still in effect, or did the minister issue another order abrogating it or suspending it in June or May, or whenever it is he said they stopped burnings? I am asking the minister if he could clarify the position of this certificate; and if there is any subsequent order, table that order for us so that we may know what the position is at Mississauga regarding whether burnings can continue under the present order or stop.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The question was in about 10 different parts. Very briefly, the certificate that the hon. member refers to for the burning of PCB material was issued as part of the ongoing experiment at St. Lawrence Cement. In order to complete the experiment, it is necessary to have what would be a typical burn, in other words using the type of material so that the experiment could be assessed to see if the material could be handled in that way and to see if PCBs were being destroyed sufficiently to allow the certificate to continue.

The certificate itself doesn't use the word "experiment" nor does it use the word "permanent." It is just a certificate with, as the hon. member says, certain conditions. It was in effect, I believe, from January, 1976, until about May of this year. At that time, there was an analysis by one of the federal agencies we had involved in the experiment of the PCB burn during that period of time. It was then that the recommendation was made that certain changes be made in respect of the handling of the material, and also recommending certain on-site monitoring. At that time as well, as the hon. member will recall, there was some controversy over the importation of some PCB-contaminated material, I believe from Iowa.

At that time, because of the analysis, we stopped the burning of PCB-contaminated material, that is since May up to and including now. At the present time no PCB-contaminated material is being burned at that plant.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: Did the ministry issue an order or a letter suspending this particular certificate of approval, since it has no time limit on it and it doesn't say "experiment"? If so, would he table this letter and indicate to us on what terms the resumption of burning would be allowed, if the certificate of approval is still in effect.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is my understanding that verbal instructions went out to the company. It is quite possible that was covered by a letter, I will find that out. As far as recommencing goes that will not take place until after we have a public meeting.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: What does the minister mean by a public meeting? The last time we talked, it was a public hearing. Are we going to have a public hearing under the Environmental Hearing Board, as anyone who asked that question would have assumed, or is the minister now neatly backtracking because of the anger of the civil servants in the ministry that he had committed himself publicly to a public hearing, and he is just going to have one of those information meetings? Which is it going to be?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is not a question of backtracking at all. As I said before, a hearing under the Environmental Protection Act is not required as far as the burn is concerned.

Mr. Lewis: But in this Legislature the minister said a hearing.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: All right. The fact is that the idea I have at the present time is to have a public meeting this month. It would be impossible to have a hearing under the Environmental Protection Act certainly before the first of the year. It takes time to set that up, with the advertising and that sort of thing.

Mr. Lewis: Fine, all right.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: So in order to have a quick public meeting so that we can allay some of the concerns in Mississauga—

Mr. Lewis: So it is a retreat from the minister's commitment.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —we will have a public meeting hopefully before the end of this month, at which time the people involved in that experiment from my ministry and other agencies can explain exactly what's been going on there. If we feel it is necessary then to go further under the Environmental Protection Act, that decision will be made.

Mr. Lewis: So the minister has moved away from the commitment that was made.

Mr. Foulds: Weasled out.

TRAPPING LICENCES

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. Would the minister review the new requirement this year, where trappers are required to get permission from all landowners in writing before a licence is issued; would he do so in view of the fact that many municipal leaders are refusing to sign, and also in view of the fact that there seems to be some apparent disagreement within the trappers' association?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that it's as easy as it sounds. My sympathies are with the trappers. I have looked at the new regulation, and in particular the form that was changed this year upon which they have to have some indication that they have permission to trap on private lands. That, of course, is not new. On any lands that they don't own, it's just like any common trespass; one may not enter upon lands that are not his own without permission. For many years that's been a requirement not really adhered to too strictly. Certainly our staff have been told, at least for this year, to back off of that requirement while we have a chance to look at the forms and come to a better conclusion.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

CORPORATIONS TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener moved first reading of Bill 88, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: Mr. Speaker, as I stated earlier, this bill is a major step forward in Ontario's tax simplification program.

Mr. Cassidy: It's not simple.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: It ties the Ontario Corporations Tax Act to the Income Tax Act of Canada where both governments have the same policy.

Mr. Foulds: One of 10,000 steps.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: For many years, Ontario has closely paralleled most federal actions as they concern the taxation of corporations. The basic reason for this is to prevent the growth of a tax jungle, while at the same time providing the province with the flexibility to operate its own tax policy where needed.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order in the chamber, please. Everybody has the right to be heard.

Mr. Lewis: There are exceptions, and this is one of them.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: This bill has three main elements. First, there are some administrative amendments, the most significant of which is an increase in the flexibility in the rules governing appeals.

Mr. Lewis: I don't know how we lost that seat.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: Second, the bill includes provisions to allow for special tax incentives for investors in venture investment corporations.

The third element is the most important, and that is the simplification of the corporations tax itself. This bill provides that where the policies of Ontario and the federal government are the same concerning the taxation of corporations, the relevant provisions of the Income Tax Act of Canada will apply for Ontario purposes.

ANSWERS TO WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Before the orders of the day I wish to table the answers to questions 25, 26 and 28, and the interim answer to question 27 standing on the notice paper. (See appendix, page 1409.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

SUCCESSION LAW REFORM ACT

Resumption of the adjourned debate in committee of the whole House on Bill 60, An Act to reform the Law respecting Succession to the Estates of Deceased Persons.

On section 69:

Mr. Chairman: I believe when the committee was sitting previously there was an amendment before it, by the member for Carleton East, to section 69. Does the member for Carleton East have any further comments?

Ms. Gigantes: Yes, Mr. Chairman, we were in the midst of a discussion relating to that motion to delete, in which the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) had described to the House the reasons the government felt that subsection (1)(a)(XII) should remain within the bill. He was citing, Mr. Chairman, cases from English precedent in which there is some jurisprudence on the phrase "a course of conduct which is obvious and gross" or "gross and obvious conduct." I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that is not the phrase which is being presented to us in this bill. I consider it quite important that we realize the distinction between the jurisprudence, which is being cited by the Attorney General for establishing this phraseology, and realize that the jurisprudence he is citing does not, as far as I can understand it, apply to the phraseology which is proposed here.

Here we are dealing not with "gross and obvious conduct" at all. Here we are dealing with "conduct that is an obvious and gross repudiation." I would like, Mr. Chairman, to suggest that we should not try and es-establish a new kind of jurisprudence with this new phraseology. If the Attorney General has any explanation to offer about what he feels would be the reading of the courts of Ontario in trying to establish what is conduct which is an obvious and gross repudiation of the relationship, I would be interested to hear it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, I don't think I have anything to add to what I said the other day. I appreciated the concern of the hon. member for Carleton East and with that in mind I had one of the senior law officers write the hon. member for Carleton East a fairly lengthy letter—some four pages—on October 28, 1977, which I trust reached her attention, attempting to clarify the issue further. It would appear we have not satisfied her, and I don't think it is going to serve any useful purpose to take up further time of the Legislature in that effort, other than to say that I don't think we should be intimidated by the suggestion that the courts of this province will be asked to embark upon the development of further jurisprudence.

Obviously, Mr. Chairman, this is a necessary adjunct to any legislation, particularly legislation that is of a reform nature. This particular section may not satisfy the member as a useful reform; but certainly in our view it is part and parcel of legislation that I think is important reform legislation, therefore it will be up to the courts to develop the necessary jurisprudence.

I refer to the English cases because I think they are indeed very useful in determining the meaning of the words "obvious" and "gross." I don't think these English authorities have any further significance other than what I've referred to, except to indicate the general approach now taken by the courts in conduct questions.

Although these decisions were decisions of English courts and not necessarily binding on Ontario courts, they will obviously be given great weight by our courts. I don't think there is anything further I can usefully add at this time, other than to state that this matter has been canvassed with the family law section of the Canadian Bar Association and I'm so advised it is in favour of the wording in this form.

Ms. Bryden: I share the concern of my colleague from Carleton East regarding the inclusion of this clause in this bill. We know that in the past conduct clauses of this sort regarding successions and divorces have tended to be applied rather one-sidedly against the female person. I realize the legislation makes no such discrimination, but there are still traditional views that may tend to cause a continuation of that situation.

I realize that the wording has been changed somewhat to try to make it apply perhaps only in very extreme situations. However, I think the principle of including it means there will be considerable weight put on this element in any contested situation, when there are many other factors to be taken into account. I would like to see it removed; then if we find from experience there are cases where there appears to be very serious miscarriages of justice, we could consider putting something back in that might cover any situation where there is a miscarriage of justice.

I would like to see us consider taking it out and then see what happens. Then we will not have the situation of conduct becoming a major element in almost every litigation, which can lead to very serious and bad relationships between the contesting parties and can cause a great deal of pain and hurt. For those reasons I would rather see us go toward a sort of no-fault principle.

Mr. Lawlor: Because I find myself, on this issue, somewhat at odds with certain of my colleagues, I would like to put on the record my own feelings about this matter. I would, of course, retain the clause and retain the clause precisely as written. The move towards no-fault in a number of fields is acceptable, in the spirit of the times and the Weltanschauung, and will come to pass. The law doesn't work that way, and populations are not so reformed overnight. It is done by accretions.

In the particular move here, there is a clause embedded among 16 headings. Only one among those 16 headings, albeit an important one, is subject to the determination of the court as to where the emphasis will lie.

It is assumed, and too grotesquely and immediately—and presumptively assumed—that it will be given paramountcy, leading to even possibly exclusive operation by some woebegone and benighted judiciary, who can't read statutes and who don't know the present tenor of the law; the present tenor of the law being that it is in a position of paramountcy, that various forms of marital failure or marital misdemeanour are considered as being fairly determinative of the issue. The very way in which this is couched, the fact that it is embedded in the context that it is, is a clear pointer to the judiciary of what the intent is. I also argue that many, particularly of the younger members of the judiciary, have asked for and welcome this new orientation.

It's not just a question of emphasis, it is orientation. It's a changed viewpoint, deeply reaching into laws that are well over 500 years old. Here we have very searching and rooted distinctions being made, and the thing being presented in such a way as to have that particular effect.

Secondly, you have to take a look at the very wording. Not only is it placed in this subordinate position, as one ingredient among many, but the wording itself is, over against your initial use of the term "conduct" in the legislation that was brought in approximately two years ago, so watered down, so—I wouldn't want to use the word emasculated—that again they're in a double move to meet the recognized spirit of the times in these matters. But to remove conduct completely as a consideration in extreme cases, in cases where conduct is a looming factor, seems to me to be irresponsible. As a matter of fact, the whole argument revolves around the notion of responsibility.

In some ways, you know, there are two prongs to this thing. The one prong is, under the impressive contemporary psychology, the greater and greater tendency is to see that no one is responsible for very little. In other words, our subconscious activities, our motives, our instinctual behaviour, acquired behavioural patterns, environmental influences on behaviour—all these things are supposed to so diminish our sense of personal responsibility as to lift the burden of making choices and of performing certain acts which are highly detrimental to human relationships.

The whole purpose, if I may go aside just for a moment, the whole purpose of psychoanalysis is to liberate people into being responsible, not the opposite; to remove the full human development implied in the term "responsibility." That's one thing. Then, even if it's admitted that responsibility is recognized and being exercised as between spouses but you can't sort it out, that it is over such a long period of time so intertwined and so many subtle and delicate relationships, a word said wrong on a particular evening, a fact the husband turned his back—you know, a million things which novelists write novels about—these are the things that it would be unfair to seek to sort out or in any way to determine.

[3:30]

But surely in our human relationships, if I offend you or you me, whatever your motivation may be and whatever grounds, there are cases in which this becomes quite gross, where it becomes very obvious. It shows, to some degree, that you have gone out of your way.

If I'm particularly kind on a particular occasion the same thing applies. Certain credence and credit is given to individuals in those relationships. They're recognized as contributing factors to unity and to people coming together just as other things are distinctly adverse to the forming of good relationships.

I give the judiciary and us, in common life, the good sense of being able to make some kind of assessment of that. It's not for the purposes of casting blame or making judgements upon the deportment and manners, or even the morals of other human beings. It is simply to say who has disrupted this relationship with a greater or lesser degree of deliberation. There have been many instances of this. To remove it entirely is wrong, so I go the opposite way of my colleague who just spoke. I would leave it there and let the jurisprudence develop around it. I have high hopes that jurisprudence will meet all our assents. I have every reason to believe that that will be the case, from my experience in law.

If it doesn't, then we can amend it. But to go holus-bolus in the opposite direction, and to have all this all or nothing, in any particular context, strikes me as a little too logical. I can't agree with my colleague from Carleton East who reads this with the subtlety of a grammarian.

As a matter of fact, the way it's worded may be more difficult in the application of the concept of conduct than if the gross and obvious were related to conduct qua—it's related to conduct leading to repudiation.

I think the judiciary looking at that is going to have to look at acts which are acts of repudiation—overt, gross acts of this particular kind, and there are such acts left in the world—and whether the other spouse should support and maintain an individual in face of those acts; with the consequences bred from that, namely, that that spouse will feel deeply offended and will say: "What kind of a law is that, and I'm damned if I'll pay." And everyone of us will bow our heads and say, in the circumstances: "I wouldn't pay either if I were in your shoes. I'd go to jail first."

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, just very briefly. I appreciate the remarks and the customary wisdom of the member for Lakeshore. Perhaps for the benefit of other members in the Legislature who have not received copies of the correspondence submitted to the member for Carleton East, I could give an example of the type of conduct that will concern the English courts. These two cases were outlined to the member for Carleton East.

The first was the case of Novak and Novak where the husband, by the use of an axe, killed children four and five years old. Not surprisingly enough, that was considered gross and obvious conduct. But this is the English jurisprudence.

In the case of Jones and Jones, after the husband's physical abuse of his wife the couple separated; it was after cohabitation the husband attacked his wife with a knife causing a 75 per cent disability to her right hand. Again, this is considered to be a case of gross and obvious conduct. So I think it's an indication of the narrow application, and very strict application, that the English courts have given to this phrase.

Again, I'd remind the members that this has a particular significance with respect to the Succession Law Reform Act, because we're not talking about people who are alive, we're talking about someone who has died and we're talking about interfering with testamentary capacity. Obviously when one awards support out of the estate on such an application, the court is interfering with the testamentary capacity of the deceased, and certainly, innocent third-party beneficiaries actually are the ones who will bear the loss. I think that is an added reason why this clause is one of the 16 clauses that should be considered in such an application.

Mr. Roy: I would like to make a few comments on the amendment. The first point I would like to pick up on is the last comment by the Attorney General; to me, that's the one that has to be emphasized strenuously.

It's a fact that one of the sacred principles built up in jurisprudence over many centuries is to try to preserve what the Attorney General has talked about; that is the wishes of the testator. We have seen a whole line of cases or jurisprudence built up over the years where courts are, in fact, very nearly standing on their heads to try to follow the wishes of the testator. This type of application in fact is giving jurisdiction to the courts to interfere with that, because on the question of priorities and on the question of principles, it says there may be one higher priority—that's the dependant's needs—which may be affected; it gives the court jurisdiction to interfere with the testator's wishes. That certainly has to be kept in mind.

The second thing I would like to say is that it appears to me that as lawmakers, which we are, what the member for Carleton

East is suggesting is the law as it possibly should be or the law as we would wish it to be. Unfortunately, that's not how the world operates. In many instances the law has to reflect reality. If the law is not reflective of reality or there's too much gap between—

Mr. Lawlor: Use an argument like that and I will vote against it.

Mr. Roy: I just say to my colleague from Lakeshore, there are many occasions when I am sitting here and trying to follow exactly what he's saying. But I override that; I say "He must mean this," so I go along or I try to follow my own path.

Mr. Lawlor: That word "reality."

Ms. Gigantes: He has followed you. He is just reasoning.

Mr. Roy: But the point that I think is important, and the one that the member for Carleton East must understand, is that if there is too much gap between the law and what is reality, people will not respect the law. So we have to pass laws here which reflect what reality is.

Many of us who have had experience in family law, in marital relationships and things of this nature have come to the conclusion, as the member for Lakeshore has, that a point is reached where the husband or wife, one of the spouses, says: "Look, in these circumstances I feel that the conduct is such that it does not bind, that in fact it is a denial of my responsibility." I appreciate that subclause (xii) is offensive in some measure, but that is a fact of life and in fact this deals again with the wishes of the testator. Secondly, in my opinion we have gone as far as we can the other way when we talk about "obvious and gross repudiation," and I would hope that the cases would not limit obvious and gross repudiation to some of the case law or jurisprudence that the Attorney General has read about, because that obviously would require something that would be a bit much.

Basically, I am saying that I cannot agree with the amendment as proposed by the member for Carleton East.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments? The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: On the same section but a different matter.

Mr. Chairman: I probably should deal with the amendment that is before the committee at this time then. It has been moved by Ms. Gigantes to delete section 69, subsection (1) clause (a), subclause (xii).

All those in favour will please say "aye."
All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.
I declare the motion defeated.

Mr. Lawlor: Just one short question on a possible subclause (xvii): One of the briefs that came in to us—it may have been the Bar Association group—mentioned tax consequences as one of the possible considerations. Did you consider that? Since you have left it out, why did you omit that?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We have considered the issue of tax consequences. I know I have had some correspondence with the federal government in this respect, and perhaps some of my staff may be able to assist me in a moment with respect to how that matter was resolved, if it has been resolved.

I am advised that the courts now take into account the matter of tax implications and that it is not, therefore, necessary to include a specific provision in the bill.

Section 69 agreed to.

Sections 70 to 78, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 79:

Mr. Lawlor: This section is worth its weight in gold. For years lawyers, in their peculiar ingenuity, have set up all kinds of devices whereby to frustrate the operations of the Devolution of Estates Act and the Dependents Relief Act, but particularly the Devolution of Estates Act, as to cutting people out to whom they owe obligations during their lifetime. They set up trusts and then they make designations under pension plans, and they make designations under the Insurance Act—there's a whole host of measures which we, in our backward way, always plumed ourselves upon knowing about and on occasion using.

It has now got through to the Law Reform Commission and to the Attorney General's department that these dreadful things were going on out there, and the door is being closed on a host of these machinations to defeat people who are deserving and in need, and who would otherwise have a claim upon an estate. I commend the Attorney General on this section.

Sections 80 and 81 agreed to.

On section 82:

Mr. Lawlor: The inevitable question: Why? When the legislation was introduced, the sum for removal into the Supreme Court was $10,000 and it has been doubled. I know it is a numbers game kind of thing, but I think some explanation should be given for the record.

[3:45]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As the hon. member for Lakeshore knows, there is something rather arbitrary about picking the figure $20,000 as opposed to $25,000, for example. Obviously, what was considered was the matter of inflation since the figure was legislated. I'm advised that this figure reflects provision in the Surrogate Courts Act which provides that administration of an estate can be moved up under the Surrogate Courts Act only at the figure of $20,000.

Section 82 agreed to.

Sections 83 to 88, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 89:

Mr. Lawlor: Just a word on this. As in other sections—but I'll bring it up here—on second thought, or maybe it's fourth thought, the minister has removed the step-parents, step-brothers, the "step" relationships from this particular form of compensation for victims of crime, and elsewhere in the statute. I'd like to hear the minister's comment on that. Was it under the impress of the law society or the bar association that the minister did that?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't know. I'll see to it, Mr. Chairman. I don't recall the history of that. Hopefully, I'll have that information for the hon. member in a moment, if it's available.

Mr. Lawlor: If I may, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word in the meantime. There was a lot of protest about it coming from all kinds of sectors in the community, that it was extending the range of people protected under this legislation; under the Perpetuities Act, under the support obligations and in a whole host of areas just a little too far into the "step" field. There was great objection taken and I assumed that the Attorney General saw the wisdom of removing it, which I think was wise.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think the hon. member for Lakeshore is absolutely right. I had forgotten the controversy, but I am advised that the step-relations section was criticized as being far too broad, particularly where step-children and step-parents were covered. It was in response to criticism which was considered to be justified that "step" relations were removed.

Section 89 agreed to.

On section 90:

Mr. Lawlor: One final whack at this legislation. One could, as I think the Attorney General would appreciate, give a little dissertation on the Perpetuities Act, that recondite old chestnut that kept us up all night on many occasions.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Patrick, you do that so well.

Mr. Lawlor: The Perpetuities Act says something about that the state can vest, but it has to be within life or lives "in being" past 21 years. If individuals under a will fall outside that period, and they're trying to bring—this has to do with illegitimate children and with unborn children and the rule of Whitby and Mitchell in the courts, I won't go into it. You've had a certain amount of flak about tampering with this ancient and almost sacrosanct rule in this legislation, but I respect your temerity and never your timidity.

A further comment if I may. I would think it would be highly beneficial if this legislation, since it's moving through today, could go to third reading immediately and become law.

Those whose main task in this life, or for whom one of their main tasks is to draft wills and testamentary documents of all kinds—and they're not just lawyers out there who are concerned in this field, but the whole of the trust industry and whatnot—have been calling for the passage of the legislation.

The last section 91, prolongs the agony up to March 31, 1978. I would think January 2, 1978, would do everyone just fine. I know the Attorney General has some misgivings about that. But I think that date should be moved and prolonged no further.

CHILDREN'S LAW REFORM ACT

House in committee of the whole on Bill 61 An Act to reform the Law respecting the Status of Children.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. Lawlor: There is such a mess of bills before us today, Mr. Chairman, that one has to refresh one's memory.

Section 4 says, "Any person having an interest may apply to a court for declaration that a male person is recognized in law to be the father of a child or that a female person is the mother of a child."

Is there any difficulty on the female person's side of the matter being the mother of a child? Why is this given, therefore, specific mention?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I didn't hear the question.

Mr. Lawlor: It has to do with subsection (1) of section 4, saying there may be a declaration as to fatherhood and as to motherhood. I question the necessity of the motherhood provision. Is there any problem there that that should be imbibed.

All the rest of the sections as we go through them make specific or almost exclusive reference to proving paternity, but there doesn't seem to be much difficulty on the maternal side.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: With respect, Mr. Chairman, I know that such a well-read gentleman such as the member for Lakeshore would be familiar with some of the great novels that have been written when the whole issue of maternity was the crux of the plot. While it may not normally be as common an issue as the issue of paternity, obviously it could be an issue and a very important one. I am further advised that this was requested by the wills and trusts section of the bar association.

Section 4 agreed to.

On section 5:

Mr. Lawlor: It says at the end of 5(1), "Any male person may apply to the court for a declaration that a person is his child." That is commendable and a breakthrough, and had been asked also by the bar people. I mention it because it is, I think, a little extraordinary. But the very fact that it is brought into the legislation and said explicitly in this instance is helpful in that kind of action.

Mr. Roy: Yes, you got it on the record. Good for you.

Section 5 agreed to.

Sections 6 and 7 agreed to.

On section 8:

Mr. Lawlor: I just want to make mention of section 8 subsection (3), on page 4. This is where there are two possible fathers, or more for that matter. All presumptions go out the window at that particular point. I think that should be pointed out.

Section 8 agreed to.

Section 9 agreed to.

On section 10:

Mr. Roy: The Attorney General will recall that at the time we discussed this bill on second reading, the party on this side made certain comments about how we felt this legislation certainly was progressive and that in the main we were supporting the legislation. But we did have some reservations about section 10, the whole tone and approach taken in section 10. It states that a party to the parentage action can make an application and the court can give him leave to obtain blood tests from such persons as are named and an order granting leave to submit the results of this evidence. We had expressed concern that once that was done subsection (3) then allowed the court to make a certain inference if a party refused to submit to such a blood test.

I must say I have had occasion since that time to discuss this matter with the Attorney General and I have had occasion to discuss it as well with my colleagues. It appears that our original concern was simply that if the blood test, being what it is, only shows that one is not the parent, it cannot show that one is the parent, we felt that to give the court the power to draw an inference which scientifically a blood test could not, was going too far.

What was happening was that if one in exercising his civil rights said, "I will not submit to a blood test," just as someone may say he will not submit to fingerprint tests or something of this nature, the court would then proceed to make a conclusion which, had he submitted to the test the test could not.

We were seriously concerned about this. On further discussions with the Attorney General, he gave the example where in a paternity suit a person denies he is the father and says he will co-operate. He says, "I want blood tests of various persons"; including the mother in this case where she is the applicant.

I suppose it could go the other way, but I suppose in practicality it does not. If the mother at that point refused, he would find himself in a difficult situation in saying, "I've got this order for a blood test which I am convinced will show that I am not the father. Yet I am not able to obtain this evidence because the applicant is refusing." I can see that as a situation, certainly, in which the court should at that point have the right to draw such inference as it thinks appropriate.

I still have concern about the section in spite of that caveat. I have difficulty envisioning a situation where that would happen and the applicant would refuse to go through a blood test, although certainly it is possible. When we are passing laws, we should have all circumstances, even the most improbable ones in mind. To cure that particular problem, then, we have to go so far on the other side; I suppose that's one of the evils of the whole process. I think it was clear from reading the Law Reform Commission recommendations that one could save a lot of time and save a lot of effort through the question of blood tests in these applications. In making a decision, the court should at least have all scientific and all medical evidence available to come to that type of conclusion.

I must say at this time that on this side at least we will not oppose the passage of this section. We do so with a certain amount of reluctance. I naturally have great concern about the trampling of civil liberties in the conclusions that the court can come to if one is enforcing his rights; but the fact is, it seems to me, that the highest interest that has to be served, because that is the whole purpose of this legislation, is the right of the child. On that basis, we are on agreement and we will not oppose this section.

Section 10 agreed to.

Section 11 agreed to.

On section 12:

[4:00]

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I may say we're very glad to have this legislation, at long last, clarifying the position of children generally in their status before the law. It's long overdue.

But on section 12(2) I have a question. I notice that any person "having an interest" may inspect the statutory declaration of paternity by anybody who is chosen to make such. Yet further down, in section 14, it says "any person"—it doesn't say "with an interest"—"may inspect a court order regarding paternity."

I just wonder what is the reason for restricting the inspection of the first declaration to a person with an interest. It seems to me there may be situations where, in order to avoid litigation, somebody might wish just to make a simple declaration of paternity. The other persons who might have an interest and are not sure whether they have an interest might then wish to inspect that to see what the declaration said.

There could also, I would think, be the possibility that an adopted child, who has a presumption that a person is his or her father, might wish to inspect such a declaration. It seems to me that that should be available to them if they so wish, the same way as a court order which has established paternity would be available under section 14(2).

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The hon. member touches on the heart of the matter. Section 14 is a court order and therefore would necessarily be open to public inspection, whereas a declaration under section 12 is considered to be really a private matter. It is not a public document in the same sense.

Ms. Bryden: Can you explain to us why it should be a private matter when the other one is made public, particularly in the case of an adoptee who might wish to obtain this information?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Obviously if it is the result of a court proceeding it must be a public document. So far as document records are concerned they are not public documents.

As a matter of fact, section 1 of this Act provides that adoption is regarded as if the child were born to the adoptive parents. There may well be circumstances whereby the adoptee, for example, would be an individual who would have an interest in the matter. I think the section, as I understand it, is to encourage people in special circumstances to make such a declaration and to file it in the office of the registrar general. I would think that this intention would be defeated if it were known that this would be a public document and would be open to just curiosity seekers as opposed to people with a legitimate or relevant interest in the matter.

Ms. Bryden: Could the minister clarify what an interest means in this legislation? There may be a technical understanding of it, but perhaps he could clarify it for a non-lawyer.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: An interested party or someone having an interest is something that has been interpreted and continues to be interpreted by the courts; I suppose, for example, people who wish to be represented by counsel at a public inquiry. Interested parties; it's usually interpreted to mean, and I can't, off the top of my head, recall the precise definition, but people who have some substantial interest in the matter, is probably the best way to interpret what an interested party means. It usually has to do with a substantial, significant interest. Maybe I'll be provided with a more precise definition.

In this particular section, I'm advised that an interest means a legal interest in relation to administration of estates. Obviously, executors would have a legal interest, or as I said a substantial interest. I'll continue to read these definitions as they're provided to me, Mr. Chairman.

It doesn't mean someone who is a curiosity seeker. It involves someone who stands to benefit financially or otherwise by finding out the information. I don't think I can assist the hon. member any further than that.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, that might then be the difference between whether an adoptee seeking to find out about his parentage is a curiosity seeker or has something to gain.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Of course, it would depend on all of the circumstances. I guess it's a matter that's going to be for the discretion of the registrar general and hopefully it will be applied in a rational way.

Ms. Gigantes: I don't know if this is the appropriate place to raise my question. It's a question stemming from general ignorance on my part about the whole subject.

Can the Attorney General tell me what protection a woman has against the declaration by any man that he is the parent of the child she has borne?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The question has to do with whether somebody would have an interest in falsely claiming paternity. I could see where someone might be more interested in benefiting as the father of the child as opposed to establishing a relationship with the mother. This is another reason for not making this a public document. You don't want to encourage people to file these statutory declarations in a frivolous way simply to embarrass the child or a mother.

It doesn't give the man who files such a declaration any legal rights and it's something that could only be used against him under section 9. But the purpose of the section is for people who feel they want to protect the child, people who, for any number of reasons do not want to make a public declaration but do want to protect the child with regard to any claim against the estate that might be made by the child.

I don't have the answer as to what the results might be of somebody filing a declaration for some frivolous or malicious reason. My only reply is that it's not a public document. If it's not going to be used against the individual who files, it wouldn't be used any more seriously than somebody who wants to stand up in the city hall square and claim to be the father of Prince Charles. There's nothing to prevent people from making ludicrous assertions. What we're simply trying to do is provide a mechanism which will be to the benefit of children; which will have some legal effect, not in favour of the individual who files the declaration but may be used against him or his estate.

On section 14:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. McMurtry moves that section 14(1) of the bill be amended by striking out the words, "makes a finding of parentage or that is based upon a recognition of parentage," in the fourth and fifth lines, and inserting in lieu thereof, "confirms or makes a finding of parentage."

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The purpose of the amendment is to make clear that the words, "based upon a recognition of parentage," as used in the present bill, refer to a confirmation of parentage under section 4 of the bill and do not refer to orders based upon presumptions as set out in section 8 of the bill. It's really just a matter of clarification.

MARRIAGE ACT

House in committee of the whole on Bill 62, An Act to revise the Marriage Act.

Section 1 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. McMurtry moves that section 7 of the bill be amended by striking out the word "is" in the third line; and inserting in lieu thereof, "lacks capacity to marry by reason of being."

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: This proposed amendment is to satisfy certain persons who have made representation on behalf of the Association for the Mentally Retarded, indicating that they should not be deprived from having a licence issued, assuming they have the capacity. What we are trying to accomplish here, Mr. Chairman, is to deprive of a licence only people who lack capacity to marry. Again this would coincide or harmonize with the federal legislation in this respect, and make it clear that what we are dealing with here is a matter of capacity as opposed to a matter of mental retardation.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, I would certainly support that amendment. It is far more sensible than the way it read before. Before one could come to the conclusion that because of one being mentally ill, or even believed to be mentally ill or mentally defective, that that in itself was an impediment or an absolute bar to marriage. This is much more sensible, much more reflective of sensibilities of a particular group within our society, and I would applaud the amendment and support it.

Mr. Lawlor: I don't know if it helps all that much, but if the association thinks it does, I bow. The point is that the issuer of a licence has to make some kind of estimation. I suppose if the applicant is staggering all over the office, he would say "come back tomorrow if you want to get married"; or if certain external conditions of the eyes or nose or throat indicate drug abuse—whether that does, I am not sure; that's the whole point. When is an issuer going to be able, except under very overt circumstances, to assess the situation?

I don't see how that's particularly rectified by this bill. Standing at a wicket, the issuer looks at the guy, and the guy starts to talk, or the woman, and they start to speak in somewhat bizarre fashion. They may be exhilarated at the thought of getting married or something but in any event—

Ms. Gigantes: Drunk with happiness.

Mr. Lawlor: —they speak perhaps a little like I do in this House—

Mr. Roy: I thought you were speaking about a personal experience.

Mr. Lawlor: Who would know just what's going on inside there?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Good thing you are already married.

Mr. Lawlor: It gives me pause on occasion, and I am privy to the fact. Who am I to judge? The thing was the stigmatization of an individual as being mentally ill and being judged by someone who is incompetent on their side of the fence to know whether they are or not, and refusing the licence in these circumstances. That was the problem, and the problem, as far as I can see, remains—modified, swaddled, but there it is.

Motion agreed to.

Section 7, as amended, agreed to.

Section 8 agreed to.

On section 9:

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, on section 9 in the context of this Act, as compared to the Divorce Act, I am trying to understand how, looking at the section, if one alleges that a spouse has been absent for at least seven years—I suppose that the point I want to make to the Attorney General is that under a section of the Divorce Act separation for a period of three or five years is grounds for divorce. I am just wondering at the duplication. I wonder if that has been looked at by your officials. Are you not in a position of having two remedies should the spouse be deemed to be absent? You know, this now happens more and more in society. Couples are coming forward and saying, I haven't heard from her or from him for three, four or five years.

The procedure under this section seems to be much more summary than the procedure under the Divorce Act, where one would have to go through the divorce procedure.

I am not saying that is necessarily a bad thing. Under the Divorce Act, one has to go through the whole procedure of issuing a petition and then publishing it and that whole rigmarole. Yet, a judge can crank out 75 divorces in one morning. It is pretty much a rubber-stamping operation in any event, but this appears to be a much more summary procedure.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Surely it's desirable.

Mr. Roy: Yes, I would think it is desirable to have it. I suppose it's not the first time where an individual, faced with a particular problem, has had more than one way to remedy the situation, both at the federal level under the Divorce Act and under what we call the Marriage Act. I am wondering whether that was kept in mind and whether we are passing this section because the procedure under the Divorce Act is too cumbersome.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, certainly it is desirable that for a party who for very good reasons, perhaps for religious convictions, may not want to get a divorce, this remedy should be open to them. As has been pointed out by the member for Ottawa East, this is a much less cumbersome method of obtaining a declaration or an order which will simply not annul a marriage—because we have no constitutional authority to pass such legislation—but will allow a person to marry again without the fear of committing bigamy.

Really, what we are dealing with here, I suppose, is a situation where this legislation is restricted to the issuance of a licence only. I suppose a party would want to consider whether there will be satisfaction with this relatively summary relief, which only allows them to obtain a licence and get married. If a person proceeds under this legislation, and the first spouse reappears, then that second marriage would be deemed to be void. So in certain circumstances it might be desirable for an individual to go under the provisions of the Divorce Act. It really is an alternative way of proceeding where a person is reasonably satisfied that the spouse is in fact dead. As I understand the law, the first marriage would still be considered to be in force if the spouse reappeared.

Mr. Roy: That is what bothers me in today's society; that an order can be given—if that is what you are saying—by the court, saying: "We are now making a presumption that the spouse is dead." One remarries and then the first spouse appears and the second marriage is considered void. Is that what you're saying if one proceeded under this section of the Act?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It's my understanding that it's only a presumption and a rebuttable presumption. Obviously a presumption of death must be a rebuttable presumption, if the person presumed dead reappears on the scene.

Mr. Roy: That's just the point. I suppose any lawyer worth his salt will say, "I think the safest method to proceed is probably under the Divorce Act." You're saying some people's religion may be an impediment to proceeding by way of divorce, although that's becoming less and less a factor. I just found it interesting, reading that section referring to when a married person whose spouse is missing alleges that the spouse has been continually absent for at least seven years. It happens quite often that a spouse is absent.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: A long holiday.

Mr. Roy: One takes a summary motion, under this. You get a situation where the spouse, now having been absent for seven years, is presumed dead and then reappears. Of course there's a problem. The marriage he has gone through is now no longer valid. I would suggest that an individual who was faced with that problem would be a lot safer to proceed under the Divorce Act, because at that point there is no question about whether the spouse reappears. It's a very common situation where you have people coming into law offices saying, "I don't know where he or she is. I haven't seen him for five, seven or 10 years," or whatever.

I appreciate that this summary fashion is more expeditious, but from a practical point of view it just appears to me that you're allowing something to be done which sometimes in the long term is not that practical.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I should just point out to the members that this is not new. As I understand it, it's in the present Act. To this extent we're just incorporating it. The only reason for this section 9 is to provide an alternative. As the member for Ottawa East points out, it is not a totally satisfactory alternative. Perhaps it is a risky alternative, but it is one that is available for people who simply do not desire a divorce.

Mr. Roy: I would make a suggestion to Attorneys General down the line. I can't presume you're going to be Attorney General during that length of time, but presuming you are, or presuming some of my colleagues here are, it appears to me the situation will change, if they do the amendments that are proposed on the long term on divorce, that is to make it simpler, and based on the question of marriage breakdown for whatever reason, so that we get away from the situation of having to go through a petition and the whole thing, and take it away from the judges. As I mentioned to the Attorney General, it appears to me that it's pretty much a rubber-stamping operation.

If a judge can go through 70 to 75 divorces a day, he's hardly getting into the evidence at all. If the procedure to get a divorce becomes much simpler, this type of legislation, in my opinion, would not be necessary. What I'm trying to say is that we should not get involved with legislation which somewhere down the road may backfire on the individual. In other words, we shouldn't open a door for him which further down the road may well close on his face.

We shouldn't be presuming people are dead who in fact are not dead. We shouldn't be allowing someone to get involved in a form of marriage which very shortly down the line may be declared invalid. That's all I'm saying.

SURROGATE COURTS AMENDMENT ACT

House in committee of the whole on Bill 65, An Act to amend the Surrogate Courts Act.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. Lawlor: I had a discussion with one of the most distinguished members of the bar. I didn't understand a single word he said. However, I am not pressing the amendment that I originally brought before the House.

Apparently, just to be a little more sensible, there is a committee that is sitting with respect to the surrogate court devising the rules. What I was proposing more or less was retention of the existing inventory or what I thought was actually preferable, namely a more extended and detailed inventory rather than a lesser inventory, because of the very stern strictures that are exercised in that particular court.

We are speaking of a will, after all. The individual who made it is dead and can't speak for himself; so the judiciary and the court officers pay very close attention to every jot and tittle that comes before them. Even those highly equipped in this field who do nothing else but this kind of surrogate court work almost invariably have all their documents returned to them for some amendment, et cetera, or some nicety of wording.

Since that is the case, I suspect it is better not to move in where angels wouldn't tread and to let the regulations as they proceed govern the situation. When they come out, as a result of the report of this particular committee, we will have a chance to peruse them and we will take it from there.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think that is a good suggestion. If we are not satisfied with the rules and regulations, we can certainly consider an amendment.

Mr. Sargent: The Attorney General is scoring already.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Obviously there are occasions whereby it is in the beneficiaries' interests to compel a detailed inventory.

Sections 5 to 8, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 65 reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. McMurtry, the committee of the whole House reported three bills with amendments and one bill without amendment.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading on motion:

Bill 60, An Act to reform the Law respecting Succession to the Estates of Deceased Persons.

Bill 61, An Act to reform the Law respecting the Status of Children.

Bill 62, An Act to revise the Marriage Act.

Bill 65, An Act to amend the Surrogate Courts Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Durham East (Mr. Cureatz) is required to introduce his bill today for debate in two weeks' time. The member is therefore seeking unanimous consent to revert to introduction of bills. Is it agreed?

Agreed.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

PLANNING AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Cureatz moved first reading of Bill 89, An Act to amend the Planning Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Cureatz: Mr. Speaker, in regard to my private member's bill I will reserve my comments until the introduction on a Thursday in two weeks' time.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Ashe, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McKeough, moved second reading of Bill 40, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Mr. Ashe: The proposed amendments to the Municipal Act add two further types of money bylaws to the list of money bylaws which do not require the consent of the electorate. These are bylaws for acquiring land for housing purposes and bylaws for the construction and reconstruction of highway pavements and bridges. In addition, it is proposed that when a property owner makes partial payment towards tax arrears, payments shall first be applied to the interest or percentage charges, then towards that part of the taxes longest overdue.

At the request of the municipalities, we are broadening the per diem system of remuneration for members of council. In that regard, Mr. Speaker, after approval of second reading I will be moving that we proceed into committee of the whole House to consider further amendments to section 2 and section 6 regarding the per diems; and also to transfer certain provisions from the Municipal Elections Act to the Municipal Act.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I rise to say that in general I and my party support these amendments to the Municipal Act. Most of them, in fact I guess all of them, are rather minor amendments, and they are desirable amendments. However, there are a couple of them on which I want to make a few comments.

The amendment which is being proposed by the parliamentary assistant refers to the Municipal Elections Act, 1977. That's where the amendment is to add section 47 to the Municipal Act. Subsection 1 states in the last part of the paragraph: "And a new election shall be held in accordance with the provisions of the Municipal Elections Act, 1977."

We have no disagreement with the principles of that amendment, but it seems rather strange that it's going to be subject to the Municipal Elections Act, which has not yet been dealt with in this House. Therefore, for that reason alone, I would suggest that the committee stage of this bill should not take place until after we deal with the Municipal Elections Act so we know what is in the Municipal Elections Act.

As the parliamentary assistant probably knows, I have some 20 to 25 amendments to move to the Municipal Elections Act, and it seems to me that this House should deal with that elections Act and decide on it before another Act is subject to it. So this seems in reverse, and I would ask that the committee stage of this bill not proceed at the present time. I would suggest that there is no more urgency for it to proceed to committee stage now than there is with the Municipal Elections Act; in fact, much less reason.

The second item that I want to discuss, briefly, is section 7, which makes it possible for a municipality to spread the payments for road-making machinery over a period of 10 years rather than five as at the present time. What we in this party object to is the retention within the Act of the five-year limitation for purchasing machinery and appliances for the purpose of the corporation.

We think that is an unrealistic restriction to leave in the Act in this day and age. Appliances can amount, I suppose, to a few hundred dollars, and appliances can now also amount to several hundreds of thousands of dollars if we're talking about computers. In addition to that, there is the custom now—and I think it is a very desirable custom in municipalities—where they will group together a number of expenditures which are subject to debenture. One of those might be an appliance and, therefore, they would have to pull it out, whereas the whole package should be dealt with in the one debenture.

If there is concern on the part of the parliamentary assistant or the Treasurer and the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. McKeough)—a concern which I don't share, incidentally—that municipalities somehow or other won't be responsible, that they will debenture small things over too long a period of time, there is now a section of the Municipal Act which covers that, section 288. It provides for limitations on the length of debentures for various things, and, as a matter of fact, the subsection (c) of section 288 states that it shall be made payable if it is for the purchase of road-making machinery and appliances, in five years. So, in fact, that is already in the Act, and we don't need another amendment here. We simply need to take out that section.

But the final subsection there, subsection (d), gives the necessary protection, where it says if the debt is for any other purpose, "in such term of years that the Municipal Board may approve." I suggest that to leave in the five years is a bit of paternalism that municipalities don't really need in this day and age.

That other section of the Act is surely sufficient to give any protection that is deemed necessary by the government of this province. To leave in this five-year clause is an insult—maybe a small one but still an insult—to local government in this province. Therefore, we will be moving in the committee stage an amendment to change that, to delete the (b) section of that, and take out the five-year term in the (c) section so that the municipalities will be able to operate under section 288 of the Act.

[4:45]

It is, of course, necessary—and I would agree with the parliamentary assistant—to have a clause in there, because that is the clause which authorizes a municipality to conclude those kind of agreements and make those kind of purchases. But to say to them, on these things: “How do we determine what is an appliance?” To say that somehow or other we’re going to watch over their shoulder to see that they don’t debenture something for 10 years which we think should be debentured only for five, is a degree of supervision that is not necessary to municipalities at this period of time and this period of sophistication.

I would suggest that this bill go to the committee, as of course it will, but ask that consideration of this bill be postponed in committee hearings at this time until we deal with the Municipal Elections Act. If that is not acceptable to the parliamentary assistant, would he consider postponing it for a very short period of time, if for no other reason than that I have to catch a train and leave here in about 10 minutes. Obviously, I’d like to be here to deal with the amendment.

Mr. Ruston: When the House is open, you’re supposed to be here.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that the member who just preceded me would have had his own plane waiting for him; but I guess not today, maybe one of his colleagues has it.

Mr. Foulds: Not government yet; next time around.

Mr. Swart: I’m not Eddy Sargent.

Mr. Epp: Thank goodness. Mr. Speaker, I rise to give support to this bill in principle. I’m cognizant of the amendment the member has made to this bill. I would like to hear a response from the parliamentary assistant to the Treasurer, giving reasons why the five-year limit is included. We feel this and other Acts should be streamlined to eliminate items like five-year limitations and so forth, which are unnecessary. It’s going to take civil servants a few days to work on these things and check municipalities. We feel that municipalities should have as much autonomy as possible. I would like to hear a good reason why it should be included.

I’d like to draw the parliamentary assistant’s attention to section 388(1)(b), as set out in section 6 of the bill, where it says: “A by-law passed pursuant to this clause may define a class or classes of meetings in respect of which a per diem rate may be paid and may authorize payment of a per diem rate only in respect of such class or classes of meetings.”

Where possible we should not have per diem rates. People should be paid on an annual basis, whether it’s $200 or $4,000 or something of this nature, instead of giving them reasons to call meetings merely to collect $35 or $100. I know that’s being done by people across the province who are having very short meetings, a half-hour or an hour, and collecting their per diem rate. The ministry should seriously look at this and try and correct the problem.

Another solution might be to give members of committees an annual fee, deducting a certain amount if they are absent for more than 20 per cent of the meetings. That’s a much more equitable way of approaching matters, rather than paying them on a per diem basis. There are a number of other items for which we think amendments are long overdue. We will support this bill and await the comments by the parliamentary assistant regarding the item the member for Welland-Thorold has raised.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments from the hon. member for Waterloo North and I will attempt to answer some of the concerns brought forward by the hon. member for Welland-Thorold.

There’s no doubt as to what he indicates relating to the Municipal Elections Act, 1977. As the House is quite aware, it has only received first reading and will, hopefully, be discussed in second reading one week from today.

We don’t really see any problem in leaving it as it is, albeit for a temporary period of time there is somewhat of a duplication. But if that is really the theoretical problem that the hon. member has with reference to the Municipal Elections Act, 1977, we would have no problem changing that in committee to read: “the Municipal Elections Act, 1972,” so that when the amendment is made it becomes “the Municipal Elections Act, 1977” next week. I understand that it will automatically apply in any event, so I don’t think that’s really a valid reason why second reading and approval, hopefully, in committee can’t go forward today.

Mr. Foulds: There is no committee today. It’s not on the House leader’s order of business.

Mr. Ashe: I thought it was. I guess I got some wrong information.

In any event, as far as the reference to section 288 and 455 is concerned, may I point out, please, that the two sections really do not speak exactly to the same issue. I find it somewhat inconsistent, and the hon. member for Welland-Thorold agrees. Specifically identifying a period of time, as in section 288, of 10 years and then saying, under section 455, there should be no time period referred to at all, is somewhat inconsistent.

We think, there should be some relevance and some fiscal and financial responsibility that is identified in that particular section. On the actual differences in the sections, albeit they are referring to road-making equipment and appliances section 455 also deals with lease purchase arrangements which are not dealt with in section 288. So, although they do refer to road-making equipment in its broadest sense, section 455 goes into an area that is not referred to in section 288. Therefore, the point made by the hon. member for Welland-Thorold that section 288 would apply in the reference of 10 years, we do not feel that that is so. Hence, we feel that the proposal for the amendment to section 455 as proposed should be, and hopefully will be, passed by this august body.

I might also point out that the amendment proposed—

Mr. Warner: Is that the only time you sit here?

Mr. Ashe: —by the hon. member for Welland-Thorold in itself is somewhat ambiguous. It would leave us, with the approval of that particular motion, with a section 451(1) that reads, "subject to subsection 2," when his own proposed amendment proposes eliminating subsection 2.

Mr. Swart: We have changed that. There will be an amendment tabled.

Mr. Ashe: There hasn't been much foresight in that particular motion. So we would hope that the members of the Legislature would consider those observations when we come to committee and see the relevance and the appropriateness of leaving the two references to the five and 10 years in section 455.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole.

JUDICATURE AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved second reading of Bill 77, An Act to amend the Judicature Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. minister have any opening statement?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, I have nothing to add to what I said on the introduction of the bill.

Mr. Roy: We are faced this afternoon with a series of amendments to the Provincial Courts Act, the County Judges Act, the Judicature Act and the Small Claims Courts Act. This first bill, Bill 77, is another amendment to the Judicature Act. I will have some more pertinent comments when we get into some of the legislation, especially the Provincial Courts Act and the Small Claims Court Act. I should start off by being the nice fellow and congratulating the minister on bringing forward the amendments under Bill 77.

For some time now, many of us have called for a more reasonable rate of interest on judgements allowed by the courts. We felt that the rates allowed under the Judicature Act—I think it was five or seven per cent—was ridiculous in today's world. The inflationary spiral has affected everyone, I suppose, except litigants who were faced with the constraints of the Judicature Act.

Because of the low interest rate on judgements, there was an incentive on the part of certain litigants, especially as the amount of the judgement kept getting bigger and the litigant was the one who had the finances to pay for litigation, to drag out litigation. With the low award of interest, the cost of litigation would have been less than the cost of the interest that could have been made on this money pending the outcome of the litigation. In other words, one could seriously protract settlement of a case for quite a period of time without fear that the interest would in fact penalize him.

In the compendium that came with this legislation it says that high commercial rates of interest make it extremely profitable for a defendant to delay judgement. In other words, unreasonable delays in obtaining judgement or settlement are very often extremely unfair to plaintiffs. We have talked about this for some time in the House and I am pleased to see the Attorney General and his officials have responded to that by bringing in legislation which conforms with what happens out there in society.

In other words, this is legislation which responds to the commercial needs of a province, of a jurisdiction, which certainly is not operating in a vacuum. The courts and the laws must be responding and must in a sense be the reflection of what is going on in the commercial world.

I am extremely pleased to see these amendments come forward. Now the rate of interest will be considered the prime rate. In my opinion that is only reasonable. I am only sorry that it took so long to see it come forward. Having the legislation before us, I want to say to the Attorney General that we are very pleased to support this amendment.

[5:00]

The other amendment which I find extremely satisfying as well is what is called prejudgement interest. I would hope because of the passage of this type of legislation we will again avoid unnecessary litigation. Where it is going to be important, if I may cite some examples, is especially in motor vehicle cases where you don't have a liquidated amount of damages. You often had a situation where it was to the advantage of the defendant—always represented by an insurance company of course—because of the low rate of interest, to start with, and because of the fact that there was no prejudgement interest, to delay the settlement of a particular case as long as possible and very often to settle at the courtroom door just prior to trial.

For instance, let's say you had a possibility of obtaining a judgement of $50,000; you felt as a litigant that your general damages and so would be about $50,000. If the defendant, through his insurance company, effectively delayed this for two or three years and he was getting interest on his money at 10 or 12 per cent or perhaps a higher percentage, which over that period of time might well amount to $15,000, he was making money. In other words, it was more profitable for him to delay it as long as possible.

The incentive, rather than being for him to settle the action, was for him to drag out the action at least up to the courtroom door, because the costs really start adding up once you get inside the courtroom on trial day. That's when the major amount of the accumulated costs will hurt him—at the courtroom door. The costs even in one of these actions dragging for two or three years, would be much less than the interest he earned on the money he didn't pay.

We have always felt—and I am glad to see the ministry taking the initiative on this—that this was a disincentive to settlement. We feel that this is the type of legislation that we hope will encourage settlement because of this prejudgement interest.

The legislation is made in such a way that there is some flexibility or discretion in the court in awarding interest on these amounts. Again, depending on the type of situation it is, we must retain a certain amount of discretion in the court. There cannot be a hard and fast rule.

I am sure the Attorney General realizes, as we have pointed out to him often enough—and I think very few people in this province don't realize it—that one of the problems in our courts is the case flow. The high volume of litigation that is taking place is bogging down our courts.

Very often it was laws such as this that encouraged this type of litigation. The passage of this type of legislation, one hopes, will represent another small effort on the part of those of us who are making the laws to try to encourage settlement and to avoid duplication and unnecessary litigation.

It is ironic that this package of legislation makes sense on the one hand in that we are trying to bring forward legislation to avoid litigation. On the other hand, in the other bills that will follow here we are appointing more judges. The answer in the long term—and I think the Ministry of the Attorney General realizes it—is not for us to keep adding bodies and having more judges sitting in our courts; the answer has got to be laws which are responsive and which encourage settlement and encourage parties to resolve their own disputes. That is why I am pleased to see Bill 77 presented to the House.

In my opinion this type of legislation will put a certain amount of pressure on litigants to solve their problems and to settle their cases. Too often—and you hear it from judges—people clog up the process and the courts, not only at the trial stage but also at the preliminary stage where motions are brought for one matter or another.

I am very pleased that at least we here are taking certain steps to avoid encouraging litigants. We should see more legislation of this nature, legislation which will encourage people to solve their own problems so that when they go to see their lawyer there are attempts to resolve their own disputes and settle their cases without unnecessary litigation.

We on this side are pleased to see this legislation. We've called for it in the past and we will wholeheartedly support it.

Mr. Lawlor: What my friend has just said is very much to the point and perceptive in the range. It's not going to make any monumental changes. All the legislation we're going to have before us this afternoon and this evening, I suspect, will do little to cut costs. Perhaps in some areas it will a bit.

But it will streamline the process just a little bit, while we are waiting upon Williston's report upon matters of that kind, and cut out some long-lasting anomalies. Anomalies are blockades. They block progress and they add to the costs of litigation because the lawyer, first of all, wants to get paid for knowing where the tricks of the trade are, et cetera, and the modes of drafting. Therefore, it does increase the bill. To get rid of a number of things which we'll discuss, for instance, the distinction between chambers motions and court motions, which are done in different ways and which I will discuss in a few moments, are necessarily all to the good.

Before commenting on this legislation, let me first say that in all of the bills before us today—I think all—we have received compendia. This is a fairly new thing. We have some with respect to the family law that was discussed earlier. The Attorney General is now supplying this background analytical material. We've had not a great deal of time to ingest, digest and, if you will, spew out the rather massive quantity of stuff, closely packed with legal reasoning with respect to the various points at issue in the legislation. It's devoutly to be welcomed and I commend his staff or whoever it is doing this work.

In previous times in this House we hadn't such a document. We went and did the work on our own completely. While we still do that, this really is a help. It's too bad the profession at large wouldn't be privy to documentation and the type of analyses of extant law and the reasons for changing it that obtain in the documents that have been sent over to us in the past few days.

The first matter deserving of mention here is this business of the interest rates, particularly on prejudgements, what interest will run prior to a judgement being reached in the courts. That has been for a long time a thorny issue. We have before us a 27-page compendium of the various thoughts and alternatives in other jurisdictions as far away as Australia, but particularly of the British. We have rejected the British solution on most counts. We've adopted, I think, a somewhat more rational and beneficial solution on count after count.

There is a division to be made as to this interest, but the first point is that they go for prime rate. That fluctuates and that is going to be based upon a Bank of Canada statement, I believe, of the month before, whereas now we have a fixed interest rate concept which is much too low. As has been pointed out, with a low fixed interest rate, it's to the benefit of a defendant to delay and delay an action, to snarl up the courts, to have an enormous backlog awaiting trial and not wanting it to go on, using every trick in the book to escape judgement because he can use this money in the meantime. He would be paying out at five per cent and he can be lending, I suppose, at 24—certainly at 12—without any difficulty. So it's all in his own interest to play it out.

The other way around it is interesting. If the interest were too high it very well might be in the interest of the plaintiff to delay the proceedings. What is sought here is some kind of medium, some kind of objective criterion which will never be too high nor too low, based upon the prime rate to those best borrowers that the chartered banks and lenders accord to those particular customers, and working it off that particular base.

Having reached that there is the problem of how is this to be calculated, at what date does this interest start to run? When the cause of action started? Or what would the date be? And the bill embodies a distinction, a principle between liquidated damages being largely those arising out of a contract, where the amount that someone owes is calculated. It is in black and white, or easily reached. On that basis the interest will run from the date that the cause of action arose and will run to the date of judgement.

On unliquidated claims, mostly tort claims, personal injury claims, et cetera, where you can't set a quantum without calculations and without a determination—a different date, that is, a date where the person entitled to the money gave notice in writing of his claim to the person liable therefor. That is kind of a compromise solution, or maybe you simply say it is a third possibility.

To give some notion of the quality of documentation we are being given leading into this legislation I just want to read a paragraph at page 15 of the minister's compendia: "If interest began to run in cases involving unliquidated damages from the date of the service of the writ, the notification of the defendant prior to the accrual of interest again him, would be ensured. This solution has been legislative in South Australia. It also applies in England by virtue of a judicial guideline, established by the Court of Appeal in the case of Jefford versus Gee. The primary criticism of this date, for the commencement of interest, is that it forces the plaintiff to initiate court proceedings to preserve his right to interest. In the vast majority of cases settlement is made without a writ being issued."

In other words you don't clog up the courts. You do everything in your power to keep the matter out of the courts, subject to settlement and do an act that is no inducement within the rules of those very courts to attract unnecessary litigation. This provision might unnecessarily increase the administrative costs to the courts, as plaintiffs would initiate proceedings to ensure their right to interest.

In 1975 the Highway Traffic Act, the Fatal Accidents Act, and the Trustee Act, were amended to extend from one year to the period available to a plaintiff in a personal injury case to initiate action. More, the purpose of this amendment was to facilitate settlement without the issuance of unnecessary writs. The date on which a defendant is notified in writing of the claim would seem to be an appropriate, normal date from which interest should run where unliquidated damages are involved. Where a writ was issued and served, this would serve as the notification. The notification may be given by letter or by any other number of means, and settled in that particular way.

When we get into committee we can go more deeply into all the nice, distinctive, situations touching this interest. For instance, should interest accrue to special damages? How do you balance it off? By a nice calculation the minister has done it on a six-month basis as those special damages accumulate—as opposed to general damages, damages for pain and suffering say. Then there are circumstances in which interest ought not to be awarded. And some of them are very intriguing indeed. The subtlety that goes into this legislation wins at least my very considerable regard. Finally, the judge is left to make up his mind as to whether or not interest will be levied in a broad discretionary way.

The second area in which this legislation is breaking new ground has to do with lis pendens and cautions. The Judicature Act, section 42, leaves much to be desired as it is now because of the way in which the sections have been interpreted in the past.

For instance, someone—and lawyers have been known to do this—can frivolously or maliciously slap a lis pendens, a document which comes to the court and puts a title on land you may own, tying you all up, and there's not a thing you can do about it. You can move before the court and have it vacated, but the judge probably would not be able on your evidence or affidavit alone, to do that ex parte or even with the other lawyer. He would have to direct an issue and send it off for trial. Meantime, he's got you hog-tied. People do this fairly often, particularly people who are chagrined over the loss of a real estate transaction or a business deal. "I'll just tie him up," they say.

Curiously enough, our law is such that there are no damages. There's nothing you can do about it. You can't sue him as a result of his action and if you've lost a good transaction because somebody has pulled that trick on you, there is no sanction and no way of rectifying the very considerable monetary loss individuals suffer in this particular case.

It's done fairly often, and I know some lawyers who, if they're unhappy with you, will slap you with a lis pendens, or as it's called in the land titles office, a caution, although in land titles there is provision under that Act, and this is another anomaly, that you can sue for damages if it's proven to be unmerited and not to have weight. So try to bring the two rules together. The amendments, substantial amendments, are being made to the Judicature Act in this particular regard.

Again I just want to make mention of the compendium supplied to us under this heading to show precisely what is involved. By virtue of rule 30-22 of the rules of practice, a certificate of lis pendens is no longer issued as of right and can only be obtained by leave of the court. The application for leave to issue the certificate may be brought ex parte—that is without the other side being present—and is heard by a judge in the county court and by a master in the Supreme Court, although there are formal requirements that must be fulfilled to obtain a certificate, such as the need to include a claim to an interest in land in the writ—and that's not too difficult usually.

In practice, the inquiry before the issuance of a certificate is brief and complete reliance is placed upon the supporting affidavit of the plaintiff's solicitor. I suppose it could go farther and include the affidavit of other people besides that.

The issuer of the certificate does not have the power to inquire into the merits of the case. It's a carte blanche; if the affidavit looks good on its face, no inquiry behind it is made. The certificate issues from the court. There is a final sentence here: "There is no effective remedy in damages where the certificate is issued under the Registry Act." That is an area where changes are being made under the revision to the Judicature Act.

The next area of importance under this legislation has to do with the abolition of the distinction between chambers and court motions. Sometimes when legislation comes to us, as this afternoon, you pause and you climb up on the little balcony, and you look over the landscape and you say, "Why on earth wasn't this done a long time ago?" The legislation is so coercive in its intelligence as to meet absolutely no resistance. And yet, the situation has gone on for five generations and developed.

In the Law Reform Commission report on the administration of the courts, part I, page 199—and prior thereto, of course—some of the distinctions as between these two kinds of motions are set forth and discussed. I'll read from a paragraph in that regard:

"In order that the foregoing enumeration of differences between proceedings held in court and those held in chambers may appear in its proper perspective, the observation may be made that apart from such formal differences as the day of the week on which the motion is returnable, the requirement as to the wearing of a gown—both of these differences applying only in the case of motions heard in Toronto—and the form of the notice of motion and the order, there is usually no practical difference in the way in which contested court and chamber matters are brought and heard in the Supreme Court."

But nevertheless, various different consequences flow from the fact that it is heard one way of the other. Certainly dire consequences flow if you start your motion in the weekly court office in Toronto, when you should have done it in chambers. The whole thing is a nullity and you have to start all over. Or vice versa. That has hung up many a solicitor.

I don't know how they siphon off the costs of these things—the time spent, notices drawn, affidavits prepared, appearances made. I suspect the client, one way or the other, is mulcted in costs as a result of that. A simple technicality, which you would have thought the circumlocution office in Bleak House would have wiped out a half a century ago. If you watch the story of Charles Dickens on late night television, as I often do on Sunday nights, you may have seen an episode which dealt with this. Dickens, of course, was particularly overwrought, because he wasn't a lawyer. If you are, you become somewhat accustomed to living with these things.

That is a major change being advocated, which I think is more properly discussed in depth in committee.

The business of appeals is very interesting. That's being modified in this legislation. The notes that the hon. minister has given us are that, "under section 6 (2) of the Judicial Review Procedure Act, a judge of the high court is given jurisdiction to hear an application for a judicial review where he grants leave on a case of emergency and where application to the divisional court is likely to involve a failure of justice. It became obvious that it was counterproductive to allow an appeal to the divisional court and a further appeal to the Court of Appeal"—after all, they're the same judges—"after it was heard by a single judge on the basis of an emergency. As a result, section 6 (4) of the Judicial Review Procedure Act was amended in 1976 to make the appeal directly to the Court of Appeal, with leave of the Court of Appeal.

"However, the presence of section 17(1)(c)," the one that's being changed now, "of the Judicature Act was overlooked." Splendid as our counsel is, as searching and mole-like on occasion, even with many of the people in the Attorney General's department sifting through all these interleaving layers of the law, they missed it. You know, it makes me feel bad; even the opposition critics missed it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Most surprising.

Mr. Lawlor: I know you can hardly place credence in that, but it happens sometimes, and here it is. "As a consequence, the two provisions are contradictory. In such cases, the latter provision would prevail, but to avoid confusion, section 71 (c) should be repealed," and so it is being done.

I won't take a great deal more time on this particular legislation except to mention the council of judges of the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court has been expanded in some of the legislation to 52 judges, I believe. Some of the legislation we have here today is no longer becoming the college of cardinals it once was.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Don't tell them that.

Mr. Lawlor: They can't consort in the corridors without blocking the way. Gradually the theory of collegiality is being warped by the sheer pressure of events and the necessity to appoint more judges to erode the backlog of cases we have. So, they come to the impasse at this stage where they feel that a committee of the judges, for the purposes of the judicial council, would have to be formed to meet from time to time and, as any committee does, report back to the main body, which would convene at least twice a year. The thing is becoming unwieldy and top-heavy at this particular point.

This, you see, is a new move within that particular structure of the courts in order to get something done. It may appear to be a fairly slight piece of legislation but it has a great deal of matter, indeed. Of course, we won't oppose it. We're all in favour.

Mr. Bolan: I would like to address myself to certain features of these proposed amendments. Generally speaking, I think the amendments are quite sound. Of course, it can always be said that they should have been brought in many years ago, for that matter. Nevertheless, what with the erosion of time, one learns about our sins of omission of the past and we eventually try to rectify them.

The benefit with respect to increasing the interest on judgements and pegging the interest on a judgement in the manner as set out in the suggested amendment is quite sound and speaks for itself and, really, is not deserving of any more comment.

I think that the significant effect on the prejudgement interest will have to do in the field of litigation, primarily with insurance claims.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, often a claim is commenced for large sums of money, although it is an unliquidated claim at that particular time because the damages have not yet been ascertained. Insurance companies have been known, in the past, to drag their feet when it comes to settling these claims because they know that as long as the money is still in the till, they can keep on lending out that money or doing whatever it is they do with it. I think that when they come to realize, through this proposed legislation, there is no real purpose in delays, because they will still have to pay the interest, then many of the problems we face today, such as the significant clogging of our courts for various reasons—one of which may be the fact that there is quite a bit of foot-dragging by insurance companies on their claims—will lessen. So I think that is one of the significant aspects of this particular amendment.

When I first saw the part of the bill dealing with the discretion of judges in allowing or disallowing increases in the interest rate, I sort of raised an eyebrow at it. However, on reflection, I think it is sound if, for no other reason, than the judge will be able, through this section, to penalize one of the offending parties to the litigation, if there is one, and if there is any foot-dragging relating to it. If a defendant, or for that matter a plaintiff, has done something in the course of his action which either delays the proceedings or does something to prevent it from coming to court in due course, the presiding judge will be able to use his discretion to either lower the interest rate or increase it.

[5:30]

I heard with great interest the comments made with respect to cautions and lis pendens. It's quite ironic—I just had a lis pendens placed last week on a property in the Parry Sound district. Although I followed the proper procedure and the proper form, it reminded me once again of how easy it is to tie up a person's land. I certainly agree with the suggestions made by the previous speaker.

Generally speaking, these are sound amendments. Again, we will be able to get into some of the finer points of it. I do have some concern about the exclusions under which interest will not be allowed. However, we will be able to deal with those in their proper context.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I don't think I can add anything to the endorsements we have heard from the members opposite in relation to the principles of the legislation and their support of those principles, which of course, I welcome.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole house.

COUNTY JUDGES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved second reading of Bill 78, An Act to amend the County Judges Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. minister have any opening statement?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have nothing to add to what I said when I introduced the bill. These are relatively small but important housekeeping amendments. During the past two years, I have come to better appreciate the very extensive duties incumbent on a chief judge. From my own personal experience, I think the request for the appointment of an associate chief judge is warranted by the circumstances, considering particularly the size of this province and the geographical land mass over which our county court judges are spread.

Mr. Roy: This bill and the following Bill 79 are just bills, basically. Bill 78 only makes provision for the associate chief judge of county and district courts. Bill 79 talks about the Chief Justice and Chief Judge of the High Court and the appointment of more judges at the High Court level. Sure, this type of legislation is necessary. It creates a new associate and calls him associate chief judge, but I notice in the legislation that the chief judge has rank and precedence over all other judges. After the associate chief judge, the junior judges, the supernumerary judges, have rank and precedence among themselves, according to seniority of appointment.

I find this interesting, I suppose that's part of the system. It's important to people to have rank and to sit higher on the bench and that sort of thing. Possibly I don't realize the significance of the whole process, but I just can't get overly excited about this. All I can say is that it is probably necessary. Certainly we will not oppose it.

When I see all our problems in the courts—and possibly we'll get into that when we get to the estimates, hopefully next week—and I see the delays; I see the lack of efficiency; I see the lack of a case-flow process to get these cases out. I see we are appointing more people—competent people, these judges, and in my opinion the appointments are getting better and better all the time—we are appointing these judges to judge because of their background, because of their expertise. We just pick the best people; the salaries have been increased substantially over the last while, and hopefully we are appointing the best people to judge.

What concerns me is that very often these very competent judges end up involved in administration. They are doing something that somebody else should be doing—which judge sits where; how many cases is he going to hear on a given day; can he go to Ottawa for one week because there is a trial that is going to take eight days.

I say to the Attorney General, it has been two years, now, that he has been in this job, and I don't expect him to be able to solve the inadequacies—the neglect, I should say—of all his predecessors, because we have been talking about this for some years. The whole administration of justice has been neglected. I think he perceives what the problems are.

His problem is that he doesn't have the money to cure it. It's obvious from his comments and opinions on the Small Claims Court Act, that he is lacking money.

But it seems to me that more major and substantial changes could be made in our administration of justice. We should seize this opportunity to do this. It wouldn't require that much money. I suppose we do have the time to appoint associate chief judges of the county court, but it seems to me that in the scheme of things, in the overall apparatus of the whole administration of justice, I would have hoped to see much more substantial legislation coming forward.

I know that would require bold steps on the part of the Attorney General, and I know there is always the fear of trampling on the jurisdiction of the courts and the judges. They are saying "Careful, we have a certain independence, we are the judiciary, you are the executive, we are the Legislature," but the fact remains that somewhere along the way, we are all here to serve the public, including the courts. That's the primary responsibility we have.

We are not doing that when we are just getting involved in what I consider to be—and I don't want to be derogatory to whoever is going to be the associate chief judge of the county and district court, but in my opinion in some measure this type of legislation is superficial. I look at the other things that are wrong with our courts. I would have hoped to see much more substantial legislation to really deal with the problems of our courts: the problems of the delays in county court, the problems in Supreme Court, the problems in the provincial court—be it family division or the criminal division.

Then there is the problem of substantial changes in the Small Claims Court. Unfortunately, what we are getting here is legislation which just doesn't solve very much. It is going to give someone an extra title. As I said, I want to be very careful not to appear to be offensive towards the judiciary. My colleague is telling me that sometimes I appear in front of him. Sure I do. And I have long discussions with judges as to what the problem is as well. I experience it first hand and I talk about it in the Legislature.

We're going to have to come to grips with this, because it's starting to overtake us. The whole administration of justice, which is one of the pillars of this province, should not be undermined by budgets.

I notice my colleague is approaching. I just wish we had the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) sitting here—he's the fellow we should be talking to. When I look at the money, when I look at those people on the other side—

Mr. Maeck: Where do we get the money from, Albert?

Mr. Roy: —and I look at the money they've squandered, for instance, on the 1975 election by giving out those car rebates and reducing the sales tax—what could we do with that $500 million in the administration of justice? What could we do with that kind of money to really solve the problems of the administration of justice? These so-called election gimmicks. I could see that financial problems are incurred in the administration of justice. For sure! The government has squandered some of the funds of this particular province.

I really feel, Mr. Speaker, that we must express concern—when we're dealing, for instance, with amendments to the County Court Judges Act—that all we're doing here today is making provisions for an associate chief judge of the county and district court.

I think we're not really responding to the needs of the community in the administration of justice. I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that in the near future we'll see something much more substantial to deal effectively with the real problems in the courts.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'd just like to respond, but I guess it would be out of order for me to do so at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Usually the minister winds up the debate on second reading.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The member for Ottawa East has got me so wound up that I'll—

Mr. Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. member for Lakeshore. Maybe by that time the minister will have cooled down.

Mr. Lawlor: I'm sure Frank Callaghan, now chief judge of the county court in York, will forgive me if I say: "Frankie and Johnny were lovers. Oh, and how they could love." Frankie has found his Johnny in this legislation today—he's got an associate judge. Hardly had the tonsure dried behind his ears and he has this inflicted upon him.

The point that the previous speaker made is surely valid. The minister is setting up a whole host of associate judgeships. I won't dispute that in some instances—for instance, in the high court—an associate may be necessary. I would like to get the firmest type of assurance that in this instance, does it mean that this associate judge too is going to be by and large, largely taken off the bench? That's a great shame. Is the appointment of a series of associates really designed to expedite, or to be beneficial, over against your court administrator concept? I'm not convinced of the validity of the notion in this particular regard.

The only other thing I want to say about the legislation in principle does arise out of the notes. You notice, Mr. Speaker, that they didn't attempt to spell out what this new associate judge is supposed to do: what his duties are. That is adverted to and sought to be explained or, even possibly explained away, in the notes that have been supplied.

The notes say: "The duties of the Chief Justice of Ontario, the Chief Justice of the High Court and the chief judge of the county or district court are, for the most part, not be found in statutes or in the rules of practice. Such duties are assigned by sections of the Judicature Act and the County Judges Act. But these do not begin to cover the multitudinous tasks which have by custom been assumed by the chief judicial officers. For this reason, it would be inappropriate to attempt to legislate in detail the duties of the associate chief justices and the associate chief judge. Rather, the offices should simply be created by amendments to the Judicature Act and the County Judges Act with the actual division of administrative labour to be worked out by the chief judicial officer and his associates."

Superficially, that seems to make sense. On the other hand, since we have basic suspicions—at least I have—about the formation of this new office as such, to be also bereft of any notion of precisely what he is supposed to do and to have nothing in the legislation seeking, not necessarily in detail but even in general terms, to spell it out, just as his own Act governing his duties as Attorney General is spelled out in sufficient terms, in the absence of that, I am standing here with a double doubt as to whether this is the best and wisest legislation the Attorney General could have brought forward under this head at least.

Mr. Bolan: I can appreciate the problems which the Attorney General has faced in the past couple of years in coming to grips with the problems of the courts. The question which I must ask myself is what will the creation of this position do to alleviate the problems which we have in the county courts system and I might also say, similarly in the Supreme Court. I can appreciate the problems which the Attorney General faces. He has no money. I am sure he would like to do more to rectify the problem. The function of this associateship, if I may call it that, will do nothing more than create more administration within the court system.

If there is a need to streamline the administration of the court system, then we should be looking at creating the appointment of an administrator and not an associate judgeship. I feel that this person, through that appointment—and I say this with the greatest of respect to whomever that person may be, will still be figuring out administrative problems which have been created within the county court judges system. Again, the same thing applies to the Supreme Court judges on their level. I might say that on their level the problems are even greater.

Often I have seen delays. I am sure the Attorney General has as well in the days when he was practising law. After hanging around in courtrooms for 17 years, one gets to appreciate some of the problems. To give a specific example, in North Bay the presiding Supreme Court judge comes swooping in with his gowns and robes and his reporter. He has one week for North Bay. There may be 20 cases on the list and some cases may be lengthy cases. There may be a case that will last two weeks or 10 days or whatever. He will say, "I'm just here for a week. I can't take anything which has any length to it." The first thing one knows the list folds and the judge is back in weekly court by Wednesday.

These are the types of problems which we have, particularly in the regions outside of Metro Toronto as we understand it. I understand in Metro Toronto the system seems to be picking up. There are more cases which seem to be going through. However, dealing with parts outside of Metro, and particularly in the north, we do encounter some very serious problems with respect to the administration of justice.

I would hope that Band-Aid type of legislation will not end there. I would hope that during the next session the Attorney General would have something more comprehensive. I can think of many areas. For example, I am sure that the Attorney General has heard the arguments about eliminating the county and Supreme Court system and having one system of courts; call it the Supreme Court or call it the county court.

Mr. Roy: You've got to call it the Supreme Court.

Mr. Bolan: Yes, you'd have to call it the Supreme Court because they are not prepared to go down to the county court level. Another suggestion which I am sure the Attorney General has heard is to regionalize certain parts of the province so that you have a number of Supreme Court judges, for example, who would be sitting in region 17, which may be the Sudbury-Nipissing district or region, or the Ottawa region, or the London region. I am sure that over the next couple of years, or at least I would hope during the lifetime of this particular Legislature, we would see legislation like that forthcoming.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I don't quarrel with the characterization attributed to this legislation by the member for Nipissing as a Band-Aid. I would have to agree with that. But I think it is important for him and other members of this Legislature to appreciate—and I won't take too much time now because I think this is an area that will be pursued in estimates—that a great deal of my energies, believe it or not, have been directed to resolving these problems during the past two years.

Firstly, the appointments of the associate chief judges and the associate chief justices in the Act that will follow this are being made at the request of the chief justices and the chief judge. Their request is based, very simply, on the grounds that they were appointed by Her Majesty to judge and, by reason of their many administrative duties, it is very difficult for them to sit as judges. Because these responsibilities have become so onerous and in order to allow them to sit more in court, where we would agree chief judges should be spending a good deal of their time, they feel it is necessary to have these appointments. But it goes beyond that.

I can anticipate a response, as has been already suggested by the member for Nipissing and others, that surely we should get the judges out of administrative work and appoint an administrator to take on these administrative responsibilities. But, I don't think I fully appreciated the delicacy of this problem until I arrived in my present office because the judiciary are, understandably so, very sensitive to any activity that will be perceived to impair their independence. When it comes to a non-judicial administrator giving direction to any judges I think the members opposite can appreciate that it's the type of direction that is not received in a very positive manner.

So, it is necessary for our chief judges to take on administrative functions if there is going to be any administration, any authority and, indeed, any accountability in the system. Recognizing the need for some degree of authority in this system, one quickly comes to the appreciation that the only authority that can be injected into the system must be authority from the judges themselves. For very understandable reasons, and they have made their position very clear, they are not going to take direction from anybody else, certainly not the government or administrators appointed by the government. That position has been made loud and clear to myself and my predecessors. It's on the record. It's clear in that respect.

My predecessors wrestled with this problem. Those who have been in the Legislature for a longer period than I have will recall the legislation which created the central west project to develop an area in the province whereby certain recommendations of the Ontario Law Reform Commission could be implemented in relation to the administration of the courts. The central west project and Wentworth-Halton area were introduced in order to inject better administration. A committee of judges, lawyers and administrators was established and this project which had self-destruct provisions proceeded for two years. Certainly one of the things that was learned by those who participated in this project was that the divided responsibility simply was not working. It was not likely to work very well.

When I talk about divided responsibility, I'm talking about the responsibility that is exercised by judges in their judicial capacity and that which is exercised by the Ministry of the Attorney General in an administrative capacity with respect to the functioning of the courts. Certain better solutions were required. I don't want to spend too much time going over history that is known to many of the members here. What we had learned from this central west project and the experience and our concerns were incorporated in the white paper on courts administration which was introduced a year ago.

Central to this recommendation was the recognition that for greater authority and improvements in the system the direction would have to come, not necessarily from the judges in the first instance, because they're not trained to be administrators or trained to look at administrative techniques, but obviously any implementation would have to come at the request of the judges themselves, more particularly the senior judges. Therefore, as members will recall, in our white paper on courts administration we suggested a judicial council made up of the chief judges of the three levels of the courts which would have supervisory capacity.

I might say the judges responded more or less quite positively to this. There are some problems inherent in this. As I say, we'll be discussing some of these problems later on this evening or more probably during the estimates. I am concerned about the continuing accountability of the government, more particularly the Ministry of the Attorney General. I don't for one feel that this accountability can be delegated.

Just before we adjourn I'd like to say that the leadership that was to be provided in this system had to come initially first and foremost from the Chief Justice of Ontario. Because of his stature and the tradition of that office, he had the potential for having a very positive impact throughout the system. I'm happy to report, although happy and sad to report that the last chief justice of this province, Mr. Chief Justice Estey, indicated his willingness to take on this responsibility, but at the same time indicated that it would be necessary to have these associate chief justices.

I'm happy to state that Chief Justice Estey was willing, as I hope his successor will be willing, to have a judicial council, even before legislation, acting in an advisory role to provide guidance for the judges across the province in relation to working out some of these problems related to case flow management which the judges must be inevitably involved in.

While Chief Justice Estey will be an adornment to the Supreme Court of Canada, and certainly it was an excellent appointment, I have to say at the same time that our federal friends demonstrated enormous insensitivity to the problems of Ontario by removing the chief justice, a man who had only served for nine months, notwithstanding the very valuable role he can and will play in the Supreme Court of Canada.

I'm not downgrading the importance of that for one moment. But I have to say, and for the first time publicly, that I regret that Ottawa was so much out of touch with the importance of the role of the chief justice of this province that they would see fit to appoint a man and leave him there for a period of time.

Mr. Speaker: May I remind the minister of the time.

Mr. Roy: Doesn't the minister agree that we should have the best people on the Supreme Court of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. minister have much more to say?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, only 15 seconds, Mr. Speaker.

I only indicate that while I compliment and congratulate and recognize the very valuable work that the former chief justice was doing in the area of court reform, at the same time I must express my regret that he was taken from us in such a peremptory manner.

Mr. Wildman: There goes the judge.

Mr. Foulds: He could have turned down the appointment.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

ANSWERS TO WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Answers to written questions were tabled as follows:

25. Mr. Grande—Inquiry of the ministry: 1. What was the number of Wintario tickets sold for every draw beginning July, 1977, to the present time? 2. What was the amount of Wintario profits from its inception to the present? 3. What was the cost of administration of the Ontario Lottery Corporation? 4. What was the number of: (a) full-time, (b) contract, (c) part-time, personnel administering the Ontario Lottery Corporation? [Tabled October 18, 1977.]

Answer by the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Welch):

1. Since July 1977, an average of 6.5 million Wintario tickets have been sold per draw every two weeks. Since July there have been eight draws.

2. Since September 1975, $159 million have been made available to the Ministry of Culture and Recreation for physical fitness, sports and recreational projects and activities in Ontario.

3. The Ontario Lottery Corporation is responsible for administering two lotteries in Ontario—Wintario and the Provincial. Administrative costs for both lotteries during the fiscal year 1976-77 was $2,557,889.00. This represented 1.21 per cent of gross sales compared to 2.09 per cent of gross sales in 1975-76.

4. There are 64 full-time staff and six casual staff employed by the Ontario Lottery Corporation.

26. Mr. Grande—Inquiry of the ministry: Will the Minister of Transportation and Communications table a progress report as to the state of the acquisition by title to: "The Spadina right of way, south of Eglinton, including housing, ravine lands, and unopened road allowances, so as to stop-up and close the right of way"? Have the orders in council giving the corporation of Metropolitan Toronto the authority to pave south of Eglinton been rescinded; if not, why not? Has the right of Metro to float debentures to the tune of $6 million been removed? [Tabled October 18, 1977.]

Answer by the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow):

On April 1, 1977, the Ministry of Transportation and Communications assumed the unopened road allowances affecting parts of Russell Hill Road, Spadina Road and Everden Road. The appropriate plans were registered on this date.

The arrangements for the acquisition by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications of property in the former Spadina Expressway right of way, south of Eglinton Avenue, have been under consideration by both the staff of the ministry and Metro for some time. A proposal respecting this matter was made to Metro in a letter dated January 11, 1977 but no response has been received to date. It is anticipated that the details of the transfer will be resolved in the near future and the ministry will acquire title to these properties.

The orders in council giving Metro the right to pave south of Eglinton have not been rescinded. The reason for this is that the Lieutenant Governor in Council has the authority to approve a municipal bylaw. However, the Lieutenant Governor in Council has no authority to unilaterally "un-approve" a bylaw. It would be appropriate for Metro, if it so wishes, to pass a bylaw rescinding the original bylaws and then approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council could be given.

Information gathered from both Metropolitan Toronto and the Ontario Municipal Board indicates that the answer to the question re removal of Metro's right to float debentures is no.

The $6 million figure refers to the unexpended portion ($5.850 million as of September 30, 1977) remaining from the total approval of $70.868 million for the original Spadina project as a whole.

Metro's treasury, as well as its legal branch, do not see the need or justification for applying to the OMB to have this balance rescinded. The OMB confirms that it has not received any such application, nor is there any other activity in this regard.

Removal of Metro's unexpended authority seems neither necessary nor advisable. It does not seem necessary because removal of $6 million will not, in its own right, stop Spadina when expenditures of this size can easily be financed out of current revenues. It does not seem advisable because further expenditures may be needed in future for general capital improvements north of Eglinton.

27. Mr. Grande—Inquiry of the ministry: 1. How many of the residents who were previously overcharged in the Linco'n Place Nursing Home since January 1, 1976, have been reimbursed by the home? 2. In how many other private nursing homes has the same situation existed? Were the residents in those homes reimbursed? If so, how many? [Tabled October 18, 1977.]

Interim answer by the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell):

These questions have required extensive study and investigation which are not completed. I expect to have an answer ready within one week from today.

28. Mr. Grande—Inquiry of the ministry:

1. Will the Minister of Health provide a list of all private nursing homes in Metropolitan Toronto? 2. Will the ministry provide a schedule of services and the charge for each service that the home is entitled to bill the residents? [Tabled October 18, 1977.]

Answer by the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell):

1. List of nursing homes in Metropolitan Toronto attached.

2. I presume that the schedule of services to which Mr. Grande refers is the extended care services found in the Regulations under the Health Insurance Act 1972.

These are: (a) standard ward accommodation, meals, including special and therapeutic diets and laundry, including washing and drying of personal clothing; (b) skilled nursing and personal care given by or under the supervision of a registered nurse or registered nursing assistant under the direction of a physician; (c) provision of routine medical supplies, including wheelchairs and geriatric chairs; (d) provision of personal hygiene supplies; (e) provision of personal grooming supplies and services.

The regulations prescribe that a co-payment is to be made in respect to extended care services as an entirety.

Effective November 1, 1977, the rates chargeable to residents will be as follows: Standard ward $8.20 per diem, $249.40 monthly; semi-private $12.90 per diem, $392.40 monthly; private $17.60 per diem, $535.40 monthly.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1977

The House resumed at 8:02 p.m.

JUDICATURE AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved second reading of Bill 79, An Act to amend the Judicature Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. minister have an opening statement?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, this bill is similar in intent to the amendments to the County Judges Act that we discussed just before the supper recess. I think the comments that I made in relation to the debate on second reading with respect to that bill would apply equally to the intent and principle of this legislation.

Mr. Roy: I've made some comments on the previous bill, Bill 78, about my concerns in the administration of justice. I would like to make certain comments about this particular bill.

There's no doubt that the creation of what is called the Associate Chief Justice of the High Court and the office of the Associate Chief Justice of Ontario are required. There is no doubt in my mind, as well—in view of the great increase in the case load, and the fact that the High Court, more than any other level of courts, is subject to the picking of a particular judge to do other duties on very short notice—that it does cramp the style and flexibility of that court. Certainly, it troubles the chief justice who has to jockey his judges in various jurisdictions at various times throughout the province. In view of the increased case loads, it would appear to be sensible that the total of 38 judges be increased to a total of 42. In that measure, it's not a burden on the financial situation of the province, because these judges, I understand, are paid by the federal government, in any event. In that aspect, I suppose, we won't get into the finances.

But I am interested in the comments earlier by the Attorney General. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, I have said that at the High Court level especially, and I think everyone here will agree, that the calibre of individuals appointed has been just tremendous. It is to the great credit of the federal Attorney General that he has got some of the best people possible in the bar to accept an appointment at the High Court level. I would think this has happened more in the last 10 years or so than ever before.

Last Friday night, I guess, I was at a bar dinner in Ottawa where the speaker was Mr. John Robinette, QC, one of the most eminent counsel, certainly, not only in this province but in this country. He said he was concerned that some of the better people within the bar were being lost to the bar and going on to the bench. He said it with sort of a humorous tone, and generally speaking, one is talking about people who are serving in the public interest. One can say: "Well, that's the highest calling," but as one who has been a member of the bar since about 1929, as Mr. Robinette has, he was expressing concern that when a counsel has attained that particular level of excellence when he was an enhancement to his whole profession, he would end up being appointed a judge. He felt that to some measure it was sad.

But in any event, that is clearly a reflection of how the members of the bar—

Mr. Lawlor: Sad? John refused. He was making $250,000 a year.

Mr. Roy: I know he did. I think in fairness to—

Mr. Lawlor: He was one of the few.

Mr. Roy: In fairness to him, in view of the length of time that he's practised, I don't think money is the incentive for keeping him off the bench. I frankly think he's one who enjoys greatly what he's doing. Having served and lived frugally since 1929, I would think that money is not going to be the deciding factor—

Mr. Lawlor: L'argent, l'argent est—

Mr. Roy: I don't know what that means, but anyway—

Mr. Lawlor: Don't you understand French?

Mr. Roy: Not your French, I can't.

Some of those judges serving at that level are among the finest and best brains in the country. As I said before, what concerns me is that after we appoint these people —

Mr. Foulds: Vern didn't get his appointment.

Mr. Roy:—they end up in a situation where they are doing administrative work.

The compendium which is attached to this bill talks about the great increase in the case load—a 54 per cent increase at the provincial level from 1970 to 1975, and I would think at 1977, only at the provincial level, it would be over 100 per cent. Statistics from Ottawa at the provincial level indicate that there has been an increase in the case load from 1970 to 1977 of something like 150 per cent.

But in any event, the compendium goes on to say that the net result is that the courts at all levels in Ontario are becoming larger and more complex and the burden of administering them has become correspondingly heavier. This burden for the most part falls directly on the shoulders of the chief judicial officer of each court. I can understand that.

The Attorney General was saying earlier that in the administration and the case flow of the courts the judges have advised him that they want to keep their independence. They don't want to be in a situation where the legislative arm of government is saying to them: "You are going to sit so many hours. You are going to sit in a particular court. You are going to do this. You are going to do that." This would be in some way an infringement of the independence of the judiciary.

I can understand that to some measure, but I don't believe for a minute that means it's incumbent upon these judges, apart from the chief justice—we are fast approaching a situation, and I think the Attorney General will agree with me, where the chief justice is going to become more of an administrator than a judicial officer, and he's going to have a full-time job just administering these courts. But that doesn't alter the fact that we should have competent experts in the field of case flow and experts in the field of how we can make better use of our facilities and make better use of the judges that we have.

I think that is the weakness. I don't think it is incumbent on all these judges. I have seen it time and time again—Supreme Court judges going into the county town and then they end up in a situation where they say, "Look, I have only a week. Can I sit here a week? I'll phone Toronto and see if I can't get another judge down here to take a particular case." Surely there's an inherent weakness when we force our judges into a situation where they are supposed to be judging and they become, in fact, administrators.

It seems to me that that is a weakness. I can understand what the judges are saying. But, I don't see anything wrong in having competent administrators or having competent systems of administration. Yet, the chief justice could use that system and then flowing through the chief judge have a system of courts which is efficient and which makes full use of the existing facilities and full use of the manpower which we have.

I think this is a weakness. Just as an example, this week in Ottawa we get an extra judge. There's one Supreme Court judge sitting hearing non-jury cases. And we get an extra judge who is going to come down to hear the jury cases. It turns out that he can only stay a week. In the criminal lineup, there are a couple of murder cases which are going to take more than a week, so he can't hear those. So the bar, thinking, of course, that there is going to be jury work at the criminal level, aren't expecting their jury work at the civil level to proceed. All at once, at the last minute, all the civil case jury work is called before the judge. There are about nine cases and not one of them is ready.

After the first couple of cases fall, where they say they are not ready, the other counsels down the line are saying, "Well, I don't have to be ready before Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday," and you've got witnesses all over the place. So everything falls just like a deck of cards, and no cases are ready. So, the judge is on the phone asking the chief justice what he should do and what type of case is he going to take. The registrar of the court is hustling all over the place to see if he can't find some undefended divorces or something to fill the judge's time.

This is not just an isolated instance. It continually happens. I say that that is not only the fault of the court administration, it is the fault sometimes of the profession. Very often they talk big until they get to the courtroom door and then there seems to be some reluctance to have their case proceed.

Judges say that in Ottawa there is a particularly bad situation where, apparently, counsel seem to have this reluctance. In other areas of the province there seem to be one or two law firms that can always have a case ready to go and take up the slack of the court, whereas in Ottawa they can't seem to find anybody who is ready to do that. So, anyway, what I am trying to say—

Mr. Foulds: It has fallen since you left full time.

Mr. Roy: I can't really say that. I am not sure sometimes that I don't contribute to that. But, basically, if I am going to go to trial, I want the case to proceed as early as possible. If I am not going to go to trial, I settle. Basically, I would hope that the members of the profession would take that approach.

In any event, what I am trying to say is that there is a contribution to the lack of efficiency on the part of the profession and there is a lack of efficiency about the whole administrative set-up. I am convinced that if we were to put more emphasis on the efficiency of the whole administration—it could be flowing through the chief judge—then you might wake up and shake up the profession.

But that is going to take decisions by the Attorney General. I think they are decisions that might not please everybody. My colleague from Nipissing (Mr. Bolan) was asking why we have a level of county and Supreme Court. Really, in this day and age, we shouldn't have it. We should just have the Supreme Court level. Is it reasonable in this day and age that we have all the Supreme Court judges sitting here in Toronto, then go on the circuit to various areas of the province? I really think that should be changed. I don't think that's reasonable today. I think we've passed the stage of the old idea that, in the old cowboy town you get the out-of-town judge to come in—

Mr. Ruston: The hanging judge.

[8:15]

Mr. Roy: —as an impartial arbiter coming from the big city to right the wrongs of everybody. I think we could have local judges in the Supreme Court. I see no reason why the county areas, be it Windsor, Ottawa, London—not Toronto, of course—should get the same service as Metropolitan Toronto from the Supreme Court. I don't see why we shouldn't get equal service from the Supreme Court. I think it's time to make that sort of decision. If it so happens that it's the nature of a case where it's best to get an out-of-town judge, fine. They do it anyway in a provincial court or in a county court.

But, I think we really have to come down and make these meaningful decisions. I appreciate the concern expressed by the Attorney General that when you appear to get things rolling with a chief justice like Mr. Justice Estey, all at once he's appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada. I can appreciate that that's a loss. That is a great loss, because I think, at least my short experience—

Mr. Lawlor: I have never seen a judge rise so fast.

Mr. Roy: Well, his rise, from just one of us, I shouldn't say "one of us"; rather, one of you, because he had his QC—

Mr. Lawlor: It is either one of two things. It's either brilliance or politics.

Mr. Roy: I don't really know about politics. I do know that his sense of humour was sans pareil, if you understand what I mean.

Mr. Lawlor: It was at least that.

Mr. Roy: So he went in a very short time, a couple of years probably, from Crown lawyer to High Court judge, to Chief Judge of the High Court—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Court of Appeal, Chief Justice of the High Court, Chief Justice of Ontario.

Mr. Roy: —Chief Justice of Ontario, Supreme Court of Canada. It's just fantastic. I think it's unheard of in the annals of judicial history.

Mr. Foulds: Sounds like William Shatner.

Mr. Lawlor: Poor old Laskin.

Mr. Roy: You're torn between two sort of principles where the Attorney General says, "This was a good man. I think we could have used this fellow. He gave every indication that he was moving in the right direction." On the other hand—

Mr. Lawlor: "If you would only stick around for a month."

Mr. Roy: —you have the situation where the federal people say, "Look, we want our best brains, our most competent judges on the Supreme Court of Canada." Those are the two opposing principles and it's difficult for me as just a little country lawyer to be able to make that momentous decision and say the Attorney General is right or Mr. Trudeau is right in what he did.

I do think we can all be unanimous in the conclusion that we've lost a good man. Hopefully there will be a new chief justice who will look at some of these things. I think we must give leadership and the Attorney General has got to give leadership. I think there is a fine line and yet there is an area where we can do some work—

Mr. Foulds: He wants the leadership. He is going for the leadership.

Mr. Roy: —about telling judges that we want full use of their time. I don't think judges will be concerned about whether this flows through the associate chief justice or through the chief justice. They'll accept that. They realize that sometimes the whole system is not giving the best possible effort or the most efficient effort to the community. I think they're prepared to accept that.

What concerns me is this eternal problem of saying, "We've got to be careful because they want their independence." That's been said to us here by four Attorneys General. The time has come, Mr. Speaker. The time is going to pass us by and society is going to say, "What's happening?" The pressure is going to be too much. You're wondering if this is all within the bill, Mr. Speaker, and I say it is. It's right there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Which section? I was just wondering which section you were referring to.

Mr. Roy: I'm speaking generally on the bill, because I'm reading from the compendium where it talks about all of these things. Who am I to question the opinion of the Attorney General of this province, eh? Right?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: You are absolutely right.

Mr. Roy: The Supreme Court of Canada occasionally differs with him, but—

Mr. Foulds: It never stopped you before.

Mr. Roy: —not the member for Ottawa East. Never! Never, Mr. Speaker.

I think it's important that we point these things out, that hopefully we'll see—

Mr. Foulds: What things? What have you pointed out so far?

Mr. Roy: The member for Port Arthur will understand. I'm glad to see that he's—what? deputy or acting House leader? He's acting House leader and maybe we'll get to educate him yet—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that in this particular bill?

Mr. Roy: Is it mentioned in the bill that the member is—I don't really know.

Mr. Foulds: I hope it includes the salary raise, I tell you.

Mr. McClellan: You haven't said a damn thing.

Mr. Roy: I appreciate that some of the things I say are not understandable to some of the members of the NDP. But I'm not trying to convince them. Hopefully I'm trying to convince my colleague, the Attorney General, who's just making notes of every word I'm saying right now. That's why I know what I'm saying is important.

Mr. McClellan: Absolutely unintelligible.

Mr. Foulds: What is he making notes with?

Mr. Roy: Hopefully, in the near future we will see some meaningful changes take place within the administration—some of those changes I have been mentioning. And if that happens, the government will get the full support of the members on this side. We will even give them credit for having original ideas over there. Not only the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) gets original ideas. We say the Attorney General has finally taken the bull by the horns and he is going to solve matters.

Mr. Lawlor: Frank Drea?

Mr. Foulds: Wasn't Frank Drea the guy who wanted to elect the Supreme Court? Didn't he make a speech about electing the Supreme Court?

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, thank you for using your discretion as wisely as you have.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As widely or wisely?

Mr. Roy: Wisely.

Mr. Lawlor: I think I have said pretty well all that is of value about this sort of thing a long time ago. I just mentioned the protocol sections of the legislation which titillates us all I am sure. With that I look forward to the small claims court bill.

Mr. Roy: What happened?

Mr. Lawlor: I've lost interest.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Very briefly, I want to reiterate, that one of the prime purposes of Bill 79 is to relieve the chief justices of the two Supreme Courts—the appellate division and the trial division—from the administrative responsibilities. I want to re-emphasize that. It is to relieve them of some of these administrative tasks so that they can spend more time judging.

I sympathize with a number of things that have been said by the member for Ottawa East with his usual eloquence.

Mr. Lawlor: I have never heard him speak so long about so little.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I must admit I am totally astounded by the brevity of the member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Roy: So am I.

Mr. McClellan: He said 10 times as much as either of you.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: But I hesitate to say that because I am sure he will make up for it with the small claims court bill.

Mr. Lawlor: You are perfectly right. If you have been to dinner with the Speaker it does make you more succinct.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading was also agreed to on motion.

PROVINCIAL COURTS
AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved second reading of Bill 80, An Act to amend the Provincial Courts Act.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, just to reiterate what I said when I introduced the bill, again we are attempting to create an associate chief judge at each division of the provincial courts—that is the criminal and family division—for reasons similar to those advanced in relation to the county court and the Supreme Court of Ontario.

Secondly, the intent of the bill is to provide an amendment to the Provincial Courts Act to allow for the awarding of costs in provincial court family court proceedings.

Mr. Roy: On this bill, we are, obviously, in favour, especially on the second matter of the question of the provincial courts, family division, having the power to award costs. I recall that there has recently been some jurisprudence, I think, in that area. One provincial court judge some place in this province has awarded costs. I thought that was a precedent that had been established. But I suppose sometimes precedents are established by somewhat stretching the existing law. I think it is incumbent on this court—I think it is a necessity—that that power be spelled out clearly and that provincial judges of the family division have that power, considering the nature of the litigation or the nature of the proceedings before them.

As for the associate chief judge of each division of the provincial court, I'm not convinced that that is something which is necessary, just as I'm not convinced that it is not. I just can't get too excited one way or the other. My concern, in seeing amendments come forward under the Provincial Courts Act, is that it would appear to me that much more substantial changes could have been made to the Provincial Courts Act. The reason I say this is that as one who represents a riding in Ottawa, I've had the experience first-hand of what happens when there are weaknesses within a particular piece of legislation.

I am referring specifically to the weakness in the provincial courts legislation dealing with the judicial council, the function of the judicial council, the scope of the authority or the jurisdiction of the judicial council. Within the Provincial Courts Act there is legislation which says these hearings are to be in private. Yet we had a situation in Ottawa where we may ask what good is the hearing being in private when it's on the front pages of every newspaper in the city that there is a hearing. People come to conclusions, whether the information or the complaint against the judge has any merit or not. The minute there is a front page story saying that a senior judge is before the judicial council, his credibility has been seriously undermined.

I would like to hear some comment from the Attorney General whether we are going to see this type of legislation. It appears to me that with the experience in Ottawa involving Judge Swabey and Judge Williams, there was a situation where I think it was clearly pointed out there are some weaknesses and some serious gaps within the legislation which has set up this judicial council. It seems to me if you are going to protect the integrity and the efficiency of the judiciary they cannot be subject to public whims. Any misfit in a community can make a complaint against a judge. The minute it is referred to judicial council, if it's on the front page of a paper, the presumption is that someone has done wrong. The public will exercise the onus against the judge.

I mention this because, in both Judge Williams' and Judge Swabey's cases, let's presume they had been innocent. Really their effectiveness has been seriously undermined by having continually, every second day, the front page of the paper saying something about the judges being involved in this or involved in that. I say very seriously to the Attorney General that I really hope we are going to see legislation which will not only make the hearing private but will make the fact that there is a hearing private as well. The bar association in Ottawa, as the minister will recall, asked that there be an inquiry to find out the source of the information being fed the newspapers about this hearing and to investigate all of this.

The newspapers hadn't broken the law or anything. Considering the competitive nature of the press you could hardly blame them, if they got a scoop, for using it. I think it is incumbent on us, if we believe in the integrity and the independence of the judiciary, to protect it. That is one aspect of it.

Mr. Foulds: There is a difficulty there.

Mr. Roy: There is a difficulty there. I trust my friend could understand that the freedom of the press or the public's right to know is not absolute. If it is, we have many laws which make it not absolute. For instance, one can have a preliminary inquiry without the public knowing what is going on. Or would you want proceedings in family court involving juveniles to be public? These are all things where we feel there are other principles which are just as important as the public's right to know or the freedom of the press.

Mr. Foulds: What amendments would you propose?

Mr. Roy: I would propose an amendment that would say that not only is the hearing private but the fact that there is a hearing shall not be public until there is some sort of determination. I can make a comparison that if the police were to publish the fact that they are investigating someone, investigation does not necessarily mean they have a prima facie case. Once the charge is laid, then it's public and that's fine. But the fact they would be investigating someone and that would become public could seriously undermine the reputation of someone.

[8:30]

Take the member for Port Arthur. He's a public figure. What would the fact that the police are investigating do to his reputation?

Mr. Foulds: They already have in 1971 and 1973. It was on the front page of the Globe. They even tapped my phone too.

Mr. Roy: What I'm saying basically is that these are some of the things I would hope the Attorney General will bring forward. We've got to tighten up that legislation or we're getting ourselves into a situation. At the time that the judicial council is looking into this, at that point the press should know. If there is a breach of the law by a judge, then he should get the same treatment as anyone else. But at least we should determine that there has been a breach and he should not be judged in the press before at least there's been that determination.

That's concerned me to no end. I've got into fights with the press in Ottawa about this whole issue. I would have hoped that when this Provincial Courts Act was brought forward, we might have seen that. I appreciate there has not been that much time.

I say again that I think it's extremely important. We go out of our way to have legislation that treats the individual on the street fairly. We say to him, "You shall have every safeguard to see that your rights are protected." That applies all the way through the system. But at the top level, if a particular judge doesn't get fair treatment or if our police officers have legislation which is unfair to them, how can we expect these people to render justice, if the minute there is a problem at their level, they are not treated with the same type of civil rights?

That's concerned me and I thought I should put that on the record. I would hope we'll see legislation coming in a very near future to tighten up that whole thing. I think that is important legislation appointing the judicial council. I think it's necessary. On the other hand, we must be very careful we don't have a type of setup whereby we can undermine the process unfairly. Once the damage is done, we've ruined the reputation of certain individuals and certain judges. Sometimes it can be unfair. I'm not saying it happened in this particular case. Had they been innocent, could these judges have gone back to sit in the courts after their names had been on the front pages all summer? I think it would have been a problem. There would have been a perception on the part of the public that they'd done some wrong when they had not. I think we should look at that.

Mr. Foulds: The same thing applies when someone has been charged.

Mr. Roy: But they had not been charged. They were only being investigated.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, have you ever seen Albert more Gallic, more Cyrano de Bergerac, swaggering, tocsins clamouring, get the sword out, up and down the hallway, meeting the bride of somebody else, I think?

Interjections.

Mr. Lawlor: Isn't it farouche, as the French say?

Mr. Foulds: It struck me more like Sancho Panza.

Mr. Roy: I am not sure what he said but whatever he said—

Mr. Lawlor: You know Cyrano de Bergerac. I am comparing you to him tonight. Aren't you pleased? What do you want to be, d'Artagnan? Which musketeer do you think you are, with all the swashbuckling, all the sword rattling, all the noise in the night? Listen, in this particular piece of legislation —I think it's Bill 80—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I never thought this bill would provoke such majesty of language.

Mr. Lawlor: —this is one of the visitations that the minister has. He's a fortunate fellow. He has a deputy minister from the academic world, from the world of pure logic. There's nothing more logical than logic if you take it seriously. He says, "We're going to have an associate justice here, and an associate justice there. You are going to have them in the High Court. You may as well have them in the low court." You have them all over the place. Once you start, there's no end to it. Here we have them in the Provincial Courts Act.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think we should have an associate member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Come on! This is pure malarkey. In each instance the minister should make a justification for it.

Interjection.

Mr. Lawlor: Here you are, monomaniacally—far from logic—it's a kind of mania—you're proliferating associate justices all over the park.

Mr. Breithaupt: When everyone's somebody, then no one's anybody.

Mr. Lawlor: Associate Chief Justice of the High Court, associate chief justice of the county court, associate chief justice of the criminal division of the provincial court. You may as well round it out, so to speak, whether he's needed or not. Whether he's associate chief judge of the provincial court, family division. So we get the whole—

Mr. Foulds: Why don't we have an associate chief judge of the small claims court?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We're coming to that.

Mr. Lawlor: We will. We haven't really got around to appointing justices of that court yet.

Mr. Foulds: In the next bill?

Mr. Lawlor: We will in 10 minutes' time. And next week he'll appoint an associate chief justice of that particular level of court. That's really what it comes to.

Mr. Foulds: Why are you giving the Liberals all these opportunities to appoint them?

Mr. Lawlor: Once they start out—I mean, the bureaucratic mind, the sheer logic, drives one from one position to another ineluctably. It's quite terrifying, and I stand here somewhat terrified by the sheer logic of the position, and not in the least convinced as to its practicality.

I think before dinner the minister made some kind of a speech saying that it was really necessary in order, I hope, to keep them all working where they belong, in the courts. He did not want to happen in the courts what happens in the field of education, where some of the most distinguished and capable teachers are echeloned—I think that's the word—

Mr. Breithaupt: It's a good one.

Mr. Lawlor: —lifted, like Ezekiel on the clouds, you know—brrrrr—up onto some kind of echelon—

Mr. Roy: I wonder if Hansard got that.

Mr. Lawlor: —where they're no longer of service either to themselves or to the rest of the human race.

There are hundreds of them and they're all making 50,000 bucks a year, and it's terrifying. Don't do it with the judges. A man with that particular capability who is able to tell who is lying. There aren't many of us who can tell who is lying. We can't even tell when we're lying ourselves. We have to spend time at it, you know.

Mr. Breithaupt: Certainly the electors were fooled.

Mr. Lawlor: To be able to assess a witness in the box and say, "He's pushing it. He's overloaded." In that particular case, you have to be really careful, particularly about overloading.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Particularly when you have dinner with the Speaker.

Mr. Lawlor: The business of costs. This cuts both ways. It's a Dostoevsky of a sort—it has good and bad features. Awarding of costs under provincial courts, family division, can add to the costs of litigation. I suppose the hon. minister will argue when he stands up, if he is able to stand up, that it will cut back on litigation. If cost is to be considered one of the elements in the whole situation, they'd be somewhat loath to push it, and it will have a beneficial effect on the pure case load.

On the other hand, what we're seeking to do is make the courts more approachable to a greater number of people. The costs of litigation are so horrendous now and to introduce it, as the minister is doing in this legislation, into the family court setup, where it was formerly excluded, is really a questionable move. To many individuals, if they come in to see me at the constituency office, I say, "Stay out of the courts. You can't win even if you win."

The edge on costs, the double feature there, the fact of solicitor-clients and the client-and-client cost situation will bear too heavily. The costs are emerging more and more often as a predominant feature, the costs being greater than the amount under litigation.

Can you imagine a more backward, retrograde, horrendous situation than that, Mr. Speaker? It's very common. You don't want to get into that in the family court setup between husbands and wives and the children situation all the way round.

Mr. Roy: I disagree. What about the husband who gives—

Mr. Lawlor: And yet the Attorney General is doing it. This is what his legislation is designed to bring about.

Mr. Roy: There should be costs.

Mr. Lawlor: We have enormous respect for the office and for his capabilities. We don't like going against the grain, but on the basis of the pure logic of this situation, associate judges all over the place, on no really justifiable principles, and then the imposition of costs in this particular court. I find the legislation very questionable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak on Bill 80? if not, the hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: First of all, if I may respond to the remarks of the member for Ottawa East and, more particularly in relation to the unhappy situation with respect to some of the provincial court judges in Ottawa who, I appreciate, have been enormously embarrassed by some of the rather unfortunate publicity that has been very evident over the course of the summer in relation to their own personal situation. There are a number of issues raised by this.

First of all the information and the facts, that have been brought forward by some of the press to titillate the public—I just don't know where they came from. They certainly did not come from the judicial council. They certainly did not come from anyone associated with the Ministry of the Attorney General.

Of course, the member for Ottawa East raises the issue as to whether, at any time, the public should have any knowledge of the fact that there even is a hearing of the judicial council. Certainly, in this case, I don't think at any time did we bring that fact forward to the public. At the same time, I have to say that there may be cases in which the public has an interest in knowing that there is a hearing. I can think of one case in particular that has occurred during my tenure as Attorney General and that is when a statement or behaviour is attributed to a judge in open court that offends a great percentage of the population.

In those circumstances it may well be in the interests of the administration of justice—

Mr. Roy: We're not talking about the same thing.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, no, but we're talking about the judicial council and I'm saying that in those circumstances it may be in the public interest and in the interest of the administration of justice for the Attorney General to indicate the matter will be reviewed by the judicial council. I think you have to differentiate between alleged misconduct that may occur in a courtroom, in public, as opposed to something that may have occurred outside the courtroom, as was the case insofar as the Ottawa judges were concerned. I regret very much the publicity that has occurred in relation to that matter.

[8.45]

I would also like to assure the member for Ottawa East that I'm not satisfied with the present state of that legislation. I think he would be interested to know, as would the other members of the Legislature, that I have requested the former Chief Justice of Ontario, the hon. George Gale, to review that legislation and make recommendations to us with respect to possible amendments. I think this might be of interest to the members because I share his concern and believe the legislation, insofar as the function of the judicial council is concerned, could be improved.

With regard to the learned contribution by the member for Lakeshore, on the provision for awarding of costs in the family division of the provincial court, I would like to make two or three observations. It should decrease the cost of litigation for the successful party awarded costs, since that party will have some relief in relation to legal fees and disbursements.

At the present time, it is often a woman who is looking for support from a defaulting husband. Under the present legislation, she may be timid about going to court herself, which she can do. She may feel more comfortable with, and obviously in many cases will benefit from, the services of a lawyer. It's important, if she has a meritorious case, that she knows she will get some relief from the costs of hiring a lawyer in relation to these expenses.

Mr. Lawlor: Don't you think he'll simply increase the fee?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It will also discourage frivolous defences and indeed frivolous applications. But more important than that, Mr. Speaker, I think the provision is necessary in family court, particularly in the light of our family law reform legislation, because we know under that legislation the family court will be given increased jurisdiction, and in our view, it's important the litigant has the possibility of obtaining some relief in relation to legal fees.

The House divided on the motion by Hon. Mr. McMurtury for second reading of Bill 80, which was approved on the following vote:

SMALL CLAIMS COURTS
 AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved second reading of Bill 81, An Act to amend The Small Claims Courts Act.

Mr. Roy: Needless to say, we on this side, and I suppose the Attorney General on his side, must be pretty pleased about having someone who is responsible around this place, when one considers the vote that has just taken place with the so-called defenders of the oppressed to my left—

Mr. Wildman: Oh don't be so niggardly.

Mr. Lawlor: On a question of privilege, the irresponsibility of that statement.

Mr. Roy: —taking the approach that those poor wives who are chasing these defaulter husbands are not entitled to costs.

Mr. Foulds: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, he should speak to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have listened very intently and there is nothing that can be construed as a point of order.

Mr. Foulds: There is no way he is speaking on the principle of the bill.

Mr. Roy: I can say that; I suppose if I wasn't a—

Mr. Lawlor: Is there nothing sacred in this place?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lawlor: That posturing over there—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lawlor: —that preposterous hypocritical son over there—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would caution the hon. member that we have already dealt with Bill 80. We are dealing with the principle of Bill 81.

Mr. Roy: I can understand, Mr. Speaker, that the people to my left would get very exercised, perplexed and I don't know what I can call it, if I had to go through such an embarrassing experience as they just had. I would stand up on points of order regularly and try to avoid any debate on this.

Mr. Lawlor: We have been standing up for many years; the last bastion—

Mr. Roy: There he is. That's what I mean. Look at him.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lawlor: You couldn't expect much liberty from the Liberals.

Mr. Speaker: Will the member for Lakeshore come to order?

Mr. Lawlor: I think I will.

Mr. Speaker: We are dealing with the principle.

Mr. Lawlor: Reluctantly, I will come to order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An hon. member: Don't throw him out.

Mr. Lawlor: Order is one of the last things I think I should come to.

Mr. Speaker: I won't caution the hon. member again.

Mr. Lawlor: Caution!

Mr. Speaker: We are dealing with the principle on second reading of Bill 81, An Act to amend The Small Claims Courts Act. The hon. member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Roy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Breithaupt: Don't provoke him.

Mr. Roy: I'll certainly try not to be provocative in any way whatsoever, Mr. Speaker, and speak to the principle of this bill.

Mr. Lawlor: Stay on the point.

Mr. Roy: On a number of the other bills we have passed, I have certainly made critical comment about how most of this legislation in fact was at best superficial and that we weren't dealing with the real problems within the administration of justice. We on this side of the House would have liked to see much more meaningful legislation come forward to solve the problems in the administration of justice.

Mr. Lawlor: Is that the principle?

Mr. Germa: There are too many lawyers in the courts. That is the trouble. Why don't you talk about that? Take the lawyers out of the courts.

Mr. Roy: My God, these people to my left, Mr. Speaker, are provoking.

Mr. Germa: You know what is plugging up the courts.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Roy: I can see they are exercised. I suppose they are embarrassed somewhat by the approach they have just taken on the previous legislation and they are trying to cover up, through noise or otherwise.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Could I ask the member for Ottawa East to stick to Bill 81? The other debate is finished.

Interjections.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order. Could I ask the members to the left of the member for Ottawa East to please pay attention to the member for Ottawa East and to forget the last vote?

Mr. Germa: He is antagonizing us.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Will the member for Ottawa East please continue?

Mr. Roy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This legislation, the Small Claims Courts Amendment Act, is the typical example and the evidence of how, unfortunately, the neglect of the administration of justice for so many years is catching up to us. It also demonstrates, as I said to the Attorney General earlier in the day, why the administration of justice, which is an important factor in our whole law and order approach that should be followed in every democratic society, should not be hampered by budgets.

Back in 1963, however, the McRuer report made certain recommendations--

Mr. Martel: You never even read it; somebody told you about it. Are you talking about the McRuer report?

Mr. Roy: --to enhance the whole system and procedure within the Small Claims Courts Act. There was a whole raft of suggestions about how we could best enhance the case flow within the small claims court system and make it more efficient and more responsive to the needs of 1977 justice. That was suggested back in 1963, but nothing was done.

Further recommendations came forward in 1974 from the Ontario Law Reform commission. Some of these recommendations have been accepted now, but really we are not dealing meaningfully with the problems within the administration of justice.

Small claims court is important. I suppose a higher percentage of the people are dealing with small claims courts than are dealing with Supreme Court or even the county courts and, unfortunately, they are having to go through a system which they consider to be not responsive to 19th or 20th century society and which gives the whole administration of justice a black eye.

I read from the compendium: "These recommendations have been fully analysed and assessed and a decision made not to implement them at this time." It also states: "Practical consideration militates against the present implementation of the recommendations. The ministry appreciates that many desirable programs must be deferred in view of the governmental program of financial constraints. Fundamental structure change of the small claims court may be delayed without significant damage to the administration of justice."

That whole paragraph is contradictory, because the Attorney General basically is suggesting that the recommendations of the Law Reform Commission and in the McRuer report are recommendations which will not enhance the administration of justice and are not needed.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Read the rest of the compendium.

Mr. Roy: I can read the rest of it. The Attorney General can read it, I suppose, in his reply. But it goes on to say: "The decision not to implement the Ontario Law Reform Commission recommendations is not based solely on practical considerations.

"The commission asserts that the time has come to restructure the small claims court system so that the general principles of its administration may be consistent with those applicable to other court systems in the province." I am not sure how that in any way waters down what the previous paragraph says.

What we have is a situation where recommendations have been made in 1963 and in 1974, but a decision has been made by this government not to accept these recommendations. They are saying, "We can't do it because of financial constraints but, don't worry, we don't feel that there will be any significant damage to the administration of justice." That's hogwash. There will be damage.

Unless we deal meaningfully with some of the problems facing the administration of justice at this level, there will be damage to the administration of justice—and there has been damage to the administration of justice. It is no accident that out there the public is cynical about many procedures, about what is going on in our courts and about what is going on in the small claims court.

We on this side are all in favour of private enterprise.

Mr. Martel: No, we aren't. Don't put us in there.

Mr. Roy: I guess they are not.

Mr. Martel: Don't put us in with those guys.

Mr. Roy: I wouldn't dare talk for those fellows tonight, I tell you, Mr. Speaker. I wouldn't dare associate myself with the people to my left—of course not, I wouldn't.
[9:45]

Interjections.

Mr. Roy: These people who would deny wives costs against defrauding husbands. What kind of a party is that?

Interjections.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Peterson: Poor party.

Mr. Roy: In any event, Mr. Speaker, I know it's offensive when I talk about private enterprise to the people on my left. It's offensive. Of course it's offensive to them.

Mr. Martel: You are right. You keep screwing up the people.

Mr. Kerrio: That's unparliamentary language. Did you hear that terrible language, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Roy: Oh, my God. It's very unparliamentary language, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Kerrio: I think that is a good idea, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Would the members for Niagara Falls and Sudbury East please listen to the speaker? The member for Ottawa East, please continue.

Interjections.

Mr. Roy: I was saying that we on this side are all in favour of private enterprise and encouraging private enterprise.

Mr. Martel: No, we are not.

Mr. Lawlor: Which side are you on?

Mr. Roy: But, we feel that private enterprise may not be the best place to have this, or it's not the type of system we should have within the administration of justice.

Interjections.

Mr. Roy: But the administration of justice shouldn't be operated on a profit and loss. There are more important criteria to be applied to the administration of justice than just making a profit or creating jobs or things of this nature. That's why, of course, the decision has been made to carry on with private enterprise, to pay clerks on the basis of the work that's done, the actions that are issued, and things of this nature. McRuer found that unpleasant, that it was not in keeping with the system of the administration, and I'm sure the Law Reform Commission had certain reservations about it as well.

There are certain things that cannot be judged just on the basis of efficiency. It has to be judged on its merit, on how it best serves the public, and I think one area certainly is in the administration of justice.

Mr. Peterson: Well said.

Mr. Roy: It seems to me somewhat offensive that in 1977 society, when this government and this province pride themselves in having the best, whether it's in health care or otherwise, we're still talking about private enterprise within the small claims court.

I'm concerned about that because it's open to abuse, of course. We've seen situations when, in fact, that has happened. I need not remind the Attorney General that there was some frowning of certain individuals in the Ottawa area when the barber of the member for Ottawa South (Mr. Bennett) was appointed a small claims court clerk. That's fine. He may have been the most qualified individual. But people start asking on what basis are people appointed within the administration of justice? If one is to look at the response of the member for Ottawa South—

Mr. Peterson: He is willing to cut hair, what do you expect?

Mr. Roy: —he said he listened to a lot of problems, possibly more than a priest and more than the local doctor. That may be, but I sort of get suspicious when I see his campaign manager appointed sheriff and then I see his barber appointed court clerk.

Mr. Martel: He appointed my friend.

Mr. Roy: So that's the type of thing which makes people cynical about the process.

Mr. Martel: He appointed my friend Pharand. Ask him.

Mr. Roy: There are certainly amendments within some sections of the legislation which we feel represent progress, which we applaud and we will support. For instance, the increase in the amount of monetary jurisdiction makes sense today because we shouldn't limit the jurisdiction of the small claims court to $400. In the inflationary spiral we've had since the early Seventies, that was not in keeping with or being responsive to the needs of the community. Raising it to $1,000 appears to us to certainly be reasonable in the circumstances.

The question of the venue, the place of trial, is something that's important as well. It appeared to me that there certainly was abuse, as was pointed out in the compendium about certain enterprises operating out of urban centres through mail order offices and itinerant salesmen. We're certainly in support of the fact that the section will be repealed that would permit the bringing of certain contract actions in a place where payment was made. Respectfully, Mr. Speaker, it was offensive to the system. The general principle is that litigation should be brought within the jurisdiction where the people reside. That was the main criterion; certainly not where payment was made.

I go on to applaud certain aspects of this legislation; for instance, the informality in the procedures, relating to certain people who appear before a court without being represented. It's important that those cases not be curtailed or that certain evidence which would be important or relevant to the whole process not be denied just on the basis that the claimant hadn't met certain rules and regulations pertaining to procedure. We certainly can applaud this.

It makes sense that certain of this evidence be admitted, that the judge again decide what weight should be given to that evidence. Very often a good claim would be denied just on the basis that the litigant or the claimant was not in a position of knowing the law, had not taken proper procedures, had not met the rules of evidence and so on. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, we're in favour of amendments such as this.

The monetary limit on the appeal is, I suppose, in keeping with changes, such as the inflationary rate. From $200, I suppose, to $500; that makes sense to us.

The question of prejudgement interest is another method—

Mr. Peterson: We are against all inflation, though.

Mr. Roy: —of encouraging the settlement of actions. We're in favour of this section, certainly.

Mr. Peterson: Get on the record that we are against inflation.

Mr. Roy: A lot of this is housekeeping, of course, in keeping with other regulations that have been changed in the other court. For instance, the taking of affidavits by an agent or solicitor for the client. That seems to make sense. If it was allowed in the Supreme Court, why wouldn't it be allowed in the small claims court?

But I suppose one of the sections which we on this side applaud most strenuously—and I would suspect maybe the members on the other side might vote against it—is the one which repeals—

Mr. Lawlor: Don't invite us.

Mr. Roy: —the Small Claims Courts Act which created a pre-trial garnishment. I would suggest to the members to my left—

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, really, really.

Mr. Roy: —that they should vote against this. It would be consistent with their voting against the other bill.

Mr. Lawlor: Early 16th century, benighted unenlightenment.

Mr. Roy: If they want to be consistent this evening, I expect them—

Mr. Lawlor: What are you talking about?

Mr. Roy: —to oppose the bill on this.

Mr. Lawlor: You like to hear your own voice.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: They voted against deserted wives.

Mr. Roy: That's right. They voted against that. My colleague, the Attorney General, mentions the deserted wives. They'll all be in favour of pre-trial garnishment, I suppose.

Mr. Lawlor: That's the one thing you wouldn't vote against. Benighted. Unenlightened.

Mr. Roy: I'm looking forward to some of the things they're going to say on this legislation. But, certainly, we on this side have always felt that if people are going to start garnishing—

Mr. Lawlor: You haven't always felt it.

Mr. Roy: —they should have obtained judgements, and judgements which had been obtained on the merits and not just on the fact that a claim was issued. We felt that this section was, on many occasions, being abused and abused by people who had been in a position to take advantage of it.

Mr. Lawlor: I haven't heard you say so.

Mr. Roy: I'm talking about finance companies and people who had the whole apparatus to not only intimidate people who they were after, but who were using this section as the main section for the intimidation of people who did not have an opportunity of disputing a particular claim.

Having made these comments, again—and I will emphasize again—we feel that if we were dealing seriously with enhancing and making meaningful changes to the administration of justice, we would have liked to have seen a more substantial bill. I'm sorry that we don't see such a bill. So what attitude does a party take when it feels that the legislation should have gone further?

We obviously have to support what we're being offered. We're not going to vote against this legislation because we feel there should be more in it. But, certainly, it's important that we emphasize that this party would have gone much further.

This party is seriously dedicated to making meaningful changes within the administration of justice. We don't feel that justice should be allocated out on the basis of how much money is available, that there should be monetary constraints on dispensing justice across this province. We think that is a bad criterion and we want to condemn it.

Mr. Peterson: Great speech.

Mr. Lawlor: Towards the middle of the 19th century, James Cardinal Henry Newman wrote a book called "Apologia Pro Vita Sua" against Charles Kingsley. Charles Kingsley was a Liberal. He wrote "The Water Babies," who were buried under 13 fathoms.

Mr. Kerrio: That ancient history is not going to sit well with us.

Mr. Lawlor: The Apologia had to do in this particular context, at least, with the fact that the provisions of the Law Reform Commission of Ontario were not implemented. And beating his breast and baring it to the winds of heaven, the Attorney General comes before us with the compendium. I think if we use the compendium half valuably, he will eliminate it from our prospectus. It says:

"The McRuer report, in 1963"—that's a long time ago—"and the 1974 Ontario Law Reform Commission on administration of Ontario courts recommended the abolition of the part-time private enterprise system of administration of justice in the small claims court."

And so have we. But I'll stand here tonight and say, "I don't blame you." If I were the Attorney General I wouldn't either. I'd take the same position he is taking—the costs of absorbing it into the total system would be too great at this time in history. I don't think it's particularly feasible. Basically, they recommend: That the court be given county or district-wide jurisdiction; that the administration of these courts be decentralized in the county and district seat with branch offices established where volumes of claims or remoteness demand; that sittings of the court be held on circuit at locations within the county where the circumstances indicate; that the fee system for the payment of clerks be replaced with smaller claims clerks with salaried members of the civil service; and that the office of bailiff of the small claims court be replaced for the use of the sheriff's office.

The Attorney General at least has the effrontery, or I suppose he might call it the honesty, to set forth his position and that which he rejects out-of-hand and doesn't accept at this particular time. He says he's not going to accept it, that the constraints are such that, to absorb that private enterprise aspect, the last remnants, would not meet our needs at this particular time in history.

Mr. Roy: It's not the last one.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, it is.

Mr. Roy: The justices of the peace are a private enterprise.

Mr. Lawlor: They're all under salary tenure.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lawlor: The operative ones are within the salary structure.

Mr. Roy: They are—like hell.

Mr. Lawlor: There's a few kicking around, Mr. McRuer points out, but they don't know under which stone they're buried. Of the 1,073, they're only able to locate 822. All the rest are missing. It's a missing persons bureau. I wouldn't take it too seriously because they're not deriving any salary from the consolidated revenue funds.

All right, so the Attorney General is not going to implement the Law Reform Commission terms at this particular time and I'm not going to take very much issue with that. I wouldn't either. It sits out there; the sum consolidation has been met. The number of small claims, or what we used to call division courts, are being cut back gradually. But he says that people going 120 miles to dispute or contest a $50 claim is an overburdening of the system.

Mr. Roy: We are not saying that.

[10:00]

Mr. Lawlor: So we'll let well enough alone for the time being, so that we can move into the new Jerusalem just the day after tomorrow. I am prepared to hold my breath until it happens.

The first factor in this legislation is that the Attorney General is not going to absorb it but is going to reform it a little bit. He is going to take out the more invidious features of the whole situation. He is going to start appointing small claims court judges. There are three of them I believe—I am not sure—three I think in the Metropolitan Toronto region—but by and large we are going to start appointing them. And that's fine. But why use county court judges, men highly trained in intricate law, for this particular thing? Perhaps the minister should go as far as the Quebec courts in the small claims, where they won't let lawyers into the courts, so that the citizenry, the populace as such, can handle their own cases and not be opposed by slick lawyers on behalf of collection agencies. This is part of it.

Mr. Roy: The minute we proposed that the member would say we are denying a basic right to be represented by counsel.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kerrio: Say it, Pat.

Mr. Lawlor: It's at such times the new ice age begins—as the Pliocene, you know, the business of the pictograms in the cave. You do hear it from the Liberal Party from time to time, Mr. Speaker. You see the simplistic drawings, et cetera—the figure of the rhinoceros that ceased to exist 3,000 years ago. This is the kind of thing that we are up against, the minister and I. The red Tory and the red socialist should be worth the pink socialist, I believe. But what the hell can we do with these people? All blue.

Mr. Roy: And a Liberal in there to keep you both in line.

Mr. Lawlor: So they come to small claims judges for this particular level of court. You know, Mr. Speaker, you can take them out of the air—in other words, practising lawyers in a particular district—if the court happens to be vacant that day. It has been the practice to enlist their aid to take over the courts for that particular period—that's not very wise. It adds to the prestige of the local lawyer who sits in for the afternoon and takes over the cases. But to have full-time small claims court judges under this Act will add to the prestige of this particular court and relieve the county court for more pressing engagements.

The second thing that is important is the referee. I want to refer to that because the job these men are doing is terribly important. In the notes which the Attorney General supplied us—and simply because we use them against him, let him not desist, or even debase—the Toronto referee's office is essentially a judgement debt conciliation service designed to reduce the work load on the judiciary. The referee gathers information voluntarily given by judgement debtors who seek assistance and relief, often from the conflicting claims of several judgement creditors. With the knowledge of the debtors he has he approaches judgement creditors in an effort to establish consensual payment arrangements. He does a yeoman's service.

It has been done under the office quite informally without any legislation justification whatsoever from the chief judge. It was one of his more imaginative moments. It may justify him for eternity in all other terms. Whatever else he has done badly, he did this single thing. You know, in our lives we only have to do one thing well and people remember us and they will forgive us everything else. Let's hope so.

Anyway, I sang tonight and all my sins are forgiven. I may walk out a shorn lamb to whatever slaughter these bloody Tories may subsequently dispose. All right, so the same thing happens to judges, the chief justice in this particular instance. He sets up the referees and the Attorney General is legitimizing them. He legitimizes children, bless him. Now he is legitimizing and pouring a little holy water on the heads of referees. My God, the baptismal font is full tonight. I mean, overflowing. It may inundate the basement if we don't watch out.

So the referees are all set up. What a valuable service. Here is a judgement debtor with a number of judgements against him proceeding through that particular court level, et cetera, who can only find alleviation by some kind of arbitration. There is no arbitration provided in the ordinary course of affairs. He has to divide up what little income he has among half a dozen bloody creditors, and more coming in all the time, thank you.

The referee performs this function. And to recognize it, to give it legislative sanction, is a major step for a hundred thousand people in this province. A very large number of people are caught in that web. All right. Even if we do so little in the little time we have here, the minister can place his hand on his forehead and say, "All right, I made it worthwhile—whatever other iniquities you have to suffer from during the course of the day."

On interest, I won't say anything. Interest we discussed earlier with respect to the wide range of the times at which it was initiated on prejudgement, et cetera. We haven't talked about post-judgement yet, we'll get around to it I suspect, and the various instances in which it appears—and the time is running with respect to this interest situation.

May I pause just one moment? It bothers me just a bit because of the prime rate of interest. Because of the limitation periods, and the fact that one doesn't have to sue for six years, 10 years, 12 years, we have never got around to the interest stacked. Then there is the time after that with respect to notices, et cetera. It bothers me a bit that the interest just possibly could exceed the amount of the principal. That's the way with interest, you know. "With usuria, there is no alleviation." I quote from Ezra Pound, the old pop-eyed, caged poet, who did say some things of value.

That particular poem is right from the middle ages. They didn't cut off interest in the Middle Ages, à la Bassanio in The Merchant of Venice. They did cut it off on the basis it was a sure usufruct over against the equity. They allowed the risk of the venture. When they sent ships off into the Atlantic, they permitted a certain return larger than the average.

The whole of capitalism is a simple question of interest. Those who earn interest—

Mr. Ruston: What section of the Act is this?

Mr. Lawlor: —means that they do nothing for it. There is no sweat. They sit and wait and it flows back in. The banking industry—who the hell can build the magnificent—if you call them that—black towers, which Byron hated, down in central Toronto? The banking institutions. And what do they do it on? Something called interest. All right. This is not the point. The Treasurer not being in the House, it is kind of wasted pushing that particular point.

Fourth point. The Attorney General is accepting a broader view of evidence. He should accept the broader view of evidence with respect to hearsay, with respect to dying declarations, with respect to the whole panoply of those absurdities. What can one expect from a professional institution? We will willy-nilly, ineluctably, erect for ourselves a whole panoply. This is our professional rectitude, to set up nice rules of evidence as to what is excluded, what is included, what the judges may consider, and what may be considered outside the palè in a thousand instances. It serves our particular sanctimony. It always has with professional associations.

In this particular Act and, I'm suggesting, in a much wider context, the rules of evidence are jettisoned, and overlooked. They say, "You may present whatever documentary evidence you please." It's up to the judge sitting on the bench to say what it's worth. And so it should be in all the higher courts too. I hope this is only the beginning; that centuries and centuries of overlay, of obfuscation and the archaic, in the terms of the silly rules of evidence, will be wiped away and that what common men, what ordinary men, consider evidential, and would consider to have weight here and there, we can entrust to our judiciary to weigh similarly and say, "I don't place very much weight on that person's evidence. I think that person's a liar or is serving his particular interest"; so that, in another way, will give weight to it.

That seems to me far closer to the grain. Our rules of evidence have developed such an artificiality that they obscure the truth, prevent it and act as a wall against penetrating honesty and human decency, rather than extracting and revealing it. Quite the contrary happens. It brings about, through these artificialities and this damned civilization, the contrary effect of that which was originally intended.

Why don't we be honest enough men to come to that recognition and say let's clear out some of this dross and this pretence that governs human affairs? The minister is doing it in this particular piece of legislation, up to a point, and I assent to it.

He has extended the monetary jurisdiction up to $1,000. That's quite a move. That will cover a lot of ground, $1,000 in cases. I'm in favour of it with all these relaxed rules and everything else.

It will relieve the county court level, which ipso facto will relieve the next highest level. It has that cascading effect. If the minister moves in on the appointment of small claims court judges, it will beneficially affect the whole system. Those judges, I suspect—and I don't know what their wage level is, but it would be probably somewhat lower than the others—will siphon off a great deal of the friction and discontent that is accumulating and building in these lower figures with respect to getting their adjudications. The fact that they can penetrate through all the web of built-up evidential rules and come to some kind of adjudication will be highly beneficial to the county court level and will clear that out.

[10:15]

The next thing that he has done is what I call the T. Eaton section, section 6 of this particular legislation, that is that if one stipulates in one-year contracts that the place of payment will be the city of Toronto, then they may use the first division or small claims court of the city of Toronto as their forum for adjudication.

That is not fair, and never has been, to many defendants who are obliged to return and resort to an office, I believe, on Adelaide Street in Toronto, in order even to file their claim and to make their objections known.

That is a very heavy burden. It was a plagued commercial interest to the major corporations who stipulated, for this particular fact, that wherever you made your payment—and they said where you made your payment; if you had bought the thing in Moosonee, your place of payment was Toronto and that is where the action could be initiated and carried out, obviously much to the detriment of the defendant, whatever defence they may have in this particular case. The Attorney General is wiping that out. He is saying the venue of trial basically is where the defendant resides; and that is fine, that is the way it should be. And in the Metropolitan area, there is a diversity of small claims courts which can handle that.

I don't know how much weight to put, Mr. Speaker, on the business of wiping out the garnishee before judgement, but over the years there has been nothing more iniquitous. Imagine, before your case is tried, before the merits of that case are in the least determined—you may have no merits whatsoever—you may garnishee a man's salary. That was done constantly and overtly by all kinds of collection agencies, et cetera, throughout our province. I came across it time after time.

It brought the whole of the justice system under disrepute that you would issue this particular kind of document to initiate your whole proceedings. The cries have been sufficient and finally have not come to deaf ears. This Attorney General has finally heard, and I credit him for it. So I hope he is wiping it out tonight, that you may not garnishee before judgement. It is incredible that it ever existed at all. In no other court would it be heard of. The outcries from the profession and from the people who were being afflicted would have been such—but somehow or other this has persisted for half a century in this particular area.

Finally, I do find it a little questionable that you cut off appeals to the court of appeal on any monetary judgement under $500. That gives a great amplitude to arbitrary judges. He knows, sitting on the bench, that if he awards judgement for $499 or $490 you are cut off. I have seen it done. I have stood in the courtroom and watched that particular procedure. Not on that basis, but on lower, I think it was $300 at an earlier time, and it was almost a kind of defiance.

I think if people feel they are legitimately entitled to appeal, those figures should be lower. Again, it is a kind of petty thing, the setting up of a numbers game. I think $300 should be retained at the very least, even with all the inflationary pressures from which we suffer. It gives a kind of egotistic satisfaction to a judge to play you under the figure and keep it down. He knows he is not subject to the scrutiny of the higher court. A more salutary thing is for lower court judges to be aware that the higher court has overseership. It keeps them much more sensitive to the currents operating in the law.

Apart from that one factor, I find your legislation on the whole quite palatable, and we will vote for it. Thank you.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is very little to add to the eloquent support of this bill that we have already heard from the two speakers, except in relation to the matter of appeal. I think this whole issue of the appeals is very much a two-edged sword. I think it's quite true, what the member for Lakeshore states, that if a judge is sitting on a matter under $100 knowing that it cannot be appealed there could be a temptation to be arbitrary. But I rather think that really plays very little role with judges today, and I rather think that it could be abused by the wealthier litigant through appeals, by forcing the small ordinary citizen through an appeal. And obviously, the only reason for appealing an amount under $500, considering the cost of the appeal, would be on a matter of principle. Regrettably, people of means are more likely to take advantage of that; or to put it more accurately they are more able to afford the luxury of appealing on a matter of principle.

So my concern is that this would detract from the character of the people's court and could, again, be used as an instrument to beat about the head of the small ordinary litigant who just could not really afford to seriously fight an appeal when it amounted to something under $500. So I would just simply ask, with respect Mr. Speaker, that the member for Lakeshore reflect on that and reconsider his position.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am prepared to go into committee now, although there is one other bill in committee of the whole House; I think it is Bill 77. I wanted to advise the members that two or three issues—not of major importance—have been raised by the rules committee of the Supreme Court, so I was going to ask that the committee of the whole House defer the consideration of Bill 77 until next week. Perhaps in view of the fact that there are some parallels between both bills, they should both stand over until next week.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, we would attempt to have both of these bills dealt with next Tuesday. I believe there is a request to revert to orders of the day, and perhaps we could complete our evening once that item was attended to.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, could we ask the unanimous consent of the House to revert to bills so that the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) may introduce for first reading his balloted item. The precedent was set earlier this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, when it was agreed to do so for the member for Durham East (Mr. Cureatz).

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Scarborough West have unanimous consent?

Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: I much appreciate the House's indulgence. It was my neglect that precipitated this.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS TOXIC AND HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES ACT

Mr. Lewis moved first reading of Bill 90, An Act respecting Toxic and Hazardous Substances.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, this bill is quite consciously put forward to fill the gap which is not covered by the present Occupational Health Act dealing with the testing of hazardous substances by an independent research agency prior to their introduction into the work place or the environment .

On motion by Hon. Mr. McMurtry the House adjourned at 10:26 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1977

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

INCREASES IN ESTIMATES

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I draw to your attention standing order 86 of the Legislature, which states as follows: "Any bill, resolution, motion or address, the passage of which would impose a tax or specifically direct the allocation of public funds may not be passed by the House unless recommended by a message from the Lieutenant Governor, and may only be proposed by a minister of the Crown."

This particular rule, of course, has been applied on the constitutional basis of the development of our whole system of government. I understand that yesterday the committee dealing with estimates of the Ministry of Community and Social Services had to adjourn because it was asked by the Chairman to consider a vote for the expenditure of public funds that had not been so supported by a message from Her Honour. I want you, sir, to look into the matter, and perhaps with the assistance of the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. Auld) or the Premier (Mr. Davis) we can find what the circumstances involve.

I bring to your attention briefly a statement made by the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) whose estimates were under consideration, in which he said, on June 30, in Hansard, on page 222: "At this time I would like to table information on the contents of an order in council which has been passed to create a new vote in the children's services division to effect the transfer by July 1. Vote 2084"—that may be a misprint, it should appear as 2804, but that's another matter—"for children's services . . ."

I simply draw your attention to his statement, because I question whether or not a new vote can be created that way; although an order in council has been put forward, it does not appear to have the support that would permit the chairman of the standing committee on social development to go forward with the debate, and finally the passage of the amount of money.

What deeply concerns me is that it appears these estimates are based on a budget arrived at even before the election. They are seriously out of date. The Treasurer (Mr. Mc-Keough), or any other member of the government, has not brought forward supplementary estimates which may regularize them. We have the distinct impression that the government is spending money which has not been approved by the House, nor has it even been put forward in our estimates.

For that reason, sir, I believe that it is a very serious matter indeed, and I would like your direction to see not just that we regularize it, but that the whole procedure for the expenditure of these moneys is put on a democratic basis for the debate and consideration of our House and its committees.

Mr. Speaker: I might ask the hon. member for St. George is this a related matter?

Mrs. Campbell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I'm speaking to the same point. I must say that I regret to be critical of the new minister in this area, because I recognize that perhaps he has not had the experience of some of his colleagues; but I would draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, section 31 of the order passed by this House on June 27, 1977, which states: "Ministers should provide advanced briefing material to their opposition critics before consideration of their latest estimates in a form to be determined by each minister."

With regard to the Community and Social Services estimates, members of the social development committee received such material from the ministry. Included as well were annotations which indicated supplementaries of $1,111,300 for ministry administration. Vote 2802 has also been altered by the children's services transfer, $124 million-odd being transferred to that new division. As well, material contained in the briefing book indicates that the ministry received some $3,665,500 in additional funds.

I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, the authority for this. It has been pointed out, or reference has been made to the order in council. I have the order here. It does not do what it was purported to do, and in any event I question the propriety of proceeding by order in council to add additional funds to those contained in the earlier estimates.

In addition, there are major discrepancies between the estimates book and the Community and Social Services briefing book that are not explained by the children's services transfer. I would draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, vote 2803, item 3, community programs capital. The briefing book gives one figure while the estimate book gives a different figure, a higher figure than that in the estimate book. Under the same vote and item, the briefing book gives a figure of $21,075,000 for operating expenditures while the estimate book shows a figure of $26,028,800, which represents a $4 million, nearly $5 million, difference.

Mr. Speaker, I view this matter seriously and I'm concerned, and not only in regard to this ministry, whether or not it has become the practice in this province to bring forward increased estimates without the use of supplementary procedures. If that happens, I think we're in serious trouble, Mr. Speaker, in this House.

Mr. Sargent: What's $4 million?

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. member for Bellwoods, I think on the basis of what I've heard there seems to be cause for the lodging of a grievance. I don't think we have to get into a debate on it. If the hon. member for Bellwoods has something substantive to add to it before someone wishes to respond on the other side, I will hear him.

Mr. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very briefly, I wish to comment on the issue before us. I was the one who moved the motion to adjourn the committee yesterday because of the impropriety of the presentation of the fourth vote.

Mrs. Campbell: I was the one who refused to go on.

Mr. McClellan: The issue is that some of the money is in other estimates of other ministries which are properly before other committees; and some of the money is new money, which is absolutely nowhere in terms of the proper procedures of this House. This issue is an incredible and largely inexplicable mishmash that needs to get sorted out, hopefully by Monday afternoon so that our committee may resume the very important business of looking at the estimates of children's services provided by the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Lewis: I like that, inexplicable mishmash. Boy, that captures the minister perfectly.

Mr. Speaker: The Chairman of Management Board.

Mr. Lewis: I like that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It's going to be explicable right now.

Mr. Foulds: Not with him it isn't, not with flannel mouth.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I have become scrutable.

Mr. Nixon: I thought you were impregnable.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, it is correct there is a problem with the continuation of the estimates of the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Lewis: I told you we should have Jim Taylor back. It didn't happen when he was around.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As hon. members are aware, the new division of children's services was put together from the Ministry of the Attorney General, the Ministry of Correctional Services, parts of them, and the Ministry of Health. The amounts relating to those expenditures are still shown in the originally printed estimates in those ministries.

At the time this was done, there was an incorrect assumption made that the precedent in the estimates of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications two or three years ago, when amounts were reduced by order in council rather than being added, and which was acceptable to the House, that the same procedure would fit for the addition in this instance, of an amount of roughly $4 million, as has been mentioned. It was brought to the attention of the committee and the ministry that that was improper. In the absence, at the moment, of the House leader of the government (Mr. Welch), the proposal which he was going to put forward to the House leaders is as follows.

There are three votes in the Ministry of Community and Social Services estimates. The fourth vote, the one reportedly established by order in council, is the one that is the problem. The government House leader is proposing to have the children's services estimates debated as part of Community and Social Services expenditures, but have them voted on where they now exist in estimates of the Ministries of the Attorney General, Correctional Services and Health. The order in council then legally transfers the responsibility of the amounts in those groups and items to Community and Social Services to allow them to operate.

Mr. Lewis: I give up.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is simple.

Hon. Mr. Auld: However, supplementaries will still be required for the approximately $4 million in extra funds which have now been authorized legally to Community and Social Services by an authorization for commitment; that amount would be voted in the supplementary estimates when we get the supplementary estimates after the original estimates are completed.

The procedure would be that the Ministries of the Attorney General, Correctional Services and Health would then state during their estimates debate that these amounts that were transferred have been approved by the standing committee when it dealt with the Ministry of Community and Social Services estimates.

Mr. Martel: Remember what happened to Bert Lance with stuff like that?

Mr. Sargent: Do you really understand that, Jimmy?

Mr. Makarchuk: If you do, you are the only one.

Mr. Lewis: That's not really satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker: If I understand the remarks of the Chairman of Management Board correctly, there has been an undertaking that the government House leader will be negotiating with the other House leaders to arrive at an amicable, and what appears to be a realistic, solution to this problem. The remarks have been duly noted. If it seems that the Chair should assist in any way we'll be happy to do so, but I think, with the undertaking given by the Chairman of Management Board, it is negotiable. They are aware of the problem and it seems that it can be resolved.

[2:15]

Mr. Nixon: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker: I would put it to you, sir, that there's nothing to be negotiated. There is a well-accepted procedure that must be fulfilled.

If I may say something further, the hon. minister, in an effort to clarify the matter, has done anything but that. As I understand him, and I would like your assistance with this, he indicated that it was agreed that the cabinet could reduce an estimate, and therefore he extrapolated that to consider that there was agreement that they could increase estimates, which of course could not be further from the truth.

Mr. Lewis: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask, sir, that you intrude yourself on the discussion because if I understand the Chairman of Management Board—I have been here 14 years and I never have before; but if on this occasion I understand him, what he is saying, I think, is that the moneys in individual estimates other than those of the Ministry of Community and Social Services, will come before the House and be passed on the understanding that they are applicable elsewhere, that is in the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

I don't know how we can possibly get into that kind of procedure in this Legislature. It just won't work. I urge you, sir, to take a look at it.

Mr. Speaker: Whatever negotiations are undertaken, they will be carried out having regard for past procedures and having regard for the standing order. I didn't want to leave the impression that we would be making exceptions in this case. It will have to be done in accordance with past practice.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

SALARY INCREASES

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, salary adjustments for some 14,000 civil servants in management classes have been determined and will be effective on October 1, 1977, or January 1, 1978, or April 1, 1978, depending on the review date of the respective categories. The global increase for the management payroll has been held to six per cent. Within this overall amount, individual increases will range from 3.8 per cent at the highest salary levels to seven per cent at the lower-paid classes. These increases were determined, having due regard to the statements of the Hon. Jean Chretien that salary increases in the third year of the program should be held at six per cent and our announced determination to restrain all increases and expenditures.

Salary adjustments for bargaining unit employees are subject to collective bargaining. We are currently engaged in negotiation, and I expect arbitration, and I will be reporting the results as soon as the process is completed.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have two statements to make, but I just want to say before I present them that I understood totally what the Chairman of Management Board was saying in his earlier observations.

Mr. MacDonald: The Premier likely discussed it with him.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I just understood it. Unlike the leader of the member's party, I have no trouble in understanding the Chairman of Management Board.

Mr. Lewis: That's entirely true, that's exactly right.

Mr. Foulds: They both speak the same language, it is called flannel mouth.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's been part of the NDP leader's problem on other matters.

DESTINY CANADA CONFERENCE

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in tabling today the final report of the Destiny Canada Destinée Conference. As members will recall, the conference, held in Toronto in June, was hosted by York University with the support of the government of Ontario.

I think those of us in this House who participated in the conference would agree that it was worthwhile and an initial step in involving the people of Canada in the process of resolving the issues now facing Confederation.

It successfully brought together over 500 Canadians from all walks of life and from all regions of the country, representing the full divergence of views which exist across Canada on these issues. The conference provided a unique opportunity for the participants to consider and discuss both the strengths and strains of our federal system and to reflect on possible solutions.

I personally attended several of the sessions, as did the leaders of the parties opposite or their representatives. What I witnessed, Mr. Speaker, both in the plenary and workshop sessions was a frank, lively and, I believe, healthy debate. As a result, many of the participants reported that the experience significantly affected their attitudes and views. That in itself was an immensely satisfying first step to those of us who encouraged this experiment in having Canadians, and not just their governments, look seriously at what they want their country to be.

I will be sending copies of this report to the Prime Minister of Canada, the Premiers of the other provinces, the members of the Task Force on Canadian Unity and all the conference delegates. At the same time, I will be urging them to support various initiatives arising from this conference. Already a number of delegates have expressed interest in helping to organize similar conferences in their region or province. That result, too, is highly encouraging and serves as a useful counter to those who say that Canadians are indifferent to this critical issue.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the president of York University and the chairman of our Advisory Committee on Confederation, Mr. H. I. Macdonald, for his efforts in organizing and chairing the conference. I would also like to thank the member of the advisory committee, the staff at York University, and the Ontario public servants who worked hard to make this conference the success that it was. Above all, I would like to thank the participants from our own province and from every part of Canada who gave freely of their time and energies and who made it the notable event it was. Mixing and talking with many delegates, as I did, gave me a very solid impression of the commitment to their country of many of the people we serve.

Mr. Speaker, the task is obviously just begun and many difficult situations lie ahead; but if the initiative taken at York, along with the more recent conference at the University of Toronto and such national endeavours as the Robarts-Pepin Task Force are any indication and serve as examples for the rest of the country, where this discussion must continue, then I think that at long last Canadians will start to give their elected representatives some directions, which I earnestly hope will lead to a great national reconciliation, which in the months ahead it will be the serious obligation of all of us to secure.

LAYOFF OF NICKEL WORKERS

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a further statement on the situation in the Sudbury basin.

On October 31, I and members of the government met with the Sudbury committee, as it is called, which included the following people: Doug Frith, chairman of the Regional Municipality of Sudbury; Jim Gordon, mayor of Sudbury; Elmer McVey, president of the Sudbury and District Labour Council; Jack Gignac, president of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers local; Dave Patterson, president of Local 6500, United Steelworkers of America; Brian Seville, president of Sudbury and District Chamber of Commerce; and Michael Atkins, president, Laurentian Publishing Company. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the committee represents a wide cross-section of that community.

These people came together earlier this year as a result of concern about the development of their community and are united in their determination to stabilize and enhance its economic future. The committee very ably and forcefully outlined the gravity of the current layoffs facing Sudbury. It also made, in my opinion, a number of useful and informed suggestions which will require the most careful review and attention of this government and of the government of Canada.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, to avoid any possible misunderstanding or disappointment, that there appears to be no quick or easy solution in sight, although I am encouraged by the fact that the company and the union,

I believe, are having constructive discussions at this time. At the same time, recognizing the seriousness of the situation facing Sudbury, I was tremendously impressed with the positive and practical approach of this group.

In recognition of the gravity and the complexity of the problems facing Sudbury and the other mining communities, the government will establish a cabinet committee on the economic future of mining communities to consider those short-term and long-term measures which may be appropriate for our government and other measures which may be recommended to the government of Canada.

The committee will be chaired by the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller), and will have the following members: the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier), the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett), the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson). The secretary of the committee will be the Deputy Minister of Northern Affairs, Mr. Tom Campbell. Other members of cabinet will be involved when appropriate as the committee deals with various specialized areas.

The cabinet committee on the economic future of mining communities will have as its first order of business the detailed consideration of the presentation made to the government by the Sudbury committee. It will also assume responsibility on behalf of the government for ongoing discussions with Inco, Falconbridge and other employers in the Sudbury area, with the representatives of the workers in Sudbury and with the regional municipality and the city.

I am also pleased to announce that the government, through the Ministry of Northern Affairs, is prepared to provide financial assistance to the proposed Sudbury Economic Development Task Force, which is being organized locally to promote investment, diversification and expansion in the Sudbury region. Funds will be made available to the task force to carry out the necessary studies which will be required, and to actively promote industrial expansion and diversification. The cabinet committee will work with the task force and will provide fullest co-operation with this Sudbury initiative.

Mr. George Ormerod, the director of the new Ministry of Northern Affairs office in Sudbury, and Mr. Ron Christie, deputy regional director, Ministry of Natural Resources, will be available to provide local contact between the task force and the government.

The scope and attention of the cabinet committee on the economic future of mining communities will go well beyond the current difficult problems in the Sudbury area, although that will be, of course, the first item of business. It will be consulting with mining companies, unions, municipal leaders and other interested groups in order to develop government policies which will assist all of us in dealing with the problems and opportunities common to communities affected by international mining markets.

Mr. Cassidy: They will be doing what you should have done years ago.

Hon. Mr. Davis: As its work progresses the cabinet committee may have referred to it broader questions relating to problems common to all resource-based communities.

At this time I also wish to respond in a positive way to one proposal which the Sudbury committee emphasized. The government will proceed as soon as possible with the construction of its new Sudbury building. This will represent an investment in excess of $10 million and underlines in the clearest possible terms the continued confidence of the Ontario government in the future of that community.

In relation to the announced layoffs at Inco, the government House leader (Mr. Welch) will, after consultation with the other two House leaders—and I understand there was some discussion at noon today—introduce a motion to enable the standing committee on resources development to review this matter.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say there's no question in my mind that the Sudbury area specifically, and the mining communities of northern Ontario in general, have an extremely important and continuing role to play in the economy of our province. Mining provides the base for jobs and prosperity for hundreds of thousands of our people, both in the north and in related enterprises throughout Ontario. Production from our mines accounts for well over $2.5 billion annually. Apart from the automotive industry, mining accounts for some 25 per cent of our remaining exports. This, of course, is important for the balance of payments and economic well being, not only of this province but for the country as a whole.

It is clear that we must do all in our power to preserve and expand this industry, because it is not just the people of the north who are affected but all of us are as well.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that if all of us can take an example from the determination and the dedication, and the positive contribution which the Sudbury committee has made to this discussion, then I am sure we can find answers which will ensure the economic future of the mining communities of this province.

INCOME TAX REDUCTION

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, at the recent federal-provincial meeting of finance ministers, I proposed a measure to stimulate the economy through increased consumer spending. I suggested that the provinces should reduce their retail sales tax by two points, with the cost underwritten by the federal government.

The federal government reviewed the situation and chose to implement a personal income tax cut of $100 for low- and middle-income taxpayers. Although not quite as immediate or direct in impact as a sales tax cut, this measure will nonetheless have a positive stimulative impact. I was pleased to see that the Minister of Finance incorporated other features I suggested.

The tax cut is temporary and it gets the money into the consumer's hands quickly, Mr. Speaker. After careful consideration, I have decided to eliminate Ontario's income tax for persons with low incomes to provide a further boost to consumer spending and confidence in 1978. As a result, tax filers with up to $2,310 taxable income—$132 Ontario tax payable—will have their Ontario tax reduced to zero for 1978. This replaces the 1977 reduction of $88 and continues to ensure that for virtually all Ontario taxpayers no Ontario income tax will be payable where no federal income tax is payable.

This important initiative will cost the province $20 million in 1978 and will remove an additional 140,000 people from our tax rolls. This means that almost 700,000 people in Ontario who would otherwise have income tax liability are now free of tax under Ontario's tax reduction program. As a result of this enriched program, a family of four having an income up to $8,360 will pay no Ontario income tax in 1978.

This significant move will help to strengthen the disposable incomes of those people most affected by rising prices, and I am confident it will encourage consumer spending.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ANACONDA LAYOFF

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Premier:

In view of the statement of the president of Anaconda Canada Limited that the Etobicoke mill faces being shut down partly because the United States parent is not allowing the Etobicoke plant to compete in US markets, and knowing this pattern to be a common one in Ontario, did the Premier, in his talks with Japanese officials, insist that exports, even in competition with the parent company, be included as a condition of any agreement allowing Japanese firms to locate in Ontario? If so, can he show us any statements he may have made in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I not only did not attach conditions when I had discussions with the business community in Japan, I made a point of avoiding them because one of the situations we run into from time to time when these matters are raised outside Canada is they suggest to us there are already a lot of conditions. I raised with the Japanese business community what I think is the very real potential of joint ventures, or the use of technology with Canadian capital, and the opportunity in terms of our producers here entering the Japanese marketplace; but, Mr. Speaker, I did not lay down a set of conditions to which I think at the outset the average businessman might say, "Fine, you are here seeking investment from us at the same time as you are setting down a lot of ground rules"; which may or may not make sense and which would be inhibiting I think, in their view, to any, shall we say positive type discussions.

While I recognize the Leader of the Opposition has had vast experience in these matters, my limited experience has been that if you are trying to interest somebody in something, if you are saying to them, "We think there is potential here for you, there is an opportunity for you to see some return on investment"; that you don't create that interest at the same time as you lay out a lot of ground rules and throw up a lot of potentially misunderstood barriers in that process.

So I would have to say to the Leader of the Opposition, no, I didn't.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, does the Premier not recognize, and this is something to which the Treasurer has alluded from time to time, that one of the grave problems we have in our manufacturing industry is its lack of export activity, and that one of the main reasons for that is that so many of our manufacturing enterprises are branch plants that are forbidden, as Anaconda was, to export in competition with the mother company? Why continue this same practice which has been so disastrous for us up until recent times?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not continuing any practice. I would think, with respect, that the most logical and intelligent way to go, and the route that these discussions should take—whether it is Japan, West Germany, the United Kingdom or wherever—is first to explain the potential that exists here to the possible investors, to give them as much encouragement as is possible, rather than to say, “Yes, we want your investment, but here are the rules.” They may be inhibiting, they may be somewhat different in our province from the other provinces of Canada.

It may be that if they locate in Ontario they will have more problems than if they locate in Quebec, Manitoba or Alberta. I would say to the Leader of the Opposition this is one of the problems of perception that exists outside this country. He understands and I understand the differences in provincial responsibility and federal jurisdiction, but I have news for the Leader of the Opposition, not everybody understands, shall we say the federated nature of this country. Among the things they find confusing are 10 different economic policies.

Mr. Warner: There are only nine, really.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say with respect that while I recognize fully the implications of branch plants in relationship to the question of exports, I also recognize, Mr. Speaker, that this province—I won’t speak for the country, I’ll leave that to the member—still needs investment from outside the borders of the province of Ontario.

If we want to continue to grow, and grow in a healthy way in the 1970s and 1980s, with respect there will have to be this kind of investment. I don’t think you attract it by saying, “Yes, we want you, but there are the rules”; which they may or may not totally understand. I think that would be the second or third step down the road.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I want to say that I am shocked by the Premier’s lack of concern when 875 jobs at Anaconda are going down the drain, largely because of the embargo on exports imposed by the American parent. Is the government concerned about the restrictions on exports which are put on branch plants in this country; and what concrete steps is it taking to get those embargoes on exports lifted?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, once again I don’t want to be provocative, but I say with reasonable respect for the hon. member that I did not in fact say I wasn’t concerned about the jobs at Anaconda.

Mr. Cassidy: The Premier did say that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to him that if he were any sort of honourable person he might just apologize for suggesting this government did have a lack of concern.

Mr. Warner: What are you going to do?

Mr. Martel: Come on.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was replying to a question of the Leader of the Opposition, who asked did I say to the potential Japanese investor, here are a whole set of ground rules, one in particular, at this stage of what will be, I think, long-term discussions. If the hon. member is asking me if I am concerned about Anaconda, the answer to that is yes.

I would say further, Mr. Speaker, that this government is making every effort to see if we can find a solution to the situation at Anaconda. The minister can correct me if I am wrong, but because of our interventions in the past few days a further extension on determination of its future has been granted—

Mr. Warner: A snail moves faster.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —subject to the consideration of the union, which is meeting, I believe, this afternoon.

So if the member would update himself he might find out just how interested this government is in Anaconda and that we are making a very genuine effort to see that that company stays in business.

Mr. Makarchuk: Why do you wait until it closes down before you do anything?

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Does the Premier not agree that what he is basically suggesting for us is that we continue going down the road which we have followed these many years, of inviting foreign capital in to serve the domestic economy rather than to export; and does he not recognize that a change in this is absolutely essential? This has to be resolved before we consider such matters as going to free trade in Ontario, which under these circumstances would be absolutely disastrous for us.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I may not be totally knowledgeable in matters of the constitution, but my recollection is that the principle or concept of free trade is really a matter that is determined by the government of Canada, and I am one of those who believes it still should be. That view is not shared universally, but I happen to believe it should be.

Mr. S. Smith: What about the speech the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) made about it?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Read it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well read it; and read it carefully and read it in its entirety. No one is saying that the province of Ontario has decided to develop its own tariff policy, that we are going to embark upon free trade. I would say with respect that is a matter for the government of Canada. If the Leader of the Opposition is trying to say, in his own inimitable fashion, that our industry should be exporting more, please read more of the speeches that the Treasurer has made, that I have made, that the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett) has made—that's the very point we have been making for the past year.

Mr. S. Smith: But not in Japan.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Leader of the Opposition hasn't the foggiest idea of what was said in Japan.

Mr. S. Smith: Yes I have.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, he doesn't.

Mr. S. Smith: The Premier just told us; he put on no restrictions at all.

Mr. Lawlor: Supplementary question; Mr. Speaker: As a matter of property and civil rights in the province, a contract, would the government give some consideration to bringing legislation before this House barring that export condition, which makes Anaconda Canada relatively—and I think completely, totally—unmarketable to other consortia forming in this country?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would really have to seek some legal guidance.

Mr. Breaugh: He just gave it to you.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, I would say to the hon. member for Oshawa, the latest participant in the lists, and I wish him well—

Mr. Breaugh: Watch that kind of comment now.

Mr. Swart: You are hurting his chances.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and I think he's got a lot of ground to catch up.

Mr. Lawlor: The member for Oshawa doesn't have a question properly before the House.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would just say to the hon. member for Lakeshore—

Mr. Lawlor: The government is going to have to remove the export bar.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and he might just say to the member for Oshawa that I have known the member for Lakeshore a lot longer than he has and he has very excellent legal experience et cetera, and I think if he gave me a constitutional opinion he would probably, if he did it as he used to, say that that really would be, basically, a responsibility of the government of Canada.

Mr. Lawlor: No, I am saying it's the Premier's.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is not a legal opinion.

Mr. Lewis: The government won't be able to arrange to have the company sold.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: In view of the embarrassment of the Premier's Tokyo junket, I would ask him if he could tell the House what research he had done by a multi-million dollar corporation like this province on the feasibility of raising funds. In his future search for investment capital is the Premier going to do some more comprehensive study than he's done at this point?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I really didn't know that that trip was referred to as the Tokyo junket. I find that very intriguing. I would also suggest that the purpose of the trip maybe didn't come through in the interpretation given by some, although it did in some reports that I read. I really must say that as I read the various reports in the press I'm not sure that those who were with us were always at the same meetings; but that is just an observation.

Mr. Warner: You didn't want them in on the meetings.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say we weren't there seeking funds. As a matter of fact, I think if we were there seeking funds for the government or for Hydro, the fact of the matter is the Japanese investment community would be delighted to lend funds. They have great confidence in the future of this province.

Mr. Lewis: You weren't there paying homage, not at all; you were there to give things away.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Souvenirs.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I didn't give a thing away. I will try to explain to the hon. member, in case he goes on any junkets to Mexico or anywhere else to sell his particular products. My advice to him is simply this: I was there to explore, along with a group of Canadian businessmen primarily from Ontario, the potential of their selling in the Japanese market. That was one of the basic purposes. And if he can consult—

Mr. S. Smith: Not nickel.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, don't take it from me, speak to those who were there, they were relatively optimistic at the success they achieved and the potential that exists for them.

Mr. S. Smith: But not nickel.

Hon. Mr. Davis: With respect to the other aspect of the "junket," yes, it was to say to the Japanese business community that we thought there was potential for joint ventures, in particular the use of some of their technology in this province. I have to tell the hon. member that some of this has already taken place. There's no export restriction. I would invite the hon. member to come with me to a particular plant in the north part of Mississauga where they are now making ball bearings for just about every nation in the world, using Canadian employees—

Mr. Sargent: What time can you go?

Hon. Mr. Davis:—constituents of the member for Mississauga North (Mr. Jones), I believe—with Japanese technology. Both firms are receiving a reasonable return on investment, which I think is an ideal example of the kind of thing that can and will be developed.

The member might sell ball bearings in Mexico.

Mr. Sargent: How many Hong Kong suits did you buy? The Minister of Industry and Tourism got a couple.

Hon. Mr. Davis: One.

GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. S. Smith: A question of the Treasurer: In anticipation of the GATT talks the next year, I understand the federal government has asked the provincial finance ministers to identify strong and weak sectors in their provinces, and to outline the type of help they would need in the event of reduced tariffs. Has Ontario provided the federal government with this information? If so, can we see it? If not, does the government intend to develop and make public a position on which sectors of the Ontario economy require protection and which do not?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, that's a question that should be addressed to the Minister of Industry and Tourism who is our contact point on these matters.

Mr. Laughren: Contact point?

Mr. S. Smith: I'll redirect that question, thank you.

Mr. Lewis: To the contact point.

Mr. S. Smith: To the contact, if he's out of the barber's chair.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The Leader of the Opposition obviously doesn't recognize that if a person's qualified and re-educates himself for a particular position, he then is willing to be accepted by our government.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Who did your hair?

Mr. S. Smith: You have done very well.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Obviously the Leader of the Opposition hasn't qualified for that yet.

Mr. Lewis: You do a great job with textiles, what about tennis?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: In the matter of the GATT negotiations, which are the ones I believe the Leader of the Opposition is referring to—

Mr. Lewis: The Gatineau.

[2:45]

Hon. Mr. Bennett:—we've had constant meetings with our federal representatives in Ottawa in discussing various sectors of the industrial community, and what can we as Canadians rather than just Ontarians—because they are meeting with all the provinces—what can we do to strengthen certain areas of our economy and our industrial community, and where are the others that we may very well have to trade off.

Mr. Speaker, I do not at this time intend to get into the full description, because most of the discussions are on a confidential basis, as I believe the members will appreciate. Disclosure at this time would show our hand to the other nations at the GATT negotiating table.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: An article appeared October 29 in The Financial Post, and I quote in part: "Ottawa asked provincial ministers during a recent meeting here to identify strong and weak sectors in their provinces and outline the type of help they would need. According to reports, few specifics were proffered." Could the minister simply tell us, first of all, whether he has made such a list known to Ottawa? Secondly, does the government possess an industrial strategy for Ontario comparable to the national economic development strategy the Treasurer keeps urging on Ottawa?

Do we in this province have a strategy and would the minister care to share it with the House?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: In relationship to the first question on the soft areas of the industrial community: yes, we have had discussions on specific sectors with Ottawa via the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, through the Minister of Finance who will carry Canada's brief forward to the GATT negotiations. Those areas are still under discussion as they relate not only to Ontario, but as they relate to the province of Quebec and the other provinces in this country. Ontario is just part of the input, but I am sure the significance of the Ontario input will be taken into consideration when drawing the final position which Canada will likely take at those negotiations.

As far as the second portion of the hon. member's question is concerned, the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson) asked a question the other night in estimates, regarding the sector analysis we have been making on the various industries in Ontario. It is the background information, and the further analyses being made by the industrial communities relating to the various sectors that is being used in our presentation and our conclusions in relationship to our discussions with Ottawa on the GATT negotiations.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: What warning or advance notice does the Ontario government intend to give to those industries considered soft and which it is prepared to treat as the sacrificial victims on the altar of free trade in the GATT negotiations, so that they can begin to prepare now for the adjustment—

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: No leadership speeches, that's not fair.

Mr. Cassidy: —or for the movement into other industrial activities that is inevitably their lot under the government's policies?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Just because of speeches like that, the member will never make it.

An hon. member: I am willing to bet money.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: He is running fourth in a three-man race.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, of course it is not our policy. Very clearly, at this time we are involved in preliminary discussions in relationship to positions Canada might take. I have no understanding where we'll eventually end up in the final GATT negotiations or whether we'll be a signing partner in those negotiations. But I can say to the hon. member that the federal government and the government of this province, and the governments of the other provinces, indeed governments around the world, realize that if there are to be some adjustments in tariffs relating to specific portions of industries in various countries, there will have to be a very general period of adjustment. I think the member will remember that in our estimates this morning we were talking about the period of time and that it's likely to take from the early 1980s until the early 1990s before that adjustment period comes to conclusion.

Mr. Horner from the federal government, and Mr. Chretien prior to him, said that the Canadian government will in time—after complete discussion by the provinces—bring forward policies for adjustments that will be made to those sectors that could be poorly affected by some of the downward trends in tariffs in the world.

Mr. Warner: Why don't you go visit some?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Why doesn't the hon. member for Scarborough-Ellesmere resign?

Mr. S. Smith: As a final supplementary to the minister, does he share the rather sanguine point of view of the Treasurer that freer trade is inevitable, that it's just a matter of adjusting to it; and does he share my concern that Ontario does not seem to have been raising its voice in favour of protecting Ontario's labour-intensive industries against free trade? We're in the hands of rather inveterate free traders negotiating on the part of the federal government; why has Ontario not stood up for protection of Ontario's industries?

Mr. Lewis: Right, why don't you?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the Leader of the Opposition has not been following the situation very closely. If I may go back to the fact that in 1974 it was this province that raised the first voice relating to the textile industries and the troubles they were in. That's a labour-intensive industry to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. Nixon: When you were importing grape juice.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: It was this province that persuaded the federal government, along with our colleagues in Manitoba and Quebec, that we should put quotas on to protect that industry. Those quotas are now in place.

Mr. S. Smith: Why change now?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Horner and Mr. Chretien previously said that they would remain in place, that is at the 1975 level.

It could very well be that in the GATT negotiations textiles, on a world basis, will be excluded from that agreement. It has been clearly said at GATT that there would be areas of the economy or industrial sectors that will not come under it, and that each country will then be left to do its negotiating with whatever country is going to supply it on a quota basis or whatever it might be.

Mr. S. Smith: But are we pressing for that?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: We have been pressing in that field, in the leather goods field and in several others. Ontario has been bringing the federal government along in designing some policies. I make no apologies for it. There are some in the member's party who have raised the fact—

Mr. S. Smith: Did the Premier hear that?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: —that when we reduce the amount of imports what we're doing in reality is raising the retail prices, because Canadian goods are higher in price.

Mr. S. Smith: You've had something to do with it then.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: There are times when we have to suffer some of the consequences—

Mr. Nixon: Oh, the province has got something to do with it after all?

Mr. S. Smith: It is a federal matter, Bill.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: —but if we're to have employment we're likely going to have to restrict some of the cheaper, or less expensive imports into this country. Frankly, we'll continue to push to protect the labour-intensive industries.

Mr. Breithaupt: That is not the Treasurer's view.

Mr. S. Smith: This is news to you is it, Darcy?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: May I conclude with the remark that the Treasurer—if you read his remarks over the last period of time—and I have an understanding and agreement.

Mr. Lewis: He is moderating, he is changing his views.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: He's absolutely correct that in this day and age in this world there is a strong movement towards freer trade—

Mr. Foulds: He is running for leadership; he and John Rhodes.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: —and it's a matter of how quickly some people would like us to get to the free trade position.

Mr. Speaker: We don't need a speech; just answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I am answering the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: We've spent 23 minutes on the first two questions.

Mr. Lewis: He is defending the Treasurer. Have a little pity, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I'm not only defending the Treasurer but also defending the position of Ontario and Canada in the negotiations at GATT. We are as compassionate about the industries of this country and this province as any political group, including the member's.

Mr. Lewis: It is Darcy's shift to the people, it's just like switching to radicalism. Darcy is in his dotage; and as the twilight years advance, Darcy moves with them.

JOB CREATION

Mr. Lewis: I have a question of the Premier, if I may. Now, almost 15 years after he was first requested, the Premier has set up a cabinet committee on the future of the mining communities in northern Ontario. Would he be prepared to ask the committee, as one of its first undertakings, to implement the recommendations of his government's Design for Development: Northeastern Ontario, which he has allowed to lie dormant for fully five years?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think in fairness, and the leader of that party always endeavours to be fair—

Mr. Lewis: To be fair? Of course, thank you.

Mr. Swart: He succeeds.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I say he endeavours to be fair; some of his listeners say he endeavours to be fair. I would say to him that we have, in fact, made some moves with respect to the Design for Development: Northeastern Ontario. I fully acknowledge it's one thing to develop a conceptual plan and to have a design, it is not as easy to bring about the completion or the practical application of that.

Mr. Conway: That's what they said in Amherstburg.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is there some supplementary?

This government, I think, has demonstrated very conclusively, through the efforts we've been making in northeastern and in northern Ontario, that we intend to do everything we can to see to its economical and social development.

Mr. Martel: What is that?

Mr. Lewis: Tell us.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say we have done a lot more and we haven't been nearly as negative, we haven't thrown up nearly as many fictitious roadblocks, as some members opposite when they talk about the north.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary. Does the Premier realize that his statement today was entirely bankrupt of any new initiative, save building on the pilings that are already there in Sudbury. This new building isn't a new announcement. The statement is entirely bankrupt of any new initiative, and why doesn't he implement some of the specific recommendations on secondary manufacturing and associated industries for the Sudbury basin which he's had hanging around for years?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I don't think it's really a question of having recommendations hanging around for years. It's a question of having a fairly logical plan that needs a fair amount of understanding and a fair amount of assistance in its practical application.

Mr. Warner: You don't intend to do anything—

Mr. Martel: After 34 years.

Mr. Lewis: —while people are laid off.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, no one has talked more than I have—including the Minister of Industry and Tourism, the Treasurer or anyone else—about the need and the desirability for secondary industry in north-eastern and northern Ontario.

Mr. Martel: Don't talk, do something about it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we have developed policies that make it more practical, but I cannot say to the leader of the New Democratic Party that we as a government alone can succeed in this particular operation.

Mr. Foulds: Name one.

Mr. Lewis: You can do something—anything.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If he wants to belittle—and I say this to him very genuinely—if he wants to belittle the commitment that I gave today with respect to the capital investment by this province in the future of Sudbury—

Mr. Lewis: No, I don't belittle it. That's not enough, I welcome it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —I suggest he go to Sudbury this weekend and say, "We don't think the government should build that building." I challenge him to go up there and say that to them.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, nonsense! You have already committed yourself to do it; it's an old project.

Mr. Foulds: It is a Band-Aid, and you know it.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River with a supplementary.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Let the leader of the NDP go up and tell them that.

Mr. Martel: That doesn't sell. Why doesn't the Premier come with me?

An hon. member: Sit down, Elie.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. It's your question period and you are wasting it. We haven't completed three questions yet and we have used 27 minutes of question period. Now if you want to fritter away the time, let it be on your heads, not mine.

The hon. member for Rainy River.

Mr. Reid: Supplementary: The Premier's statement dealt pretty well exclusively with mining communities. Does the study, which is so late in coming, envisage dealing with one-resource-industry towns across northern Ontario as well, particularly including the communities that are based on timber extraction, pulp and paper?

Hon. Mr. Davis: As I said in my statement, the priority obviously at this moment is the Sudbury basin. Quite obviously not just this committee, but the government—and the hon. member is as aware of it, I hope, as anyone in this House—has endeavoured on an ongoing basis to stimulate growth and development of other resources in the northern part of the province of Ontario.

On occasion some members of this House have appeared to be somewhat negative and almost inhibiting of the possibility and potential of some of those developments, if memory serves me correctly. Certainly we intend to consider these other aspects of the problem, including the pulp and paper industry, without any question.

Mr. Mackenzie: When? In 1985?

Hon. Mr. Davis: You should read some of the things you have said over the years.

Mr. Martel: That's right. And if the Premier had followed them, we might be somewhere today. He has done nothing except sell out the north.

Mr. Speaker: Will the member for Sudbury East allow the member for Nickel Belt to put his question?

Mr. Martel: You might say the same thing to the Premier.

Mr. Laughren: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the Premier aware that his response to the Sudbury committee will simply absorb some of the already high unemployment rate in the building trades in the Sudbury district and, further, does his announcement mean he now has accepted the inevitability of the layoff and he can do nothing to prevent it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I thought I made it very clear in my statement that I was bringing the members as up to date as I could with respect to the discussions we had with the Sudbury committee. As I told Mr. Frith I would, I endeavoured in my statement to provide our reaction to it as soon as I could.

I must remind the hon. member, in case he didn't get the same sense in his own constituency, that one of the priorities they were looking to us for—if that is grammatically correct—was some decision on the particular building that I just mentioned. Maybe the hon. member doesn't think it's a priority—

Mr. Laughren: Of course. Don't be stupid. Don't be dense. No one is saying the building should not be built. We are asking why that is all you are doing?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the hon. member, we are dealing with those matters that have been brought to us and we are reacting in a positive, constructive way.

Mr. Warner: Oh, yeah. You're positive!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Of course it doesn't relate as to the layoff itself. I said that in the statement. I said that half a dozen times in this House.

Mr. Warner: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What we are looking for and will continue to look for is a way to look after the future of the economy of that area, to demonstrate the confidence of this government in that part of the province, and we think this is a very tangible expression of that confidence. This is what the Sudbury committee brought to us; it was first on their list of priorities.

Mr. Lewis: It was not, as a matter of fact.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am very disappointed that the hon. member doesn't recognize this initiative from his own fellow workers, because the union was there and this was what they wanted as well; and we are saying today that we are doing it.

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Davis: When he gets this information back home, he may find that the union leadership also supports this particular initiative.

Mr. Lewis: Well, of course. Quit playing games.

Mr. Speaker: We've had sufficient supplementaries. The hon. member for Scarborough West with a new question.

Mr. Martel: Just one supplementary question.

Mr. Kerrio: No, it's not your turn.

Mr. Martel: What kind of game are you playing.

[3:00]

Mr. Lewis: A further question of the Premier, if I may: Within the last fortnight or so, have either the Premier or any of his cabinet colleagues discussed the future of Falconbridge with Falconbridge in the Sudbury basin?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I can't speak for any of my colleagues; I have not discussed Falconbridge in the last 10 days or two weeks. I have been really very busily pursuing Inco. I haven't talked to Falconbridge.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Premier, phrasing it carefully, since there are a number of disquieting rumours now in the Sudbury area and elsewhere about Falconbridge's intentions in the year 1978, would it be possible for him to satisfy himself and perhaps make a statement to the House and to the community as to what Falconbridge's specific economic plans are in the immediate future?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, either I shall or the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller) will endeavour to get as much information as we can that is available to us and we are more than prepared to share it with the members of the House.

HOME RENEWAL PROGRAM

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Housing. Given the fact that the Ontario Home Renewal Plan has been successful in upgrading the housing stock in communities and has created employment for small businesses who do the work in repairing those homes, does the minister feel that the ministry's decision not to give further allocation of funds under the plan during this fiscal year should be reversed, and that further allocations be given pursuant to the formula devised by his ministry?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, the funding that was available for that particular program as approved in the estimates has been totally disbursed to the various communities. The success of the program is quite evident, and I agree with the hon. member. There just are no more funds, and far be it from me, sir, to spend any funds from my estimates that haven't been approved by this House.

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Speaker, supplementary: In view of the fact that the amount for the Ontario Home Renewal Program voted for in estimates on June 29, 1977, was $20 million, and in view of the fact that the amount advanced by the Housing ministry is $16,185,921.28—and those are the minister's figures obtained from his ministry as of yesterday afternoon—doesn't he feel that he should at least allow the municipalities the full amount apportioned, pursuant to the estimate voted on, instead of short-changing them by $4 million? If not, where is the $4 million going?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should be aware of the fact that the figure he has is the amount of money that has already been disbursed to the various municipalities under the program, but that the $4 million he is talking about is money that will have to be disbursed before the end of the fiscal year. It is probably already committed to municipalities. We have advanced that amount of money, but the balance of the money has already been requested and will be allocated. The total $20 million will be spent. I can assure the hon. member we could have spent a lot more of it if we had had it in our estimates.

Mr. Makarchuk: A supplementary to the same minister: In view of the fact that the OHRP program is one of the most useful employment projects the government has in the province of Ontario at this time—it is useful in terms of employment and it is useful in terms of assistance to small business—would the minister consider going to the Treasury Board and trying to obtain added funds to continue the employment in the winter months?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, there will be various requests made by my ministry to the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. Auld) and the members of that board. I will have to await their decision.

I just wanted to point out to the hon. member that I appreciate his and other members' comments on this program, because it has been very successful. It has done the two things that you suggested, but it has done one more. It has also upgraded the homes for people who otherwise could not have afforded it.

I would like to clarify one point to the hon. member for Nipissing. When I mentioned the expenditure of the $20 million, $2 million of that had been allocated under the Ontario Home Renewal Plan rental program. So it was $18 million to the residential program—individual homes—and $2 million allocated under the rental portion of that program.

Mr. Duszta: A question to the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Point of privilege.

Mr. Foulds: Make it after the question period.

Mr. Speaker: Point of privilege?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of privilege relating to a story that appeared in this morning's Toronto Globe and Mail—

An hon. member: Get down on your knees and do it.

Mr. Lewis: Would you like us to set aside a special portion of every day for you to apologize?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I don't see any particular emergency. That can be brought up immediately after question period.

PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL CUTBACKS

Mr. Duszta: A question to the Minister of Health: In light of the fact that all Ontario psychiatric hospitals are at present engaged in an exercise of cutting six per cent from their 1978-79 budgets, a cutback of millions of dollars, resulting in the further elimination of 60 positions from the Queen Street Mental Health Centre in addition to the 170 positions that have been eliminated since 1974, and the further elimination of 102 positions from the Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital in addition to the 60 layoffs which occurred in 1976, would the minister please tell the House why he is further contributing to the province's unemployment problem and reducing the level of health care in Ontario's psychiatric hospitals?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the member, unfortunately, through whatever source, is misinformed with his figures.

Mr. Duszta: Supplementary: Mr. Speaker, can the minister then correct me on two counts: 1. whether my figures are incorrect; 2. whether he is proposing to introduce the cuts and reduce the staff positions in both hospitals?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, in reviewing all aspects of the operation of the ministry, I've indicated to my staff and I think I have indicated to staff of the various institutions as I've gone around the province, that the one area in particular, let's say two areas which have the highest priority for me are the psychiatric programs and ambulance services.

While, as the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) indicated in his statement in September, there will be a reduction in the over-all size of the civil service, the government service, it will be mainly through attrition. All I can tell you is that I'm looking at every program of my ministry between now and going into the next fiscal year, but those two areas have a very high, in fact, the highest priority.

Now let me say that the director of the branch has met with the administrators of all the hospitals on a number of occasions over the past few months as we've been working towards the next budget for the ministry. There have been a number of planning exercises—sort of, if you will, "what if" exercises. Out of that may have come some of the figures which you've quoted today. They are inaccurate. They do not reflect any of my plans.

Mr. Duszta: Mr. Speaker, is—

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary. The hon. member for—

Mr. Lewis: Hamilton West it is.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Could the minister, when he is checking these figures, check into the situation at Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital and tell us whether it is a fact that of 12 new psychiatric nursing assistants hired in August, five were given part-time contracts till March 1978 and six are being laid off at the end of November?

Mr. Speaker: I don't think that's a supplementary to the original question.

Mr. S. Smith: I'm sorry. I thought it was a matter of similar nature and he was speaking on Lakeshore as well.

An hon. member: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I'll be glad to look into that. That may well be and it depends what they were hired for, whether it was a particular program of a short duration or whatever. With respect to the first part of your question, I don't have to check into the other figures; I know that they do not, as I said, reflect my plans.

Mr. Lewis: You are going to get the rules thrown at you now, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, under provisions of standing order number 42(b), I wish to raise a matter of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I have already asked you to refrain from raising it until after the question period. You could have done it before the question period had you chosen to do so.

Interjection.

Mr. Speaker: You can't question it. You can challenge it if you want, but you can't debate it.

Mr. Lewis: He is what you call an erudite masochist, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Duksza: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to the last question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We've had enough supplementaries. We've only had five questions in 40 minutes of question period.

WEST END CRECHE

Mr. Gregory: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Lewis: Keith, ask him if he has a point of privilege.

Mr. Gregory: I might ask the minister the same thing.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Yes, I have, and a legal opinion to back it up too.

Mr. Riddell: Get on with your question.

Mr. Swart: Is this collusion?

Mr. Gregory: In view of the announcement that was made several days ago by a

Dr. Crowcroft who is the director of the West End Creche in Mississauga that this branch would be closed due to lack of funds, and in view of the statement by him that this branch has proved successful and is servicing 24 children and that the money saved from this project will be spent in expanding the Euclid Avenue offices of that organization, I would like to ask the minister if he would consider interceding in this matter to retain this very valuable branch in Mississauga.

Hon. Mr. Norton: One way or the other I was bound to get on my feet before the end of the question period.

Mr. Conway: The question is, can you stay on your feet

Hon. Mr. Norton: According to the information I have at this time, and I can assure the member that I have been pursuing this matter, the organization in question first contacted my ministry some six months ago with a request for funds to expand its operation at the site in Mississauga. They were advised at that time that we did not have funds for expansion of their program. We heard nothing further from them until very recently when we heard the announcement that they intended to close.

I have asked my staff to contact Dr. Crowcroft, and I understand they have been in contact with him to discuss with him steps that might be taken in order to maintain the operation in Mississauga. I would also point out that there appears from some comments attributed to members of the staff to be some feeling on the part of the staff that even with present levels of funding the operation could continue in that location. I hope to have further information shortly.

Mr. Gregory: Supplementary: If all else fails, would the minister consider recommending funds be made available to continue this operation?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am not sure that additional funds are required in this situation because the organization is at present being funded at more than one site. The indications I have, at least at this point, are that the decision to bring the Mississauga operation to an end is not entirely one based on the level of funding but rather related more to matters of the opinion of certain persons that it ought to be expanded or discontinued at that site.

If the Mississauga operation is terminated, certainly I would see what could be done in order perhaps to reallocate existing funds in order to maintain that operation.

Mr. McClellan: Supplementary: May I ask the minister if he would review the total operation of the agency? If there are needs that need to be met in other locations—and I refer particularly to the office on Euclid which happens to be in the great riding of Bellwoods—would he take into account the total needs of the operation and not solely the needs of the Mississauga facility?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I think it is almost self-evident that to assess the situation at Mississauga, since it is a related operation, would require a look at the total operation.

Mr. Lewis: If you kept the creche open, they might not have to impose a curfew.

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Hon. J. A. Taylor: In response to the Leader of the Opposition on Thursday, October 27, and again in answer to the member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes) on Monday, October 31, I said I would determine whether a contract between Ontario Hydro and Gulf Minerals Limited received approval by order in council. I also said I would pursue the matter of tabling that contract in this House.

Mr. McClellan: If there was a contract.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: That contract did not receive approval by order in council. However, I am pleased to table a copy of that contract in its entirety.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary on that, Mr. Speaker, if I may. Does the minister not regard the last paragraph of Mr. Taylor's letter to him regarding the disclosure of this contract to be offensive and not in the public interest? Has he indicated to him that the government objects to that kind of gratuitous comment on what should and should not be a matter of public knowledge?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I received that letter today and I haven't replied as yet to that letter.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, well, I hope the minister will table the reply.

[3:15]

Mr. S. Smith: I understood the minister to say that this contract did not have the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Can he explain therefore why the negotiated contract between Denison and Hydro is before cabinet for approval.

An hon. member: Is it?

Mr. S. Smith: If the present one needs approval, why didn't this one require approval as well?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I didn't remember saying that the present contracts were before cabinet for approval. The contract has not been finally negotiated. But if you are asking me whether I anticipate it will go to cabinet, the answer to that would be yes.

Mr. S. Smith: Why wasn't this one?

An hon. member: That was the question.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, does the Leader of the Opposition have another question?

Mr. S. Smith: The question is: If you anticipate the present one will require cabinet approval, why didn't this document have cabinet approval?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: My understanding, Mr. Speaker, is that Ontario Hydro has its own opinion that the order in council authorizing the construction of certain works and providing for the maintenance of those, plus the provisions of the Power Commission Act, gave it authority to execute that contract.

Mr. Conway: Is Hydro running the government?

Mr. S. Smith: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, it follows directly with your indulgence—

Mr. Foulds: That's five supplementaries.

Mr. S. Smith: Do you feel we shouldn't ask this one? You really think we shouldn't?

Mr. Foulds: You had 23 minutes at the beginning.

Mr. Nixon: We just presented it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If you have a very brief supplementary.

Mr. S. Smith: It's a very brief one. If in fact Hydro is of the opinion that this contract which you have given us did not require cabinet approval, has Hydro changed its opinion with regard to the one that is at present before cabinet or does cabinet simply recognize that it should have exercised its right to approve on the previous contract but failed to do so?

Interjection.

Mr. Lewis: They are an arrogant bunch, these people.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Ignore the interjections. You are wasting time.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: May I say, Mr. Speaker, it is my determination that the current contract that has not been finalized yet go to cabinet.

RCMP TORONTO STAFF

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday the member for Scarborough West asked me to confirm if the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has increased its complement in Ontario recently and to inform the House what duties the additional officers are performing.

I have been advised that there are now 609 RCMP officers located in Toronto—I think his question was Ontario; I have these figures for “located in Toronto”—plus a support staff of 117. This brings the total to 726 people. In 1972, there were 426 RCMP officers plus a support staff of 71, for a total of 497. That is an increase of 229 since 1972.

These additional officers are required because of an increase in drug activities, commercial crime, customs and excise, immigration and passport abuses, and organized crime.

The member for Kitchener asked me to outline the changes in the force which have resulted from differing responsibilities in matters of immigration and drug control. As I have indicated, there has been an increase in the number of illegal immigrants entering Canada and in cases of misuse of passport and other documents. The RCMP, in its role as the enforcement arm of the Department of Immigration, has therefore assigned more officers to this area.

Of course, the need for drug enforcement has increased dramatically since the 1960s. In an effort to suppress the amount of drugs available in Canada, the major thrust of the RCMP is against those who import large quantities of drugs on a continuing basis.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the Solicitor General able to inform us as to which of those particular areas—drugs, immigration, as well as the matters of commercial crime and customs—have had the increases or were those figures breaking down the total increase not otherwise available?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I don't have the breakdown of where they allocated them. I imagine it varies from time to time and probably there is some overlapping in the duties of the various officers.

Mr. Speaker, I gave only one answer, but I'll be pleased to hold the answer to the other question until tomorrow.

ASSESSMENT DATA

Mr. Epp: I have a question of the Minister of Revenue. In view of the fact that her ministry has computerized data which gives a block-by-block impact of market value assessment on municipalities in Ontario, I wonder whether the minister could tell the House how long this data has been available to her ministry? If it was available prior to the Blair commission doing its studies across the province, why wasn't this information made available to the municipalities so that they could have made more intelligent and more rational replies to the commission when it toured Ontario?

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: Assessment information is listed on our computing services. As to its availability in the matter in which the member questioned, we have from time to time made some of this information available. It is available through the assessment divisions to all municipalities for their general use. I'm not at all clear from his question how he would have this applied in this present situation.

Mr. Epp: Supplementary: I may just preface it to say that there are municipalities that have the information.

Mr. Speaker: Don't preface it at all. Ask your question please.

Mr. Epp: In light of the fact that one municipality was told that it had to come down to Toronto or had to come into the ministry to copy it, without the ministry making it available or sending it out to them, would the ministry consent to send out this information to all the municipalities in Ontario so that some of them from far-reaching areas in Ontario wouldn't have to come to Toronto to copy it out at the ministry and thereby treat all the municipalities equally in the province?

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Conway: Centralized autocracy.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: I am not aware of the individual negotiations between municipalities and members of my staff.

Mr. Warner: Why not?

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: But I know we have made particular assessment information available to regions and to particular groups such as boards of education which have applied.

Mr. Wildman: You aren't aware of your ministry.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: I am not aware that they had to come to Toronto to do some kind of a hand-copying process. I'll look into it for the member.

ARSENIC CONTAMINATION

Mr. Mackenzie: I have a question of the Minister of Labour. In view of the urgency of the health problems of workers at the greater Red Lake area, the evidence of increased lung cancer as a result of arsenic exposure, will the minister tell this House why she has taken so long to respond to requests by the United Steelworkers Union for a meeting to discuss a matter of such importance? Further, would the minister indicate whether she would include the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) in such a meeting due to the evidence of widespread arsenic contamination in the community?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Since receiving the request from Mr. Stewart Cooke, we have been collating all of the information available through several ministries on investigation and testing which has been done in that area. We have also examined the available mortality statistics to determine whether the numbers which were suggested as large numbers of arsenic-related malignancy deaths were in fact valid. From my early perusal of this, I find there is very little to relate the existence of arsenic to the kinds of deaths which these individuals suffered.

However, I would be pleased to tell you, Mr. Speaker, and the members of the House that I think the meeting with Mr. Cooke has been arranged for the beginning of next week. I would hope that by that time we shall have all the information for them so that we can discuss it freely with them.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the problem appears to be a serious one and that there is substantial evidence that contamination is widespread throughout the community—and it's very difficult to separate the work place from the community in this case because of the size of the community and how close the industrial operation is—would the minister conduct an environmental assessment study which would include human beings as well as vegetation, soil and the work place, and include the Ministry of Health in any such study?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I have certainly not in any way attempted to separate the invasion of the work place with arsenic or the invasion of the environment, and indeed it's my understanding that representation from the Ministry of the Environment will be present at the time that we have the meeting with Mr. Cooke. The members of the occupational health branch will also be there, because they, in fact, do all of the testing and consulting for both the Ministry of the Environment, as well as for the Ministry of Labour; therefore their presence is automatic.

BENDIX LAYOFF

Mr. Eaton: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Labour: Could the minister inform us, in view of the concerns of the workers in Bendix London, whether she has been notified of any layoffs, the duration of them, and if there are indications of any further layoffs there?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the information which we have received from that company in London states that they did lay off approximately 87 of their slightly-more-than 410 workers on October 11, that a further 40, I think, were laid off on Monday or Tuesday of this week, and that the extent of the layoff is specifically for three months. There are no further layoffs contemplated.

Mr. Swart: They are in good shape, aren't they?

Mr. Lewis: It never ends.

CHLOROFORM IN DRINKING WATER

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment: Since the minister indicated in today's Globe and Mail that the presence of chloroform in drinking water in Ontario is a problem, how widespread and/or serious is the problem, and is the situation a present or potential human health hazard?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Drinking too much water, Murray.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, the report in that article refers to a number of municipalities where there are high readings of chloroform. Chlorination is still the best possible treatment we know of today for drinking water. However, at the present time, or very shortly, we will undergo experiments at the Belleville plant using the ozone method—a combination of ozone and chlorination.

As far as the future is concerned, as I say, we will continue our research. There are particular problems in some of the municipalities that were named in the article. Belleville is one of them and therefore it is logical that our research will start there and continue eventually into other types of treatment plants in the province.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that the toxic chemicals are a result of organic material being deposited upstream by various residential areas or urban areas, is the minister prepared to improve those treatment centres upstream to ensure that organic material is not dumped into the rivers?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That's part of our overall program as far as municipal effluent or industrial effluent is concerned—to make sure that as little as possible of that goes into the streams which are a source of drinking water or drinking water supply.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: Could the minister answer as to whether or not the current situation is a present or potential health hazard?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It's not a health hazard, as the article says, Mr. Speaker. Our director of laboratory research has indicated that it is not now a health hazard. We will continue research into improving our method of treatment. I suppose it could be, if we ignored it.

Mr. O'Neil: Supplementary.

Mr. Foulds: New question.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary, the hon. member for Quinte.

Mr. Foulds: Why four on that and only one on the previous question?

Mr. O'Neil: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the minister for having met with both myself and—

Mr. Speaker: We have 30 seconds.

Mr. O'Neil: —the members of the Belleville Public Utilities. Could he tell me when this pilot project is to begin in the city of Belleville?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It will be pretty well up to the city of Belleville. We have advised the city of funding that we're prepared to give them.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

Mr. Duksza: Mr. Speaker, I am dissatisfied with the answer that the Minister of Health has given to my question. I request permission to debate this at 10:30 tonight.

Mr. Speaker: You may do so under standing order 28.

[3:30]

ALLEGED MISAPPROPRIATION OF FUNDS

Hon. Mr. Norton: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, there is a report in this morning's Globe and Mail, attributing to the hon. member for Bellwoods—

Mr. Reid: Have you read the article this time?

Hon. Mr. Norton: —with support from the hon. member for St. George of allegations that the Ministry of Community and Social Services has been misappropriating federal funds.

This is of particular concern because section 290 and section 292 of the Criminal Code of Canada create—

Mr. Germa: Shame.

Mr. Swart: There is some truth in it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —the offence of the misappropriation of money.

Mr. Breaugh: Guilty or not guilty?

Mr. Foulds: Just plead no contest.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Although I understand, if this is correct the original allegation was made in a committee of this Legislature, I'm sure it was never the intention of the privileges of this House—

Mr. Swart: Ask the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziemba) how he liked it?

Hon. Mr. Norton: —to protect a member so that he or she might allege that a criminal offence had been committed either by another member of this House or by public servants of this province.

I explained to the hon. members at the time that this matter arose that there might well have been some disagreement about interpretation or priorities. There may have been some misunderstanding on the parts of the members opposite of the commitments that this government has to the mentally retarded in this province. But there is absolutely no grounds for making an allegation of the commission of a criminal offence.

Mr. Foulds: There is no commitment at all.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you take this under consideration. I feel that I and the members of the ministry are entitled either to a retraction or an apology.

Mr. Peterson: Sue.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I was asked if I supported the principle of the statements referring to the funding. I deliberately stated that I did not support the language that had been used but I did support the philosophy that the money should have been used for community development and not for the institutions.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Why?

Mrs. Campbell: To that extent, I certainly supported what was said, but not the language. Thank you.

Mr. Lewis: That's what we were told at the time. That's what they promised at the time.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the standing order 42(b) says that whenever a matter of privilege arises it shall be taken into consideration immediately. I point out to you that we had an extensive debate on this issue yesterday afternoon in estimates and no suggestion of privilege was raised at that time. I will say that I had no intention of imputing criminal behaviour to this most delicate flower of a minister.

Mr. Foulds: You should have.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You phoney.

Mr. Martel: Don't be so sanctimonious.

Mr. McClellan: I invite you, Mr. Speaker, to read the record of the standing estimates committee of yesterday before you make your ruling and your ruling shall prevail.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I want to remind the hon. members, including the hon. minister who raised the point of privilege, that it's not incumbent upon the Chair to take any action at all. The purpose of rising for a point of privilege is to alert the House to something that a member feels or finds offensive. There are provisions in standing orders, if the member who feels offended wants to pursue it further. It's not the responsibility of the Chair to do anything further than to listen to the point of privilege.

Mr. Stong: What is the minister going to do?

Hon. Mr. Norton: It's not only me, but people who haven't a chance to speak in the House have been included in this allegation.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It's absolutely terrible.

REPORTS

STANDING GENERAL GOVERNMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. Gaunt from the standing general government committee reported the following resolution:

Resolved: That supply in the following amounts and to defray the expenses of the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1978:

Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs
Ministry administration program	$ 4,303,000
Finance program	373,940,000
Economic policy program	4,778,000
Intergovernmental affairs program	1,141,000
Local government affairs program	34,390,000
Central statistical services program	1,812,000

STANDING MEMBERS' SERVICES COMMITTEE

Mrs. Campbell from the standing members' services committee presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee recommends that it agrees in principle to the recommendations of the select committee on the fourth and fifth reports of the Ontario Commission on the Legislature regarding the legislative library, and that while it recognizes the restraint program in effect at this time, it is the unanimous recommendation of the committee that Mr. Speaker should proceed forthwith to appoint an administrative librarian to the legislative library in accordance with the recommendations of the select committee on the fourth and fifth reports of the Ontario Commission on the Legislature as the initial step in phasing in the recommendations.

MOTION

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that notwithstanding the previous order, this House will sit on Wednesday next the usual afternoon hours of 2 p.m. to 6 p.m., and on Thursday, November 10, will meet at 10 a.m. and adjourn at 2 p.m., when it will stand adjourned until Monday, November 14.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

ASSESSMENT AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener moved first reading of Bill 91, An Act to amend the Assessment Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: The purpose of this bill is to defer for one year the change of assessed values as at present contained in the assessment rolls of the municipalities. This will accommodate the study of the recommendations of the Blair commission with respect to municipal tax reform. It will also allow time to review completely the impact of the commission's recommendations on the tax base of each municipality and to monitor the effect of market value assessment and tax reforms on each class of property owner.

I am sure the hon. members are well aware of the far-reaching implications of the reform proposed by Mr. Blair. It is necessary, therefore, to review carefully all the submissions made to the commission and those made directly to myself or the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) in order to ensure that the new tax measures are fair, equitable and do not impose a hardship on any particular group or property owner.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Nixon moved first reading of Bill 92, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to make it a requirement that a motor vehicle registered in Ontario be insured under a motor vehicle liability policy. The bill requires that every owner provide proof of insurance protection at the time a motor vehicle permit is issued or validated.

EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. O'Neil moved first reading of Bill 93, An Act to amend the Employment Standards Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to increase the time for notice to be terminated where the employer plans to terminate the employment of 50 or more employees within a short period of time.

The bill also requires the employer, when requested, to confer with the minister and any trade unions that represent the employees to discuss alternative methods of reducing the number of terminations.

ANSWER TO WRITTEN QUESTION

Hon. Mr. Welch: Before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answer to question 29 standing on the notice paper. (See appendix, page 1482.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

REVIEW OF BOARDS AND COMMISSIONS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker: I am delighted that the luck of the draw, so to speak, has entitled me to present before this House a resolution dealing with—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will you move the resolution standing in your name, please?

Mr. S. Smith moved private member's motion No. 7:

Resolution: That, in addition to the authority granted to the standing procedural affairs committee for this parliament by resolution of the assembly dated June 28, 1977, the committee have authority to review the operation of any board, agency or commission to which the government of Ontario appoints all or some of the members with a view to eliminating redundancy and overlapping. And that the committee may recommend upon completion of a review that a board, agency or commission be terminated where, (a) the costs of operating the board, agency or commission no longer justify the service being provided to the public; (b) the amalgamation of the board, agency or commission with one or more existing boards, agencies or commissions would increase administrative effectiveness; (c) the work of the board, agency or commission could be better performed by another government organization; (d) the board, agency or commission no longer serves the public interest. And that the committee shall establish a review schedule whereby the operations of every board, agency or commission would be examined at least once in the next four years. But that the fact that a board, agency or commission is scheduled for review shall not prevent the committee from reviewing it at any time and the committee considers appropriate. And that the committee shall be empowered to send for persons, papers and things pursuant to section 35 of the Legislative Assembly Act.

Mr. S. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for correcting the procedure. As I say, I am pleased to have the opportunity to present before this House a resolution which in my opinion will at least begin the long process of trimming the excessive amount of government procedure and regulation which we as Ontarians and, frankly, as Canadians—or anybody in the western world, for that matter—have been subjected to over the years.

My remarks this afternoon will be relatively brief. I believe the motion we are now debating is clear in purpose and self-explanatory in terms of implementation.

I recognize that the idea embodied in the motion is not a new one, but it is definitely one whose time has come. Let me assure hon. members that I am more than willing to consider additions to this resolution as long as we end up with an effective mechanism which not only can monitor all boards, agencies and commissions but can also recommend to the Legislature the abolition of those that are no longer serving a useful purpose.

I believe that members might find it helpful if I provided some background to the concept of a "sunset" law. Essentially, it comes from recent American experience. The purpose of a sunset law is to establish a mechanism whereby government agencies and/or programs come under periodic review.

The statute establishing a particular agency or program usually includes a clause which automatically terminates the agency after a set period of time unless through a specific review process the agency or program continues to be justified. In effect, this type of law forces the burden of proof for the continuation of an agency or program onto the supporters of that particular program.

Such legislation was first enacted in the state of Colorado in 1976 and has since been at least considered by every state in the United States and has been enacted in some 24 states.

In Colorado the legislation is being applied to all of the state's regulatory bodies and agencies—43 in total. Ontario, on the other hand, has some 350 boards, agencies and commissions to which this provincial government appoints all or some of the members. Of that total, about 300 receive funds either directly or indirectly from the consolidated revenue fund. Nineteen of these bodies have audited financial statements appearing in volume 2 of the public accounts. Many others can be found in the spending estimates for a particular ministry, but generally with only a dollar amount attached to them.

Obtaining a breakdown of a grant for any agency is not an easy task. Still other bodies do not appear either in the spending estimates or the public accounts. Their expenses are usually part of an administrative cost of a branch of a ministry.

Let me cite as an example, the artificial insemination of livestock advisory committee. It was set up by the Artificial Insemination of Livestock Act, RSO 1970, chapter 30, section 3. The Act states that the members of the committee "shall receive such allowances and expenses as the Lieutenant Governor in Council determines." Payments are based on certain guidelines set up by Management Board of Cabinet. This committee generally meets about twice a year with remuneration of $95 per day for its chairman, and $75 per day for its members. But such payments are part of the administrative budget of the livestock branch of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food and therefore quite invisible.

I do not cite this advisory committee as one which should necessarily be terminated, but rather to illustrate how one particular government body was set up and where its budget is found. I do not have a predetermined list of those bodies which should be scrapped. My purpose in bringing forward this resolution is to underline the fact that we have no effective mechanism either to determine what the various boards, agencies or commissions are doing or to decide which ones, if any, should be eliminated.

In this context, however, it is interesting to note that the Provincial Auditor for the past three years has reported on three agencies which are inactive. These agencies are the Ontario Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Sheridan Park Corporation and the Ontario Telephone Development Corporation. They are still inactive and will, in all likelihood, be appearing once again in this year's report. These are agencies which have simply not met and as they have not submitted financial statements the Auditor has had to name them in his report.

His responsibility ends there. What about those bodies that are still active? How are they to be properly reviewed?

In Ontario we have three specific budgetary or financial review procedures: The spending estimates debates; the Provincial Auditor's annual report; and the work of the public accounts committee. Even with these formal and detailed mechanisms it has been increasingly clear to many of us that little or no time was being allotted to a meaningful review of the role and purpose of the various government boards, agencies, and commissions.

At the present time only the minister responsible or the Premier may recommend abolishing any board, agency or commission, and this is seldom done. One of the primary reasons is, I suspect, that cabinet ministers simply do not have the time constantly to oversee operations of all of the bodies in their respective ministries.

It seems to me that while the regular estimates debate procedure does provide the means for a detailed review of government programs, something else is needed for the boards, agencies and commissions. I have, therefore, tried to adapt our existing procedures in the Ontario Legislature to include a more thorough and specific review of those bodies.

Shortly before the last election, the Legislature established new terms of reference for a procedural affairs committee. The role of this committee is to "review and report to the House its observations and opinions on the operation of the standing and provisional orders of the House, and such additional matters as may be referred to it by the House or by Mr. Speaker from time to time. And that the committee also have power to review the operation of particular boards, agencies and commissions for which annual reports have been tabled in the House and referred to it, and the committee may review the operation of these bodies as it selects, with a view to reducing possible redundancy and overlapping."

I am proposing that we go one step further and insist that the committee examine every board, agency and commission and recommend to this Legislature the termination of those boards, agencies and commissions which it believes, after careful review, no longer serve the public and have outlived their usefulness.

I believe that my motion today will make the committee's function much more clear cut and specific. Its primary job will be to review the various boards, agencies and commissions and provide specific recommendations to the Legislature regarding their future existence.

In my view, one of the committee's first tasks would be to establish the exact number of boards, agencies and commissions that it should review. One list which can be used as a guide is that prepared by the Premier's office, entitled Boards, Agencies and Commissions, listing those to which the provincial government appoints all or some of the members. I present for the consideration of members a copy of that list. It is very extensive indeed.

Other lists also exist. In fact, I have a list prepared from the Premier's list, I believe, by the hon. member for London South (Mr. Walker) who was kind enough to send me a categorization, for which I thank him. And there are a number of other lists in existence.

Surely, we must determine how many boards, agencies and commissions actually exist.

I have set out in my motion a time-frame of four years in which the committee should review all these bodies. I selected that period as it corresponds to a normal legislative period. If the committee believes that it would need more time, particularly for the first comprehensive review, I am sure that the Legislature would follow its recommendation to amend the terms of reference in this regard.

I may say, parenthetically, Mr. Speaker, that in Colorado it was found to be a rather lengthy and time-consuming process to do a proper review, and it is entirely possible that with the large burden that the committee may find itself faced with, as it begins this historic review, it may want to come back to the Legislature and ask for some change in the terms of reference. I am sure that that would be a simple enough matter which could easily be accommodated at that time.

I do believe, personally, that four years is a realistic period. I would also think that if the procedural affairs committee wanted to have another of the standing committees look at a particular agency it could also make a recommendation to that effect. In other words, the committee might find itself burdened with a great deal of work and may decide to take a dozen agencies that, perhaps, properly fall within the realm of one of the other standing committees of the House, and request that the House might specifically ask one of the other standing committees to examine the agencies in question.

In addition, the committee might decide to restrict its review only to regulatory bodies. And the definition of regulatory—should it decide that—would, of course, be something that the committee would have to decide in consultation with the best counsel available, and that, I think, is something which I am sure the committee could do.

There may be some who feel that my motion does not go far enough. Certainly it would be preferable if the government were to introduce legislation with termination dates set out for the various agencies and programs they establish unless they are re-mandated. I think, in fairness, the sunset concept has generally speaking been that. In the state of Colorado, for instance, if an agency is not able to prove a need for it to be re-mandated it is automatically terminated. In this way the onus of proof of the need for continued existence is placed on the agency.

Frankly, I would prefer that. The difficulty is that in private members' debating time and under the business of private members, we are advised by legislative counsel it is not possible to include an automatic termination of this kind. It is possible to have an automatic review and a recommendation for termination, but it is not possible to have an automatic termination. That requires a government bill brought forward by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

The problem is that if we simply wait for the government to proceed in that manner, there is really no reason to believe that it would do so.

Although it would be preferable to have that type of sunset provision, the resolution I am presenting is at least within the terms of reference permitted. Some may think that the government cannot be trusted to bring in such legislation, and that it will merely use as an excuse the existence of this resolution that I am presenting regarding the procedural affairs committee. In other words, the government may say because of my resolution there is no need for another sunset resolution which actually puts automatic termination on agencies. This, if the House passes it, would have the procedural affairs committee undertaking the various examinations and recommendations that I have recommended.

Under those circumstances, there are some who feel the government would use that as an excuse to get out of this responsibility—to actually go in to the sunset provisions of the kind that the state of Colorado has at the moment.

I don't believe that the government cannot be trusted. I trust that the government will not use this as such an excuse. What I would urge all members to consider today is that we have here a means of taking a major step forward in the area of controlling government spending and government involvement in our lives. I would hope that we do not reject this opportunity to take positive action simply because this motion does not cover all government spending.

I think it would be a very healthy thing for the standing procedural affairs committee to look at each existing board, agency or commission, recognizing that there will be a schedule of looking at them and that they would have the power to recommend mergers or abolition or changes as they deem suitable.

By taking this step today I believe we can create a ripple effect on all government programs. The committee, as you know, already has the power to look at these matters but they have not done so. And it has not been obligatory for them to do so.

The application of the sunset process in the state of Colorado has had an encouraging side effect. The behaviour of all state agencies has improved in that they have added more lay people to their boards, and the promulgation of their rules and jurisdictional responsibilities has been clarified in preparation for their own sunset review. In other words, they have cleaned up their act so to speak in anticipation of how they could be changed to better serve the public.

The sunset review process will open up the policy options available to the government. A large portion of our budget is predetermined. We all want new programs or agencies but we do not want to raise more tax dollars to finance them.

The only alternative therefore is to eliminate outmoded programs or agencies of the government and replace them with others more appropriate to today's problems.

It is my opinion that this concept of controlling government spending will filter through to all spending programs. The application of this resolution to the province's boards, agencies and commissions is based on the notion that we have to start somewhere. And I hope it will signal a new approach to limiting government spending on all accounts.

Therefore, I take pleasure in presenting for the consideration of this House the resolution standing in my name.

[4:00]

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to rise today. There's so much debate going on with respect to the sunset law and it's a pleasure to see that. I feel the Leader of the Opposition introduced a very well-meaning resolution which is heading in the right direction, because it cannot be emphasized too much, how important the review process is to good government.

The review process is vitally important, particularly as it relates to regulations and regulatory government within the province. Indeed, at all levels of government, the bureaucracy, the regulation, the red tape and the plain-and-simple heavy hand of government far too often felt, seems all-pervasive to every individual in the province. Well-meaning regulations have a habit of continuing ad infinitum, forever interfering with our way of life. There appears to be no proper government mechanism in any level of government in Canada to remove regulations which have reached the point of redundancy.

Let me divert for a moment and offer these classic examples to illustrate my point. I'm told in 1960, the Boer War Commission operated in Ottawa. At that particular moment in time, there were more members of the Boer War Commission than veterans of the Boer War.

Mr. Peterson: Jimmy Auld fought in that, didn't he?

Mr. Walker: Another example—and this time it's of a regulation which might have been rescinded in England to save taxpayer money. Just after the first war, the Royal Horse Artillery completely converted to vehicular means of transporting their artillery. All their horses were retired to pasture, or wherever they go and years later when the Royal Horse Artillery was on parade—it was still called the Royal Horse Artillery—some citizen had the audacity to ask the commanding officer, what that one soldier did, standing over there by himself with his hands clasped in front of him, appearing to have no purpose at all. The commanding officer retorted, "Madam, it's that soldier's function to hold the horses." Someone had forgotten to rescind the regulation some 20 years later.

As I indicated, the Leader of the Opposition is indeed on the right track when he attempts to encourage review, and I commend him for that. Regrettably, I feel his resolution falls far short of what is necessary here today.

Mr. Reed: Here is the but.

Mr. Kerrio: But.

Mr. Walker: It lacks the essential ingredient of the sunset law—the automatic death rate, the date on which the legislation or the agency automatically terminates. Indeed the very word “sunset” means the sun shall set. And for our own examples we might apply to the Ontario Highway Transport Board to suggest if it had an opportunity to set in the sun, perhaps it would be December 31 of 1978 or even sooner.

Mr. Wildman: He is talking about twilight.

Mr. Kerrio: Put Gray Coach out of business.

Mr. Walker: The resolution goes so far as to create review which is, of course, important in sunset legislation. But in fact it offers no sunset date whatsoever and is therefore not a sunset bill or a sunset resolution. But it has to be sunset in order to work.

Indeed, if the member had brought simply the endorsement of sunset before the House today I would have been the first to support it wholeheartedly.

Mr. Reed: Why don't you amend it? Let's have an amendment.

Mr. Walker: Because as you know Mr. Speaker, I have on the order paper at this particular time, a resolution to that effect.

Mr. Kerrio: Put an amendment in it.

Mr. Walker: I might ask why half a loaf of bread might be better than no loaf at all. I have to say to you in this case, half a loaf is worse than no loaf at all.

Mr. Peterson: Walker, you are half-baked.

Mr. Walker: In this particular case it would become far too easy a hitching post for bureaucratic people to say now that we have review, we really do not have to have sunset; that is the self-destruct machinery.

Mr. Wildman: Use a hitching post.

Mr. Walker: That would destroy the real value of the review. As the resolution was originally framed it would require a review of 347 agencies, boards and commissions by the procedural affairs committee spanning a period of some four years. To review 347 in four years would be about as easy as boarding a 747 in full flight. Review would become a mockery buried beneath tons of paper and consumed by the inertia of government itself.

Mr. Peterson: That's catchy.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Good, eh?

Mr. Wildman: You have an inert government.

Mr. Walker: If we take a look at the state of Colorado to which the Leader of the Opposition referred, their experience in 1977 was the legislative committee could do a proper job to only about 13 of their boards and agencies. The benefit of the sunset law is that it already solves some of the inherent problems created by a simple review mechanism. Firstly, it terminates automatically unless the review committee and the Legislature should choose to do otherwise. Secondly, it turns the inertia of government bureaucracy against itself, such that if the bureaucracy cannot justify its continuance—

Mr. Reed: That would be worth while.

Mr. Walker: —it would bring about new legislation by the government; the onus of proof being on the bureaucracy itself, then it automatically terminates.

Normally bureaucratic inertia works the other way around and because time is, for it, simply dragging its heels, it becomes forgotten and overlooked. With sunset the burden of proof shifts to the accused. The agency is presumed to be guilty unless proven innocent and reprieved. Under simple review, the bureaucracy game is to hide as much as possible, as the onus is on the government in that case to make a case for eliminating the agency or program. Under sunset, the onus is on the bureaucracy to prove its case.

The sunset law has a built-in self-destruct mechanism that the inertia of government cannot consume and it therefore has to be reckoned with or else it has a date with the executioner. This triggering mechanism is truly the essence of proper review. This approach is vitally important, because a review without a built-in self-destruct mechanism is not a great deal better—

Mr. Reed: Why don't you have it?

Mr. Walker: —than our present system, made so perfect today by the sheer weight of bureaucracy itself. Too often the Legislature concerns itself with the rhetoric of legislation, leaving the hard work of oversight and overview to be carried out in a hit or miss fashion, rather than with the steady diligence which should be our fundamental responsibility.

Sunset does not allow us to avoid or sidestep difficult decisions we may have preferred to avoid in the past. Each of us would have to bite the bullet even with our favourite programs, and, hopefully, if it's extended into government programs and boards as well.

In Alabama, the state attempted a half-baked approach to a review mechanism. That was really not a proper sunset law, and today it is as if they had no law at all with respect to review. The reason is the lack of this fail-safe, self-destruct mechanism.

I'm optimistic that the sunset law is an idea whose time has come. But it has to be done right, and that is by Act of the Legislature. I am also optimistic that a true sunset law will come into this province in the next several months. The Leader of the Opposition and I discussed my reasons for my reluctance to support his interim measure, and that is not because I oppose the direction in which he is intending to head, but rather I oppose the machinery by which the review would be brought about. With his review mechanism in place, it would be all too easy for people to say, "Now that we have review, we do not need to have sunset."

Mr. S. Smith: It's your government, Gord.

Mr. Walker: That may be the case, but that may be the way. That would be no more useful than our present estimates approach today. And as every member here knows, estimates is nothing more than a shotgun approach to agencies and programs which, frankly, serve little or no use.

Mr. Wildman: What?

Mr. McClellan: What allegations.

Mr. Walker: A proper sunset law will restore to this House the kind of review so blatantly absent today.

Mr. MacDonald: I rise to express the support of the New Democratic Party for this resolution. I've only one reservation, and it's a reservation which is expressed in an amendment standing on the order paper today. I would like to move that now so that I can speak to both of them.

Mr. MacDonald moved that Mr. S. Smith's resolution be amended by the addition of the following words: "And that the committee shall have the authority to engage such counsel and other personnel as the committee deems appropriate."

Mr. Rotenberg: Just to spend more money.

Mr. S. Smith: That's a good idea.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member for Wilson Heights likes to engage in idle pursuits without the capacity to do anything effective. That's the import of his interjection. As was pointed out by the Leader of the Opposition in introducing his motion, the resolution which was introduced by the government House leader last June 28, in establishing the standing procedural affairs committee, clearly spells out that that committee has "the power to review the operation of particular boards, agencies and commissions for which annual reports have been tabled in the House and referred to it, and the committee may review the operation of these bodies as it selects with a view to reducing possible redundancy and overlapping."

There is a list of those agencies, boards and commissions which produce annual reports and, therefore, will fall within the jurisdiction and the purview of the standing procedural affairs committee. I've heard it variously estimated as 103 or 107. There are approximately 100 of them. The reason why we support this resolution is that it extends the role of the standing procedural affairs committee to encompass all ABCs—agencies, boards and commissions—to which the Lieutenant Governor in Council makes appointment. That list is contained in a volume, the up-to-date version of which I have been able to get from the cabinet office. There are some 363 such bodies.

Some of them are redundant. Some of them should have been eliminated years ago. That comes to the point that the hon. member for London South was speaking about as to how one achieves a mechanism for eliminating one that is redundant. I remind the House that two years ago, in the interim report that was presented to this House from the standing committee on public accounts, it recommended that the Ontario Canteen Fund affairs be wound up and the committee further recommended "in view of the costs of dispensing assistance that the Soldiers' Aid Commission be phased out and the administration of the program be assumed by the Ministry of Community and Social Services."

Mr. S. Smith: That will go down in history.

Mr. MacDonald: What happened? The usual thing happened; nothing. A recommendation is brought in through a committee and is placed on the table. The report is accepted—in most instances it is adopted. Yet the government just blandly ignores it. So those two redundant organizations or inefficient organizations, whose purpose has got lost with the passage of time, still exist when it's been suggested they should go out of existence.

Let me move to some background considerations of this whole situation. Ontario has moved significantly in recent years to the establishment of what is referred to as a professional civil service, that is, one to which appointments are normally made of people who have the educational qualifications, the personal qualifications and the experience. They are not subject to firing because of the political whims of a government that has just come in and wants to get rid of all the appointees of the government that has just gone out.

The last time we had that kind of mass firing was in 1934 when the Liberals came in and cleaned out all of the Tories who had been appointed by the Ferguson and Henry administrations.

Mr. Peterson: We're going to do it again.

Mr. Foulds: You are?

Mr. MacDonald: When George Drew came in in 1943 no such mass slaughter took place.

Mr. Peterson: That's because they didn't deserve it.

Mr. MacDonald: It didn't partly, I suggest, because there was a shortage of manpower available to fill posts at that time.

Mr. Wildman: They were all over fighting the war.

Mr. MacDonald: Secondly, it may be that there was a growing recognition of the validity of a professional civil service rather than a partisan civil service. But I suspect the most critical reason of all was that it was a minority government and, being a minority government, one doesn't throw one's weight around in that sort of a fashion.

[4:15]

In other words, we have moved from the old partisan civil service to a professional civil service or at least in that direction. But the point I want to make and draw to the attention of the House is that the government has moved to the establishment of a new patronage system. There are in government agencies, boards, and commissions, I am told—I haven't had the time and I don't know anybody who has tabulated it totally—some 5,000 appointees by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

May I put into the record a rather balanced comment by Professor Desmond Morton, an historian of some repute and recognition with regard to this kind of situation.

Mr. Wildman: Wonderful man.

Mr. B. Newman: Never heard of him

Mr. MacDonald: He says, for example, and I quote: "In time, Drew and his successors found a satisfying and generally acceptable way of rewarding the network of local notables on which Progressive Conservative power rests. The expansion of the Ontario government has largely taken the form of a proliferation of agencies, boards and commissions and Crown corporations, and later virtually all of them provide opportunities for government jobs as directors, councillors and advisers."

Mr. McClellan: Shame.

Mr. MacDonald: "Outside the sprawling realm of government, there are a host of other positions to fill as government-nominated directors of marketing boards, as governors of universities and as regents of community colleges.

"Since the nominations purport to give the people of Ontario a voice in controlling some of their vital institutions, party allegiance is far from being the only or even the primary factor in filling vacancies. Most of the familiar categories have to be kept in mind. If business is represented, there must at least be a token trade unionist. Religion, ethnicity and youth must normally be served, and someone will almost certainly remind the government that 50 per cent of the population is female. Somehow, though, the ranks of the Progressive Conservative Party seem better stocked with the appropriate worthies than either the plebeian New Democrats or the upwardly-mobile Liberals."

Now I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that that's rather an accurate description of the new patronage appointed and financed out of the public purse, civil service out in ABC's—agencies, boards and commissions. I don't think this is generally known, I draw it particularly to your attention and to that of anybody else who might want to listen.

I ask you: How do these people get appointed? Who makes the choice?

Mr. S. Smith: Don't ask.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I was rather intrigued to discover that there's a committee, a committee known as the committee of appointments—for appointments or of appointments. Who sits on this committee?

An hon. member: Tell us.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, it is chaired by a prestigious individual, Dr. Stewart, who is deputy minister in the Premier's office. It has on its membership such illustrious figures as the member for Elgin (Mr. McNeil), a parliamentary assistant; a Mr. DeGeer, who was a Tory party organizer and now fulfills those functions within the framework of the Premier's office; Mr. Cronyn, who is a well known Tory and head of the whole COGP investigation; Mr. Westcott, who is well known as the trouble-shooter for the Premier and the government; Mr. Goodman, who is equally well known for his capacities; and finally, just to complete this highly non-political group, Mr. Kelly, the bagman for the Tory party.

Mr. S. Smith: Good to know where the people's interest is.

Mr. MacDonald: I remember years ago discovering that there was in each of the Tory riding associations what they call the employment committee, which makes all the appointments to the civil service that can be slipped through with influence from the ministry. In fact I remember an instance when the employment committee of the Tory association in that little pocket borough known as Lanark once had a meeting in the month of October and announced that two or three people—and they named them—were going to be appointed to vacancies in the liquor stores in the area. They did it so openly, as the Tories in Lanark do, that they sent a report to all the local papers and it was published. So I rose in the House and asked the minister responsible: "Are there vacancies in the liquor stores?" And he said: "No." "Well, will there be vacancies?" And he said, "Yes, on January 1."

How remarkable, Mr. Speaker! The local employment committee had been told three months ahead and then made the choice as to who was going to get the appointments. There we are—one of the agencies, boards and commissions. So you have a patronage committee at the top in Queen's Park, and you have local patronage committees to appoint these 5,000 people all across the province of Ontario.

Mr. McClellan: Throw the rascals out.

Mr. MacDonald: I would like to have spoken on the sunset laws, but we will have to get that some time later. I think this does the job in terms of review and, if the House is willing to co-operate in terms of recommendations that come from that procedural affairs committee, then we also will be able to implement its recommendations to eliminate redundancy.

But my amendment can be briefly spoken to in a few seconds. That sort of committee cannot be effective if it hasn't got staff. It absolutely cannot do its job. A few years ago a committee in the House that had that kind of a job made a motion asking that they have the right to appoint staff. And what happened? The usual. The government ignored it, or vetoed it behind the scenes.

If this committee is going to review agencies, boards and commissions, their operations, their original purpose, then, they must have the staff to do some of the work to assist the members. With the amendment, we in the New Democratic Party, will gladly support this resolution.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Peterson: I want to tell the member for York South how very much I enjoyed his speech. I hope some time we have an opportunity to debate the matters he was addressing in his speech today. If he ever needs help one day, maybe we can help him out with the Post Office.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Is it still operating?

Mr. Foulds: Let the record show.

Mr. Peterson: Apart from that, I want to say on behalf of our party, we think his amendment is a constructive one, a good one, and we thank him for introducing it. Clearly, we will support it and we thank him for his support of our resolution.

Mr. Wildman: Joe Davidson will love you.

Mr. Peterson: I must say I am quite perplexed by the rationalization of my old friend and colleague from London South on this particular bill. I gather in the course of his reasoning, he has come to the conclusion he cannot trust the government if we introduce my leader's resolution in this particular case, because the government will use it as an excuse for inactivity.

We are cast in a very different position on this one. We tend to trust the government will do it if so instructed by way of resolution by the House. The member for London South doesn't trust the government. Maybe he has more cause. Maybe he knows them a little better than we do. But I want to dissociate my self from his particular impression on this matter.

Mr. McClellan: He wasn't on the employment committee.

Mr. Peterson: One of his objections was the "automatic death." We have consulted with the legislative counsel and the legislative counsel said it is just not practical, it is not realistic, it's impossible. The way to approach it is to go and look at the enabling legislation for all 344, whatever the number is, boards, agencies and commissions and introduce an amendment in each particular one. You cannot overrule by way of resolution what's enshrined in legislation and in many other places.

I am reluctantly coming to the conclusion that my friend from London South's only real objection is that his name is not on it. Because this is accomplishing, in a real sense and meaningful sense, what I think he has intimated should be done. Let me tell you one or two of the advantages. My leader's resolution allows for study, review, consolidation and amalgamation—studying the whole thing, not just automatic death. In addition to the ones that are inefficient and should be put away and given a decent, respectable burial, others can be consolidated, reorganized—we can reorganize the government course of business. We think that's sufficient. An automatic death provision is only a superficial one. The resolution presented by my leader more sincerely and correctly addresses the real problems.

Mr. Walker: That is not what your leader said.

Mr. Peterson: We, in the Liberal Party, have believed in this kind of resolution, this kind of legislation, for a long, long time. As the member will recall, this was brought up in the campaign. I want to refer him back to the budget debate when we talked about this.

Mr. Nixon: Read us some of that budget speech.

Mr. Peterson: Thank you very much. Did the record get that?

Mr. Nixon: Read us some of that budget speech.

Mr. Peterson: I would like to read just a small fraction of it—I won't bore the members with the whole thing.

Mr. Eaton: Finest speech ever read in this House.

Mr. Peterson: Here's what we said then and what we still believe. There are several aspects to this whole matter. One aspect, and I quote:

"We recommend a program of deregulation. This would function on two levels. At the first level, we would look at all committees, boards, agencies and groups of every type under the aegis of the government of Ontario, to attempt to streamline, to attempt to demystify, to attempt to bring some efficiency to it. This, in our judgement, can be done by a committee of the Legislature on a non-partisan basis; and, again, we support this constructive proposal for staff and for assistance, because it is a big job. We think it could do a great service to the people of this province.

"But there is another aspect. The other aspect is of a deregulation committee, or a deregulation approach to government which would look at all the various regulation statutes but more disturbing are the multiplicity of regulations that are attendant thereto. We think that, again, with proper staff and proper counselling we could go through these regulations. Granted, it's going to take a long time. Granted, it's not easy. But it has to be done to get a handle on that aspect of the whole matter."

You see, Mr. Speaker, this is part of the Liberal Party's program to try to bring more efficiency into government. This is just one aspect of it. The other aspect that we talked about then, and we will continue to talk about, is the zero-based budgeting which brings a lot of these things back under fresh view every year. We think it should be subjected to that kind of scrutiny from a strictly economic point of view. We think that is constructive and we will continue to talk about that; we will continue to suggest it.

In addition to that, we've talked about introducing economic analyses for all regulations or all laws—i.e., before any law or bill is brought to this House, the government should provide an economic analysis of it, of what the effect is on the economy. As we have argued before and will continue to argue, if you bring in one particular measure it frequently has a ripple effect, it has profound ramifications for the rest of the economy. We should be able to look at any law or regulation in the broad economic context rather than as an isolated case. Because, frequently, laws are brought into being without our fully understanding all the consequences; then we have to back up and change our minds substantially.

The third and fourth areas we've talked about concern more disciplining in the expenditures by ministry. The figures are on the record many times—about how the various ministries fudge and spend 20 or 30 per cent of their total year's appropriation in the last month in order to meet the budgetary guidelines, so that they don't get cut off in the next year. And their record, the public accounts will show, was pretty bad last year. Agriculture, Environment, Industry and Tourism—all spent a disproportionate amount of money in the last month. It's an old trick. Any ministry which wants to inflate its programs or inflate its budget has used it many times before.

It's happening in such excess in this government that we think the fourth part of a management program has to be brought into place in this government. We have argued, and will continue to argue and continue to press for more discipline and more management skills, more management orientation throughout all levels of the civil service.

That's why I'm so very happy that my leader has introduced this particular resolution. There is some discrepancy in the numbers of how many boards, agencies and commissions there are. I know in one report filed by the government House leader, as I recall, there are something like 344. I heard different numbers today. It doesn't really matter. There's a hell of a lot, too many.

Mr. Foulds: What are 25 boards, agencies or commissions?

Mr. Peterson: That's just it.

The other thing, I want to say is that some 274 of those are headquartered in Toronto. It is part of our philosophy that those could be decentralized. It could be part of decentralization, a regional economic strategy, to deploy those boards, agencies and commissions into other areas of this province. That's one of the things that we would do in our kind of government.

The other thing that's so very scary to me—and I just want to put it on the record—is that once these boards and commissions are set up they tend to function on their own, through non-budgetary-statutory appropriations. They just function on their own and they gather momentum on their own.

Last year these non-budgetary items totalled some $1.7 billion which is not really subjected to the same kind of scrutiny given to our current estimates. That concerns us, and we think that this is one of the needed mechanisms—to look into that kind of matter.

As I recall, the non-budgetary deficit for this type of thing was something like $236 million last year, roughly a third of the predicted deficit at that particular time. It has grown very substantially since those particular numbers came along. It's not nearly as great a percentage, but it is still critical as a matter that is not subjected to legislative scrutiny.

We think that the government, with the assistance of the opposition parties, should set about very quickly—with competent staff, as the member for York South has pointed out—to plough through this on an organized basis. It may take years, but as my colleague from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) has said on many occasions, "It is better to light one candle than to curse the darkness."

[4:30]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has one minute.

Mr. Peterson: I'll finish up in one minute. I just want to say again how terribly disappointed I am in the member for London South, when he has a wonderful opportunity—I assume, if he is not going to support it, the government is starting to be very frightened of this kind of thing. But we do have an opportunity. I am very disappointed with the member for London South for not coming forward on this thing. I don't find any merit in any of his reasoning whatsoever.

We have more faith in the government to proceed once the course of action is initiated and we would ask for all thoughtful members of the House to support this particular resolution.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As the member for London South pointed out, the Leader of the Opposition really spent more time talking about something that was not in his resolution than the substance of the resolution. But I would like to speak to his resolution.

The current mandate of the standing procedural affairs committee includes a review of the operations of those agencies for which annual reports have been tabled in the House and referred to it. At this time there are 75 agencies whose reports are tabled in the House. A list of these agencies is available; it includes such important agencies as the Education Relations Commission, Ontario Highway Transport Board, Ontario Hydro and the Workmen's Compensation Board, to name a few.

The government is prepared to ensure that all annual reports tabled in this Legislature are referred to that committee.

As of October 1, 1977, there are approximately 300 boards, agencies and commissions, counting each of a number of groups such as the conservation authorities as one, to which the government appoints all or some of the members. Of these, approximately 250, or about 80 per cent, are funded either fully or partially. If each agency in the groups is counted individually, there are approximately 660 bodies, of which about 520—again about 80 per cent—are funded.

The effect of the proposed mandate of the committee, therefore, would be to increase its potential coverage to agencies such as hospital boards, the Royal Botanical Gardens, boards of commissioners of police—of which there are 70—and district welfare administration boards, to name a few.

The majority of unfunded agencies have been given authority to regulate professional activities with little government involvement other than the appointment of some members: for instance, the Association of Professional Engineers of Ontario, the Law Society of Upper Canada and the Governing Board of Denture Therapists. The resolution is probably not aimed at these agencies. I don't know; perhaps it is. But there are, however, several unfunded agencies of a commercial nature, like the Liquor Control Board and the Ontario Lottery Corporation, which would be of interest to the committee. However, as I pointed out, the committee currently has the mandate to review these commercial agencies.

In the case of those agencies which are funded by the province, all expenditures of government funds are subject to the normal budgeting and control procedures applied during and after the estimates process, including estimates debates and review by the public accounts committee. The ministries and the appropriate cabinet committees also review the operation of agencies as a regular part of their policy and planning activities to ensure that each agency continues to serve the public interest.

In addition to this general review, Management Board maintains close control over the payment of per diems and expenses to board members. Such expenses are the major or, in some cases, the only costs associated with the majority of agencies which are funded by the province. Guidelines are available which stipulate a range of per diems which can be paid to members, depending on such factors as the complexity of the work performed. Specific Management Board approval is then required for the actual level of per diems for each agency.

For some time now Management Board, with the assistance of ministries, has been developing a policy which delineates the extent to which the administrative policies of government will apply to each agency. This policy is in the final stage of refinement and should be promulgated in the government's manual of administration early in the New Year.

Mr. Foulds: It just happened to happen. What a coincidence!

Hon. Mr. Auld: All agencies have been allocated to one of three schedules. The effect of the allocation is as follows:

The largest schedule includes more than 200 agencies, most of which are regulatory or advisory in nature. These agencies are subject to all the administrative controls, practices and procedures of the Ontario government. Examples include the Ontario Municipal Board and the Ontario Council on University Affairs.

The next largest schedule comprises those agencies or groups of agencies—approximately 40—which, while funded by the province, are essentially concerned with the delivery of community or social service programs or are intergovernmental in nature. Examples include the universities, the Royal Ontario Museum and the conservation authorities. In each of these cases, the parent ministry has established financial planning and reporting processes which are appropriate to the particular circumstances.

The third group comprises a small number of agencies which are basically self-financing and commercial in nature. Again, I mention the LCBO and the Lottery Corporation and the Ontario Stockyards Board. To ensure that relevant review and control procedures are maintained in the case of these agencies, a program is under way to develop a memorandum of understanding to clarify such things as objectives, performance expectations and operating relationships.

Mr. Foulds: Sounds like the Reed proposal—memorandum of understanding.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would now like to turn to three areas we are currently developing to enhance the processes I have just described; these are managing by results, or MBR for short, zero-base budgeting, and sunset legislation. The MBR program of the government has been mentioned both by myself and the Treasurer several times during the last year. Management Board requires that all government programs, including those that fund agencies, define the specific output they will achieve in the coming fiscal year with the resources allocated. In other words, each ministry makes a specific commitment to achieve certain results with its resources.

Mr. MacDonald: It should apply to your conservation program.

Hon. Mr. Auld: It's the government's intention to have all major programs on MBR by the end of this fiscal year.

The second area that Management Board is reviewing in order to improve the processes of allocation and control of public funds is one that has been mentioned by myself during the Throne Speech debate and by the Treasurer in his last budget. I'm speaking of zero-based budgets.

Zero-based budgeting makes particular sense in Ontario since it is a logical extension of managing by results. We have three ministries doing pilot projects at the present time. All ministries have been exposed to zero-based budgeting and in conjunction with Management Board are refining the technique with a view to introducing it as the basis for the preparation of the 1979-80 estimates. This will help to ensure that all expenditures of government by agencies are reviewed more effectively.

The enactment of a sunset law which has been introduced in several states in the USA is another approach that the government is exploring. As the name implies, a sunset law is applied to agencies and it requires that the sun will set on that agency unless it can clearly justify that it should be continued.

Currently, programs continue unless specifically terminated by the government. Under a sunset law, the process is reversed. At first glance this type of technique has appeal. However, there are a considerable number of problems with its implementation and my colleagues and I are now reviewing the sunset approach.

In conclusion, I would like to emphasize to all members that the government will continue to ensure through the processes I have just described that public funds are allocated in an efficient and effective way.

Furthermore, the government will do everything possible to carry out the recommendations of the Camp commission and those of the Morrow committee to ensure that the Legislature is able to adequately review and analyse the operations of government including its agencies, boards and commissions.

Mr. Breagh: I feel in part responsible for this because it was in June of this year that I brought to the committee's attention that we had some work to do that we hadn't embarked upon yet. Those were recommendations put before the House some time ago by the Camp commission and restated again by the Morrow committee. That was to review boards, commissions, agencies that made annual reports to the House. We reinforced that somewhat and clarified some of the language and had that passed in the form of a resolution in the House in June of this year.

It seems to have become a popular sport, however, to seize upon this idea and certainly the concept has been expanded far beyond the original suggestions of the Camp commission and the Morrow committee.

I support the concept. I would like to attempt to put a small measure of realism into it. This committee, procedural affairs, happens to be one that I chair. It's allowed to sit, under the current agreement with the House, one afternoon a week after the question period. I wish that the members of the Liberal caucus had as much fervour for standing committee meetings as the leader of that particular party has for putting this kind of motion, because last Monday we spent half the committee's time trying to find a Liberal to sit on the committee so that we would have a quorum. It would certainly be nice if we saw a little back-bench support for front-bench concepts.

Mr. Nixon: It might be that you got there first.

Mr. Breagh: The second part of the time problem is the number of days that this House is in session, which is rather on the short side. Given that we're only allowed to participate in this exercise one afternoon a week, usually for about two hours, if we continue to have the kind of short sittings that this House has had for some time now, it's going to take to about the year 2000 to make the first run through this list. There are some practical problems that should be looked at in there.

I want to address myself to what I think is a rather atrocious piece of terminology; that is, the "sunset" terminology. It really nauseates me no end that something as serious as this has such a catchy little title as "The Sun Sets on Some Agency Over There." It doesn't address itself to what board or commission might be involved or what it did or the human beings who are there. It's a very nice kind of Middle American concept that the sun will set on something and no one will ever be harmed by what happens, and that we'll all save money and good things will ensue. That is not necessarily true and I reject the title that is used, perhaps even more than the concept that's there.

Mr. Walker: You are right about that.

Mr. Breagh: There's a tremendous amount of work there, and I must say the concept that we would have a Tory hunt is more fun than I personally can resist. I support that one wholeheartedly. I have been around long enough, though, to know that usually when you go hunting Tories what you wind up with is that a couple of people who have nothing to do with the decision-making process get shot, and the Tory you were chasing in the first instance, who sits on the board and knows nothing about it, survives.

I have some reservations should the Tories ever regain a majority, God forbid—

Mr. Reed: Don't worry, they won't.

Mr. Breagh: Whatever recommendations this committee might make to this House, I don't have any delusions about what would happen to those recommendations. So I have some cautions there.

I was interested in the Leader of the Opposition's concept and the many remarks that he focused on Colorado's beautiful "sunset" law. It's my information that there are a number of boards, agencies and commissions down there surviving rather nicely, redundant as all get out, but they have caught on to the idea that every four years the sun will set and you want to be careful that you're not overstaffed; so you cut down on people who provide a service to anybody. Anything that conceivably might be useful to the society around it is cut out.

What you go for is really sharp staff who know how to deal with government committees. They spend their four years making sure they have lobbied well enough that there's sufficient support for their board or agency; that they've made a case. Then, of course, the government has its staff people devoting all their time to finding out who these people are and taking apart that argument. In fact, you really don't look at the service provided but you engage in that wonderful governmental procedure that we see all too often.

Mr. Nixon: How could one member be so cynical having only been here a few months? Send him back to Oshawa.

Mr. Breagh: I support the concept behind this, because the mechanisms that we use in this House to examine what actually happens in the bureaucracies of Ontario is really quite full of holes; and so much of what we despise and dislike and what we all recognize as being inefficient, we never get around to because there isn't time.

I'm concerned that this is taken to be a realistic and a serious proposal. I am concerned that it becomes an effective instrument for this House to use to rid us of useless things. But I am coming back to the initial point, that the House itself must accept that this work is important. It must therefore support the amendment so that at least we will have some tools with which to carry out our task. Finally, and certainly not the least important thing, it would be really nice if members of the Liberal caucus would show up to a committee meeting.

Mr. Speaker: The time for this ballot item has expired.

Mr. Nixon: Just when I was ready.

Mr. MacDonald: And one of your best speeches.

Mr. Foulds: An excellent speech.

Mr. Kerrio: It was better than the previous one.

[4:45]

DARLINGTON GENERATION STATION

Mr. MacDonald moved private member's motion No. 5.

Resolution: That in the opinion of this House public hearings under the Environmental Assessment Act on the proposed Darlington generation station should proceed forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: You have the floor for up to 20 minutes.

Mr. MacDonald: As the motion says, and it's very straightforward, we should proceed forthwith with public hearings under the Environmental Assessment Act in reference to the proposed Darlington generation station.

Let's look at the arguments which have been advanced against this. From the government, it is argued that it would be costly if it were to proceed with an environmental assessment. Mr. Speaker, I ask you, what in heaven's name did this government pass the Environmental Assessment Act in 1975 for, if it didn't believe that it was valid and, therefore, that the cost attached to it was a legitimate cost? Why suddenly now, with the largest project that Ontario might have in the foreseeable future, does it trot out an argument that there's going to be money spent on this and, therefore, we shouldn't proceed with an environmental assessment? Surely that argument is so shallow and feeble that it need not be dealt with any more.

Secondly—and this has to be dealt with rather more carefully—is the argument that in 1985 we might have a power shortage and that the province might be faced with brown-outs and/or blackouts, therefore, we must proceed immediately without any further delay to the building of the Darlington station. I don't know whether or not we need to proceed immediately with Darlington because I haven't got the facts. I would remind this House that the select committee that looked into Hydro, which I had the honour of chairing, made a report which was endorsed by all members of the committee, including government members.

In it was one recommendation which can be found in the third section of the report on page 33. It draws attention to the fact that the deficiency in power reserves that might exist in the province of Ontario in 1985 could be changed into a surplus, if four things were done.

First, the government would have a reduction in the forecast needs in 1985 by Hydro. Hydro's own forecast between 1975 and 1976 was significantly down to indicate that that was a valid approach. Secondly, the government should set and should achieve conservation targets, instead of the unending rhetoric that we have now and not so much achievement. Thirdly, there should be various load management proposals entertained and implemented to shave the peaks and fill the valleys in the generation of Ontario Hydro. Finally, we should quantify the value that Ontario Hydro gets from being part of an international or continental grid so that if there's any emergency shortage of power in Ontario the power to cope with that shortage will immediately flow across the borders from neighbouring states and indeed neighbouring provinces.

In the select committee which the government has agreed to set up again, when we get an opportunity to monitor the recommendations of that earlier select committee, we will then be able to come to a conclusion as to whether or not those proposals that were made in the first report have been implemented by Hydro and whether or not changing circumstances now suggest that in 1985 that power deficiency can be transformed into a power surplus. Therefore, we might at least postpone moving on the building of the Darlington plant at this present stage.

If we can perchance postpone moving on the Darlington station, I suggest that we should seriously consider doing it. It's not news to anybody in this House that there is a great and a growing concern with regard to nuclear power all across the world. We are having mass protests in France, in Germany, in Japan and, indeed, in every country in the world, people of scientific authority are drawing attention to the fact that we should go slow rather than rush into this, because we haven't solved some of the problems, particularly in coping with radioactive waste. And these are problems which pose some pretty dangerous threats to the future of the world and, indeed, to this planet.

We have men like Sir Brian Flowers, chairman of the commission which looked into nuclear power in Britain, who says that we should go slow. We have men like Dean Robert Uffen who is a vice-chairman of Hydro and Dean of Applied Science at Queen's University. He has, in the current issue of Science Forum, an article entitled: "Let's Go Slowly on the Nuclear Power Program Until We've Solved Waste Problems."

I want to be accurate, and I want to be totally fair. As part of the information which, under some pressure, was finally delivered to me this morning from Hydro, I have a copy of a letter which the Minister of Energy sought from Dr. Uffen. In that letter, he states that he still thinks we should proceed with the construction of Darlington as fast as possible; and he's definitely not advocating a moratorium on the construction of nuclear reactors in Ontario at the present time. His argument is that we should avoid getting into a commitment of a program that is too large, and his definition of a program that is not too large is a program that would contain Darlington.

The point I'm making is that there's a lot of confusion.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Include Darlington?

Mr. MacDonald: Sorry? That would include Darlington. Did I say that it would not include Darlington?

Ms. Gigantes: No, he said it right.

Mr. Foulds: He said it right, you heard it wrong, George.

Mr. MacDonald: What I said was his definition of a commitment to nuclear power that wasn't too large would include Darlington. Therefore, he is not arguing that we should go slow on Darlington at this present time. He doesn't really speak to the brown-out, black-out threat that was being used by Hydro and the government although, presumably, it's implicit in his comments.

Let me move from comments on the government's reasons why we should proceed immediately with Darlington to take a look at some of Hydro's reasons. I should not really separate them because they're Hydro's reasons which the government has also endorsed and taken as part of its whole approach to it.

The basic contention in Hydro is that Darlington was planned for prior to the passage of the Environmental Assessment Act. Therefore, Hydro—at least in reference to Darlington—isn't obligated to fulfill the requirements and the obligations of that Act.

It is true that the Darlington station was approved in principle in 1971. It is true that Ontario Hydro acquired the land for the Darlington generating plant between 1972 and 1975. It is true that Hydro completed its own assessment before the Environmental Assessment Act went into effect, and a copy of that assessment is contained in a volume which is readily available to those who are intensely interested. I draw attention to the fact that it is dated April, 1975. It is already now some 30 months old. Therefore, I suggest to you that the argument that we shouldn't proceed with an assessment, particularly when Hydro didn't move to fulfill the requirements of the Environmental Assessment Act throughout the last two years, is not only a shallow argument, it's not only a phoney argument, it's an argument that I'm surprised Hydro is putting forward. Hydro could have moved two years ago.

I want to go one step further. I'm not blaming Hydro so much as this government. This government should have insisted that Hydro move two years ago with an environmental assessment through the necessary public hearings. If they had done so, they would have had the result of that hearing now. They could have incorporated it in the revisions in their plans as they now move on to the site. So, as far as I'm concerned, the blame rests more on the government than it does on Hydro. I've got to be careful here and I can't name any names, but I am aware that two years ago there were voices high in the Ministry of the Environment urging that under no circumstances should Darlington be exempted from public hearings under the Environmental Assessment Act. Yet other people in the cabinet level, at the ministerial level, at the Hydro level, were willing and able to in effect veto that.

Mr. Warner: Shameful behaviour.

Mr. MacDonald: Even if Hydro is determined and even if the government is willing to accept that we proceed now with the Darlington plant and get into the initial stages of clearing the ground and proceeding with its erection; even if we are going to provide jobs and the minister can't use the argument that we are denying an opportunity for employment in an area where there's a significant measure of unemployment; even if all that is the case, there is still validity in my basic proposition at this stage that we should move towards public hearings for an environmental assessment. It may take a year or 15 months if it is proceeded with, with vigour and dispatch. At least 15 months from now we would have recommendations, and those could be considered in terms of any revision in the plans or the engineering, or the whole construction of the plant.

If the government did it now, it might have problems. If it doesn't have an environmental assessment and it doesn't anticipate some of those difficulties and they emerge after the plant is finished in 1983 and 1984 and 1985 and it gets into the generation of power, it's going to be not only more difficult, it may be almost impossible to do something about the implementation of it.

I simply can't understand why either Hydro or the government—particularly Hydro—isn't at the head of a list of people who are saying, "We must have an environmental assessment."

Surely after all the grief that we in Ontario had to deal with in the mining of uranium in Elliot Lake because of unanticipated problems for which there wasn't adequate research in advance; surely after all of the grief that we had to deal with in the refining of uranium in Port Hope because there wasn't sufficient knowledge and anticipation of the problems and now we are trying to grapple with it after the event; surely with all of the grief that Hydro has had with court cases and citizens' protests and public meetings and delays in bringing the power down from Bruce county into the golden horseshoe; surely after all of that, the organization that should be at the head of the list saying we must have an environmental assessment to make certain that every conceivable problem that might arise will be anticipated and dealt with in advance is Hydro. But Hydro is mindlessly opposed to it.

One has to be fair and, as chairman of the committee, say that Hydro has had to be subjected to an endless succession of public inquiries and recognition of public needs from the task force in the early years of this decade to the annual approach now to the Ontario Energy Board for review of their proposed rates for the next year, to the select committee and now to the Porter commission, to the prospect of another select committee, I just can't understand why in Hydro, they want as a sort of a last triumph to say that "in Darlington we don't need to live up to a law, even if it is the law in the province of Ontario."

They are the people who are going to suffer the consequences more than anybody else. Do you need to be very bright to anticipate after what has happened in all of the public protests with regard to the transmission lines, that for the next 10 years you are going to have an endless succession of citizens' groups equipped with lawyers who are going to fight this thing in court after court after court?

I am not saying that an environmental assessment would eliminate that totally but an environmental assessment would at least give an opportunity to look into it carefully, it would allow all citizens to get what satisfaction they can in terms of the information related to this respective development, at least it would reduce, minimize, conceivably even eliminate it.

[5:00]

I find the case for exempting the Darlington plant from an environmental assessment so preposterous, and I find the case for proceeding forthwith for a public hearing so conclusive, that I am going to let my case rest.

I am curious to know what arguments the other side will bring up. If perchance there is any time left at the end of the debate, which will be available to me when we have done our circuit around from party to party, I would be glad to avail myself of it. But I would like to hear some measure of reasoned argument as to why the government shouldn't proceed with the public hearings immediately.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: My colleague, the Minister of Energy, will review the factors which were considered by the government leading up to the decision to exempt the Darlington station from the Environmental Assessment Act. I intend to elaborate briefly this afternoon on the environmental safeguards provided the Darlington project, review the time-frame in which our planning decisions were made, and explain why we are convinced that we have adopted the proper course of action.

The Environmental Assessment Act is intended to apply in the conceptual and planning stages of a major proposal; and, by its terms, all that it measures must be presented as part of the assessment procedure. I must emphasize that the principal objective of the Environmental Assessment Act is to provide a comprehensive planning process which takes into account the social, economic, cultural, and natural environmental factors of major undertakings at the conceptual stage, at a time when alternatives, including the alternative of not proceeding, are still open to decision-makers.

In the case of the Darlington station, the government and Ontario Hydro had made significant decisions in the concept and planning for this station, in terms of the need for future electrical energy, the mode of generation to supply this need and the location of the station, well before the adoption of the Act by this House in July 1975, and the subsequent adoption of regulations in October 1976.

I am informed that the inclusion of the Darlington station under the Act would mean a delay of at least two years. This would mean a complete stop to the work involved in constructing the station. Preliminary work, such as site clearing, could not proceed while the assessment was in process, and as the member for York South suggested, since such a procedure would be totally at odds with the legal requirements of the Environmental Assessment Act.

Mr. Foulds: We would let you clear the site.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: In his news release of September 26, the member for York South recognizes the logic of the decision—I think he mentioned it again today—of the Porter commission to exclude Darlington from its consideration, since the commission's report will deal with the years beyond 1983.

While Darlington will not come on stream until about 1985, the commission has recognized that it requires years to plan and build such a station, and for that reason it has excluded the Darlington station from its review.

Mr. MacDonald: Did they exclude it, or did you step in and exclude it? The government excluded it, don't blame them.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Surely the same reasoning applies to the decision we have taken to exclude Darlington from the Environmental Assessment Act.

A recent letter which the hon. member for York South has mentioned, to the Ontario Hydro chairman from Dr. Robert Uffen, who is dean of science at Queen's University, makes it clear that it is essential that the Darlington station proceed as quickly as possible. In fact, Dr. Uffen states that Darlington and two more similar installations could be built before, in his opinion, Ontario Hydro would be committed to a large program of nuclear power.

While Dr. Uffen has expressed his concern about the need to develop adequate long-term waste disposal methods, he expresses the opinion that delay or moratorium now would solve nothing and might produce greater problems than the ones needing solution. However, while we have exempted Darlington from formal review under the Act, hon. members may be assured that the construction and operation of this power plant will be most carefully supervised under the application of the Ontario Water Resources Act and The Environmental Protection Act. The project will also be covered by the federal Fisheries Act and by the regulations set down by the Ministry of Natural Resources.

The whole purpose of these Acts and regulations is to guarantee the protection of the natural environment.

Let me review the planning process followed in the development of the Darlington proposal. As the hon. member for York South mentioned, in 1971 the Ontario cabinet approved the purchase by Hydro of the Darlington site. Two years later Ontario Hydro's long-range plan, of which Darlington was a part, was approved in principle by the cabinet and referred to the Ontario Energy Board for its review.

In January, 1974, the government approved and made public Ontario Hydro's public participation procedures for the siting of major generation and transmission facilities. These procedures were prefaced by an explicit statement in the front of this document to the effect that when the environmental assessment legislation eventually came into force, the procedure would be revised in accordance with the legislation.

Later that same year, in 1974, the Ontario Energy Board completed its review of Hydro's long-range plan and recommended to the government that the choice of fuel to be used at the Darlington station would be thoroughly reviewed by Hydro. This was completed by February, 1975, when Hydro notified the Minister of Energy of the conclusions of that review, with the choice being a nuclear fuel station.

The Minister of Energy at that time was satisfied with Hydro's analysis and conclusions. Hydro then proceeded with its public participation for a nuclear station in accordance with the procedures made public by the government a year and a half earlier.

Hydro had substantially completed its land acquisition by May, 1974. As the hon. members know, in July, 1975, the Act was approved by the Legislature. It took, however, another 15 months for the Act really to have any application.

The Ministry of the Environment, under a committee chaired by Dr. Chant of the University of Toronto, spent that period reviewing all activities of Ontario government ministries and agencies, including Hydro, in order to determine which activities should be subject to the procedures of the Act. At the conclusion of this major analysis, regulations and orders were passed by cabinet bringing the Act into force on October 20, 1976.

In my announcement at that time I explained why no decision was being made on the Darlington generating station. Let me read from that statement of October, 1976:

"Although Ontario Hydro's planning for the proposed Darlington nuclear generating station is well advanced, the government is not exempting this project from the provisions of the Act at this time. In November, 1976, Ontario Hydro is expected to submit a report on its environmental studies involving the Darlington project. Early in the new year a community-impact study will also be submitted. These studies will review potential impacts on the natural environment from the proposed development, and possible social and economic effects in local communities.

"The Ministry of Energy will release these reports to various interest groups, and the general public, and invite public comment on these impact studies. After the public has an opportunity to comment on this report the government will decide whether a formal public hearing should be ordered or whether the project should be exempted from the provisions of the Act."

As a result of this process, 13 letters were received from seven individuals and four associations—no, that's only 11 letters—over the three-month period of December 10, 1976, to March 30, 1977. Four individuals requested a formal public hearing; two others expressed concern for nuclear safety and one proposed harbour facilities to be added to the project.

Both the town of Newcastle and the region of Durham, the communities most affected, had originally requested that the proposal be placed under the Act. In March and June of this year, respectively, both municipalities by resolution of council withdrew their requests for an environmental assessment.

The Ministry of Energy advised me of the results of the public participation process and the decisions of the municipality. On the basis of his evaluation of the public's response and bearing in mind the need for, and timing of, additional generating capacity for the province, he recommended the Darlington generating station be exempt from the requirements of the Act.

I took the recommendation of the minister to cabinet, as required under section 30 of the Act, and a decision was made to exempt Darlington.

I have touched on these reasons briefly, and they have included the timing of the project, the environmental safeguards provided under existing legislation, and Ontario Hydro's program of public participation in environmental assessment.

With respect to nuclear safeguards, these are the exclusive responsibility of the federal Atomic Energy Control Board, and the Darlington project will have to meet all the rigid specifications of that board.

On irradiated fuel, the federal government is studying a report by Dr. Kenneth Hare on alternate methods to dispose of radioactive waste. International investigations are also actively under way with Canada's participation to find methods to ensure the safe containment of such waste. It is our understanding that storage of irradiated fuel at Darlington will be identical to that used at the two other stations, at Douglas and Pickering. That is, storage under large pools of water, which have proven a safe method, until long-term waste storage facilities are found.

In conclusion, I would like to make it clear to the hon. members that it is our intention that any future nuclear generating stations to be built by Ontario Hydro will meet the provisions of the Environmental Assessment Act. I am convinced that we have made a decision that will both protect the natural environment and—

Ms. Gigantes: We've heard that before.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I am convinced that we have made a decision which will both protect the natural environment and serve well the long-term interest of the people of this province.

Mr. Reed: We have heard a chronology of events from the Minister of the Environment, but the one thing he has failed to do is restate the very reasons why he decided to exempt this project from the terms of the Environmental Assessment Act, which he said to the press was the urgency of going ahead with this project.

I would like to deal for the few minutes I have this afternoon with this case for urgency. Periodically, editorials in the press and statements from various areas of the province speak of the case for urgency, and there is a word being used generally around the province we should talk about here today—it is the word brown-out. I really don't understand what the word means; whether we think everything is going as my leader once said, into sepia tone leaving no colours or what?

We should first of all understand what is meant by this word brown-out, which seems to throw fear into people. We know Hydro has engaged in deliberate brown-outs this past year in order to extend their facility and make it go further. They did one brown-out trial this summer. We know the effects of the brown-out. For those computers not equipped with voltage equalizing devices, it can throw them temporarily out of whack. That is the sum total of what a brown-out does. I think the people of Ontario should know that.

And with urgency being debated so continuously, I wonder if the people of Ontario know that up near Blind River this summer another small hydraulic power plant was destroyed at the behest of the Ministry of Natural Resources; taken out of service and simply wiped off the face of the earth. Granted, it produced a total of a half a megawatt of non-polluting renewable energy. So while you are talking urgency on the left hand, the right hand knoweth not what the other is doing.

Mr. Conway: Tory methodology.

Mr. Reed: And it is a grand example of Tory management.

Hon. B. Stephenson: That's idiotic, Julian. You know better than that.

Mr. Reed: I'd like to go into the urgency case a little more deeply. I checked with Ontario Hydro this afternoon to find out what the growth rate had been this year, what the expansion of the system had been thus far; the projection is four per cent. That should go on the record.

The point is, what about the alternatives and the business of urgency that comes up with the delay of the completion of this plant? Let me point out an amount of energy equivalent to a Darlington could be saved by an insulation program in Ontario at half the cost of the capitalization of the Darlington plant.

Mr. Conway: Broken promises. Broken promises.

Mr. Reed: And the figures to substantiate that I submit to the Minister of Energy are contained in his own publication called Turn on the Sun.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Great, eh? What do you think of that publication?

Mr. Reed: And if he will look at the efficiency of saving a megawatt of electricity, he will find that a megawatt can be saved for roughly half the cost of capitalizing the plant to make it.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Do you like that publication?

Ms. Gigantes: You shouldn't let them do you in, you know. You are on the right track.

Mr. Reed: Over 50 per cent of the energy produced by Ontario Hydro is used for the production of low grade heat. That is for temperatures of under 100 degrees Celsius. It is very interesting that in this particular area, the opportunity to provide alternatives is greatest. My friend in the NDP who made this resolution in the first place has spoken of the recommendations made by the select committee—the load management, all of the things that can be done.

[5:15]

If we take a mean average of consumption of electricity in the year, we find that we are really only using 50 per cent of Hydro's system at the present. That is why the select committee made the recommendations it did about load management, co-generation and all of the things designed to raise the efficiency, and hence the cost effectiveness, of Ontario Hydro.

We hope to have a select committee reconvened this fall to find out what Hydro has done. I submit that perhaps one of the institutional barriers to raising the efficiency of Hydro is the fact that it considers its mandate simply to meet the demand, but does not consider that in itself has the means of control of its own production, without affecting by one iota the standard of living of the people of the province of Ontario. The control is there through load management, through pricing incentives and all of the various things that the select committee discussed. So it can be done.

The option, then, because of the case of urgency, to exempt the Darlington plant from this legislation in my mind is utter nonsense. It doesn't add up. The only criterion the government seems to be using is simply recognizing a continuance of the old mandate to meet the original seven per cent per annum, reduced to six per cent through the efforts of the Treasurer of Ontario—and something concurred with by the select committee, incidentally.

But where is the effort being made for the alternatives? There are none. Nothing has been done to this date, with the exception of some token experimental work with solar panels by Ontario Hydro. Their criterion for experimenting with solar energy was not with a view to getting it on line, but to study the impact it would have on their own systems.

Ms. Gigantes: Don't forget the windmill.

Mr. Reed: Yes, we have a windmill too, don't we?

I should point out, too, the program inaugurated by US utilities, which are privately owned, privately funded which have to pay a dividend to their stockholders and pay taxes—things which Ontario Hydro never does. These utilities are lending money to their customers to insulate. And the reason why they are doing it is because it is darn good business. It's because they know that they can make a better return on the loan for that insulation—

Hon. B. Stephenson: At $119 a month they can afford to.

Mr. Reed:—they can make a better return on that loan for insulation—

Hon. B. Stephenson: At their hydro rates, you mean.

Mr. Reed:—than they can for capitalizing new machinery.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Just ask what their hydro rates are for a month.

Mr. Conway: Will the minister be a little less noisy?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Because I have an imagination, I suppose.

Mr. Reed: I would also like to point out that I consider this kind of exemption on a project of this magnitude to be a dangerous precedent.

If we use the case for urgency as the criterion for exempting—it's all right, I'll finish with the minister in a minute—projects of this nature, I wonder what will be next. The minister should listen to this. Garbage dumps have a degree of urgency from time to time as well.

Mr. Foulds: Don't look at the Minister of Labour like that when you use those terms.

Mr. Reed: What are you going to exempt next?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Not garbage dumps.

Mr. Reed: Are you going to exempt garbage dumps?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No.

Mr. Reed: You're not going to exempt garbage dumps. That's good because we've got one out in Milton that we don't want exempted.

Mr. Reed: It's a dangerous precedent and it's one that must be stopped here and now.

Ms. Bryden: In rising to support this very important resolution I would like to point out that this is more than a simple request for a public hearing under the Environmental Assessment Act. It is a resolution which bears on the very important question of how Ontario's energy needs are to be met in the next 10 or 20 years. This is because it relates to the largest nuclear development in Ontario and to one which will be the largest in the world. It is incredible that a project of this size and importance should not be subject to environmental assessment under the Act.

It is also a resolution which focuses on the effectiveness or ineffectiveness of the whole environmental assessment program of this government. Since the Environmental Assessment Act was proclaimed in October, 1976, at least 67 exemptions have been granted under section 30.

Ms. Gigantes: They have undermined their own legislation.

Ms. Bryden: Many are of very broad application, such as most of the activities of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission. Ontario Hydro alone has received the largest number of exemptions, larger than any other ministry or agency.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please, there are a number of private conversations which I believe are unnecessary.

Ms. Gigantes: It's all those Liberals, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Bryden: Seventeen exemptions for Ontario Hydro up to the end of July. The exemptions have been coming so thick and fast that the Act resembles a fish net rather than a shield. Their proliferation brings into questions the credibility of the government's avowed commitment to protection of the environment. It makes one wonder at the Minister of the Environment's statement when he was describing the objectives of the Act and said: "The public will receive full information on these projects and programs and will have the opportunity to participate in the planning process."

An hon. member: Hollow words.

Ms. Bryden: Certainly if the recent decision to exempt the Darlington nuclear project from the Act is not reversed one can only conclude that the Act is simply window-dressing.

It is interesting to note that the Darlington project was not included in the original list of Hydro projects exempted at the time the Act was proclaimed a year ago. The government gave as its reason the fact that Hydro was conducting its own environmental impact studies and community impact studies; that it would await these studies and would invite public comment on them before declining on whether to have a full public hearing under the Environmental Assessment Act.

I do not think that we can accept the principle that any studies conducted by an interested party, however well planned or executed, can substitute for an independent environmental assessment with public hearings, as provided for under the Act. The mere fact that some public input or comment was invited on the Hydro assessment does not validate that assessment as equivalent to public hearings conducted under the Act.

We must bear in mind that the province has already taken two big steps into the field of nuclear generation without public hearings or environmental assessment, because they were started before the Environmental Assessment Act was passed. It is quite conceivable that there are many things which can be learned from the experience of these two projects. This experience could be brought out at public hearings on the third project, now under contemplation, especially when the third project is going to be several times as large as the initial ones.

I question the minister's statement that work on the site could not proceed while the environment assessment is under way. We are not asking for a complete freeze on the project, or a complete deferral of work which will provide much-needed employment this winter and next summer. I do not see why the site work could not be exempted under section 30 while environment assessment hearings were held on the construction plans, so that we do not repeat the mistakes of the past and end up with a much more costly project, and also face the possibility of having to stop work in midstream with tremendous layoffs, similar perhaps to what happened in Sudbury, if we discover things in the future which could have been anticipated by proper hearings at the present time.

The government's arguments for the exemption have already been scotched by my colleague the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald).

Hon. B. Stephenson: Really?

Ms. Bryden: The argument that it might cost more if there is any delay—

Ms. Gigantes: MacDonald knows how to scotch.

Ms. Bryden: —can be made against any activity in an inflationary period.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Scotched? I thought they had been ginned-up by it.

Mr. MacDonald: Corn, corn, corn.

Ms. Bryden: But the costs of rushing ahead into mistakes can be much greater.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Oh, they were pretty rummy anyway.

Ms. Bryden: The real culprit, Mr. Speaker, for any costs of delay, is the government, which has already had a year to get the environmental assessment under way.

The crucial issue in this resolution is the future of the Environmental Assessment Act and the confidence of the people in that Act. Only by reversing its decision to bypass the Act can the government restore any faith in its commitment to protecting the health and safety of the people of Ontario, and the preservation of our environment.

Ms. Gigantes: The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Kerr) isn't even here.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, surely the issue in this regard is whether to proceed now with the construction of that plant or whether to delay that construction.

Mr. MacDonald: That isn't the issue.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: You have been ambivalent over there. As a matter of fact there is not one member in this House who had the intestinal fortitude to get up and say: "We will halt construction now."

Ms. Gigantes: Halt construction now.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: How hypocritical can you be to suggest that you take that position, and then to proceed with an environmental assessment?

Mr. Foulds: Halt construction now.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Can you imagine that? What those hon. members are saying—

Ms. Gigantes: You are going to be sorry.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —is to proceed with the construction of that plant and at the same time, concurrently with that construction, to have an environmental assessment.

Mr. MacDonald: Right, right.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: That makes a mockery, surely, of the whole procedure.

Mr. MacDonald: What does?

Ms. Gigantes: Have you seen the latest forecast?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: It makes a mockery of the whole procedure.

Mr. Warner: Resign, do us all a favour.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Surely the argument for proceeding with the construction now is to ensure the reliability of a secure supply of electrical energy in this province.

Mr. MacDonald: Sure.

Mr. Foulds: Dispense.

Mr. Reed: We told you how to do it.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Only with you.

Mr. Reed: We have given you the alternatives.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: It's important in view of the time of construction that the project commence immediately, which it has.

Mr. Breough: Leave out the big ones.

Ms. Gigantes: What about Madoc?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: If the delay is for one year—

Mr. Breough: Did Ontario Hydro write this speech for you?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: What about Madoc?

Hon. J. A. Taylor:—and you carry forward your completion date for the first reactor to 1986, that what you are doing is letting your reserve margin fall to 15 per cent, and the 15 per cent reserve margin is critical in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: What about getting your coal plants moving?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Anything less than that would certainly bring about—

Ms. Gigantes: Get your boiler straps together.

Hon. J. A. Taylor:—brown-outs or black-outs, as has been mentioned today.

If that construction is delayed for two years, and you carry forward the completion date of the first reactor from 1986 to 1987, then you reduce that margin of reserve further to eight per cent.

Ms. Gigantes: Have you seen the new forecasts?

Mr. Warner: Somebody help him turn the page.

Mr. Breough: What's the matter? Did your crayon break?

[5:30]

Hon. J. A. Taylor: The member for York South has indicated a number of reasons why he thought this should proceed. I would like to inform the House—

Mr. Breough: That would be a first.

Hon. J. A. Taylor:—that Ontario Hydro has been assessing all potential means for reducing load growth, including increased load management, intensified conservation, assigning a value for interconnections—

Mr. Foulds: Turn off the radiators in the lobbies.

Hon. J. A. Taylor:—and negotiating more interruptible consumer power contracts.

Ms. Gigantes: Because they were ordered to.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: As a matter of fact, I would expect that within a month or so a report in regard to those items will be tabled in this House.

Mr. Foulds: Bob Colby didn't write this speech, Robert Taylor did.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Notwithstanding that, it's important to proceed immediately.

Mr. Foulds: Which Taylor is giving this speech?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Nothing at all will be added in proceeding under the Environmental Assessment Act, and the members across the House do not understand that the Environmental Assessment Act is a process. It adds nothing to the standards or the criteria—

Mr. Mancini: What did you pass it for?

Mr. MacDonald: Why did you pass it then?

Hon. J. A. Taylor:—that are taken into consideration in the construction of a project in this province. They don't seem to understand that.

Ms. Gigantes: Why does it exist?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: It establishes no new standards. The standards are already enshrined in our legislation.

Mr. Warner: Why don't you take your skateboard and head for Lake Ontario?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Oh, that's very intelligent, very clever.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Right, it's just about your speed, Resign, David, resign. You're a disaster, David; resign.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: May I point out to the members across the House that the Atomic Energy Control Act and the Atomic Energy Control Board are involved in the construction of a nuclear plant right from the very beginning, that is in terms of the site itself. The members across the floor don't seem to understand that.

Mr. Foulds: How come you rely on that Liberal agency?

Ms. Gigantes: You had two years to do it.

Hon. B. Stephenson: The Act wasn't there two years ago.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: That site, that very site, has to be analysed by the board. In conjunction with that site, every piece of work that goes on on that site is under the strict scrutiny of the Atomic Energy Control Board and its regulations. You don't seem to understand that these criteria have been established.

It's more stringent that any criteria you could ever dream up and has resulted, in this province, in the development of nuclear power stations that are second to none in terms of reliability and safety; as a matter of fact they lead the world. I'm particularly proud of that fact in this province, even though you may ridicule that fact.

Mr. Lupusella: He is becoming an expert on nuclear power.

Ms. Gigantes: They're the same people who gave us Port Hope.

Mr. Warner: It was better when you suggested tabling your report.

Mr. Foulds: Dump all the waste in northern Ontario. How much waste will there be?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Furthermore, we have all the provincial legislation which the Minister of the Environment has mentioned that applies to this.

Ms. Gigantes: He has just exempted it.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: You still can't get through your thick heads across there the difference between form and substance. The Environmental Assessment Act is a form, the substance lies in other pieces of legislation which the Minister of the Environment has mentioned here today.

Mr. Foulds: Oh it's just a form. Is that a government policy?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Furthermore, look at the local municipal requirements. You don't seem to understand that the regional municipalities are involved very thoroughly in the planning process in terms of land-use planning, compatibility of development, the infrastructure of municipalities.

Ms. Gigantes: Hydro bought them off.

Mr. MacDonald: Why did you pass the Act?

Mr. Foulds: Hydro tries to snow the municipalities too, by waiting so long to give them information.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the member for Carleton East remain silent?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Don't be so arrogant in assuming that you have superior wisdom to the people who are elected locally, who have some say in connection with what development takes place within their municipality.

Mr. Foulds: It is not arrogant to assume that one is more intelligent than you.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Both the regional municipalities of Durham and the town of Newcastle have reviewed, studied and analysed this very thoroughly. You may not have any faith at all in local self-government, but I can tell you—

Mr. Breough: They bought them off.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —that they have looked at this in conjunction with their official plans, their zoning, their infrastructure in terms of services—whether it's water, sewer or roads—and they have given their sanction. They've endorsed this very project.

Ms. Gigantes: Shame on you.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: You want to eliminate all that; shame on you.

The timing of this project is important. It's not only important from a point of view of ensuring a secure supply of electric power, but it's also important in terms of ensuring the orderly employment of Hydro forces and other work forces in this province from one project to another.

Ms. Gigantes: You started two years ago.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: You don't seem to understand there's financial and economic planning involved in a work force such as Hydro employs in Ontario. You don't seem to understand Hydro is spending something like $1.5 billion a year in construction in this province of Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: Quit looking at your own member when you say that

Hon. J. A. Taylor: You would prompt a delay of that type of construction in order to satisfy a procedure which is not applicable in this case because of the history of the case starting in 1971.

Ms. Gigantes: What about Madoc?

Mr. Conway: Adam Beck couldn't have said it better.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: We have the Pickering B plant where workmen must come off and gradually come into the Darlington area. The Wesleyville station, of course, is proceeding.

Mr. Sargent: You are going to hell on roller skates.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: The Darlington station must proceed as well. It's important to keep that kind of skilled work force together, and it's important to the local community.

This project, Mr. Speaker, will cost in the neighbourhood of $3.9 billion when the work is completed early in 1988.

Mr. Makarchuk: By the time you are through, it will be twice that.

Mr. Breaugh: Eight by the time you are through.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Darlington now has 120 workers, which will increase steadily to 3,700 workers by 1984.

Mr. Conway: Enough to beat the member for Durham East the next time around.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: On-site wages and salaries in connection with this project will amount to $750 million; $145 million will accrue to local businessmen in the community.

Mr. MacDonald: You are setting up a strawman.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: The spending within Ontario will amount to $2.5 billion.

Mr. Conway: You are a hollow reed.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: And the member for York South should know, if anybody knows, if you spend that kind of money, you have a rule of thumb that for every industrial job created you will create another five jobs. That could mean a probable expansion to 18,000 jobs in connection with this type of project.

Mr. MacDonald: We are not arguing against that.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: What members opposite are suggesting is that we delay this particular work.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister's time has expired; the hon. member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. Kerrio: Where the water goes over.

Mr. Warner: Try the Welland Canal.

Mr. Sargent: Now you will hear the truth.

Mr. Speaker: I want to remind the hon. member the mover reserved four minutes and 19 seconds for a reply.

Mr. Kerrio: How much time is there then, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: About two minutes.

Mr. Kerrio: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. I am pleased to support the resolution by the member for York South.

I think it's a very good resolution. I would like to suggest to the Minister of Energy that if there is a panic situation existing, it's one of his own making. I have stood here many times and I have listened to the Premier (Mr. Davis) and I have listened to the Minister of Energy suggest we run the greatest power development in the world, and we do.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Do you want to delay it or don't you want to delay it?

Mr. Kerrio: But let me tell you something: In the province of Ontario, with the potential that exists here, if you didn't run the best and the most efficient power plants in the whole wide world, you should all hang your heads in shame.

Mr. Eaton: We do, we do.

Mr. Kerrio: And now I would like to suggest, to follow up the suggestion that is of your own making, that Ontario Hydro has created demands on this province out of all proportion to need, leading us to waste power to the degree we do. You insisted for many years, "Hydro is yours; use it," to the point you are still encouraging people in North Bay to heat with electric heat. The minister knows, sitting in his place there, that's not the way to go in this time of restraint, a time when we should be much more efficient than we are.

Mr. Reed: He's speaking the truth.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has one minute.

Mr. Kerrio: Electric heat is not the way to go, but as long as we have it to the degree we do, we should insist that we put in force one of the very platforms of that government on the other side, very efficient insulation. Insulation is still one of the most significant things we can do.

I would like to suggest to the minister right now that Hydro is not a sacred cow. If you want to put legislation across this floor to deal with everyone else in the province, you should submit yourself to the same kind of scrutiny, it shouldn't be any different.

Only a very few days ago, on this very floor, we suggested to you province-wide bargaining and you wanted to exclude Hydro. We have suggested in many other instances that we should never exclude any of the forces that work for the people of this province from any kind of legislation which everyone else in this province is subject to.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired. The balance of the time is for the use of the member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, in drawing this debate to a close, I just want to make two or three points. The argument has been advanced on the other side of the House we are trying to delay proceeding with this matter. There are two or three arguments that are contradictory. So let me take this one.

We are attempting to delay proceeding with this plant; that's going to deny jobs, that's going to deny all the multiplier effects throughout the community and the benefits to the community. Mr. Speaker, the point I made in a substantive conclusion of my initial comments was that even if you proceed with the building of your plant at the present time, there is no reason why you cannot go ahead with the environmental assessment.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: For what purpose, when you have your plan already laid out and approved?

Mr. MacDonald: Well just a minute. The Minister of the Environment shakes his head and says you can't do it. Why can't you do it? Is there anything in the Act that says that you can't do it?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Say the assessment board recommends against it?

Mr. MacDonald: Who did? The assessment board recommended against it?

Look, you are getting assists all over the lot. For two years you sat idly and didn't do anything about the assessment. You now tell us that you are having Dr. Chant or somebody else, try to find out over what area the Environmental Assessment Act should apply. You could have said, with the largest project that was going to come into the province of Ontario, that it would apply there. While he went ahead with his other study of the application of the Act you could have proceeded. Starting in 1975, you were guilty of the procrastination, you were guilty of the collusion to exempt this. To argue now that the assessment board says you can't go ahead with an assessment—

Hon. J. A. Taylor: You don't even know what it would accomplish.

Mr. MacDonald: —while the initial construction is going on, I suggest to you is just not a strong argument at all.

The minister also got up and challenged us, saying nobody here had the guts to get up and say, "Stop building it." We have suggested to you that until we get the facts we are not persuaded. We haven't been given the facts, in the light of the recommendations of the initial commission, that you really need that power for delivery in 1985.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Will you take it on your head to stop it?

Mr. MacDonald: As a matter of fact, when you take the information that was given to the House by the hon. member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. Reed), our growth in the last year has only been four per cent—

Hon. J. A. Taylor: And you know it, Donald.

Mr. MacDonald: I know what?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: You know what the first few months were, you have to look at the average.

Mr. MacDonald: There is plenty of evidence to suggest that the implementation of the recommendations of the select committee would have reduced the need for power in 1985; plus the further fact, which has been put in this House, that it costs twice as much to capitalize the production of a new megawatt as it does to save an existing megawatt through conservation plans, and things of that nature. All of that could have been done to reduce the requirement for rushing into it at the present time without an environmental assessment.

But I come back to my basic point; you could have had your environmental assessment, you are just making excuses. For the minister to get up over there and say that henceforth we are not going to exempt any new plants; what does that do to your whole argument that you have done everything to consult the local municipalities?

[5.45]

Ms. Gigantes: They've bought them off.

Mr. MacDonald: You consulted with them and you bought them off—

Mr. Warner: You have been bought off.

Mr. MacDonald: —to justify your going ahead.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: If you can't distinguish between the procedure and the substance—

Mr. MacDonald: I think the case is still conclusive, even though the noise may have befogged it, the case is still conclusive that we should proceed with public hearings immediately.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: You don't have the guts to say stop it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of questions before us and I would ask the attention of members as I place these matters before them.

I propose first to determine if the two matters be put to the House for a vote.

Sufficient members having objected by rising, a vote was not taken on Motion No. 7.

Sufficient members having objected by rising, a vote was not taken on Motion No. 8.

Mr. Conway: Well the turkeys are all in one bin.

Mr. S. Smith: Well Darcy, you can explain this the next time you are talking to the CMA. I'd like to hear you get your way out of this one.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The government House leader has some information for members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: At this time it's usual that we indicate the order of business for next week before the supper break.

I would like to mention that tomorrow morning, in view of a very important national event taking place in Quebec City starting tonight, which will get this country back in the right direction—

Mr. Peterson: Dump Joe.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We started with Manitoba.

Mr. Conway: Bob Coates is just what the country needs. Who is going to move his nomination?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Remember B.C.?

Hon. Mr. Welch: He is a short guy too, but let me tell you, he's a powerful man. Don't underestimate Joe Clark.

An hon. member: So was Napoleon.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. House leader kindly indicate what we might expect next week?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes. Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, because of that, I thought I should indicate to the House that there will be a number of cabinet ministers absent tomorrow.

Mr. S. Smith: Who would notice?

Hon. Mr. Welch: We felt in fairness, in order to avoid confusion tomorrow and to provide guidance for the preparation of questions, that we should indicate that to both opposition parties and provide them with a list of members of the executive council who will be here tomorrow for the question period.

Mr. Warner: Can't we choose?

Mr. Kerrio: Who is going to sit with Lorne?

Hon. Mr. Welch: So there will be some 14 or 15 members of the cabinet here tomorrow for the question period, and the opposition parties have been provided with a list of names of those members of the cabinet who will in fact be here tomorrow.

Mr. Conway: We want Frank.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Going to next week and the usual committee structure as it's now understood, I might simply indicate that on Tuesday, being legislation day, we serve notice that the following bills, time permitting, will be called: Bills 40, 77, 81, 72, 73, 25, 84, 85, 88, and 91.

An hon. member: In that order?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, hopefully. We have agreed we are going to meet only in the afternoon on Wednesday, and on that afternoon we would do estimates in the House. By that time we should be ready to carry on with the estimates of the Attorney General.

Thursday's business will be in the morning, and we will do the two private members' bills standing in the names of the members for Cochrane South (Mr. Pope) and Essex South (Mr. Mancini), with the bell at 1:45 p.m.

Mr. Warner: Are you going to have a free vote on it?

Mr. Cassidy: Are you going to block the vote again?

Hon. Mr. Welch: There is no House on Friday.

Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to respond to any questions there might be, but that would be the order of business for next week.

Mr. Foulds: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like you to take it under consideration as to whether, when the new provisional order 36(f) about 20 members standing in their place is in effect, the old standing order 81 also applies; that is, if five members request a recorded vote, such a recorded vote requested by those objectors should take place? I would like you to take that under advisement.

Mr. Speaker: It is my understanding of the rule that you don't take a recorded vote unless there is a division; and there was no division. It wasn't even allowed to be put to the House. It wasn't even being put to the House.

Hon. Mr. Welch: There would have to be a division first.

Mrs. Campbell: They stifled the vote. Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Yorkview want to use the time up until 6 o'clock; or is it the wish of the House that I call it 6 o'clock?

Mr. Young: Call it 6 o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The House recessed at 5:53 p.m.

Answer to a question was tabled as follows:

29. Mr. McEwen—Inquiry of the ministry: Will the minister indicate how much the Urban Transportation Development Corporation paid for its test track site near Kingston? Furthermore, what amount of extra money was expended on options for other sites? In addition, will the minister please advise of the cost of site adjustments and, specifically, the total cost of earth removal? [Tabled October 20, 1977.]

Answer by the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow).

The purchase price of 480 acres of land for the Ernestown site was $430,500 plus $5,900 in legal fees. Extra money expended on options for other sites amounted to $5,000 for each of two 150 acre sites in the township of Kingston in Frontenac county.

The cost of earth removal for the guideway is estimated at 40,000 cubic yards at $1.45 per yard, or $58,000.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1977

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would like to inform the members of the House that the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Dukszta) has withdrawn his request under standing order 28(a).

HIGHWAY SAFETY SELECT COMMITTEE REPORT

Consideration of the October 17, 1977, report of the select committee on highway safety.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before the House rose at 6 o'clock, the hon. member for Yorkview had been recognized to speak.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, the final report of the select committee on highway safety was tabled with the Clerk on September 20 of this year. The committee was appointed back in May 1976. Its interim report was tabled in November and was discussed here in this House subsequent to that time.

During 1977 the committee had a very full schedule of meetings and investigations. We had experts in their field from pretty well across the continent and around the world. We had the advantage of a great deal of wisdom, not only on the part of committee members but on the part of these experts who came to us and gave us of their time and wisdom, and this was very much appreciated.

The problem we faced in the committee of course, was that here in Ontario we have been killing 1,500 to 1,800 people a year—last year, we think because of the seatbelts and the lower speed limits, it was likely something over 1,200; so that is an advantage—and we are maiming and injuring over 85,000 a year.

The total cost to society here is something like $500 million every year because of the mayhem on our roads. Our job was to recommend how this kind of damage might be mitigated—how we could cut the accident rate, the death rate, the injury rate and the property damage rate.

As we started our work we realized, as all of us do, that there is no way that we can eliminate accidents on the road. People are subject to error and split-second error is all too prevalent in the accident situation. Then, of course, we have mechanical failures as far as vehicles and control equipment are concerned. We realized we are never going to cut that accident rate by 100 per cent. But we felt if we can cut it by something—five, 10, 15, 20 per cent—the payoff is going to be very large.

We also recognized as we started there are very strong vested interests against the work we were trying to do—an industry which is more interested in selling cars than in safety; more interested in gadgets than in eliminating the kind of death-and injury-producing surfaces on their vehicles, which we saw all too often earlier on.

There are also the interests concerned with alcohol. They are determined they are going to brainwash our people from the time they begin to watch television and read newspapers, in spite of the fact that we do know now that the absolute consumption of alcohol in a society bears a direct relationship to the highway toll—death, injury, property damage. And we know that ultimately the only way we're going to solve this problem is by getting down the total consumption.

Then we have the parts manufacturers—the Fuzzbuster people and others—who are more interested in sales and in preserving their own particular interests, whether safety is served thereby or not.

Mr. Conway: Easy on former Tory candidates.

Mr. Young: Not the candidate—one of his family I understand.

For many years the design of motor vehicles was left entirely to the industry and, as I said, their concern was sales. We had little appreciation, I think, of the connection between accidents and driver training, the roadside hazards and such features as alcohol. We didn't worry too much about these things and we seem to take for granted that the increasing death and injury rate was something which we couldn't do much about—it was sort of an act of God.

But then by the mid-Sixties the government, pressured by people such as Nader and others, began to take action. I'd like to put the figures in Hansard, that after governments had begun to lay down safety standards and specifications, the post-1967 cars chalked up 23 per cent fewer occupant deaths than the cars between 1964 and 1967. Those same post-1967 cars chalked up 39 per cent fewer occupant deaths than the cars built previous to 1964.

Then at the same time governments began to think in terms of what the rigid poles were doing alongside the road, what the trees were doing in close to the pavement, what the abutments along the bridges were doing. We began to think in terms of break-away poles, cleaning out and making smooth that area adjacent to the pavement and eliminating the roadside hazards. All those things helped. But the toll is still too high and because it was too high, this committee was appointed. We believed then and still believe that the total can be reduced still more.

We made 52 recommendations designed to do three things: Prevent the accident toll on the highway; cut down the results of those accidents; and set up some sort of an on-going research program to bring all the knowledge that we have accumulated through technology, coupled with government action, to bear, to continue to cut down on this toll.

Certain rather startling facts emerged. I'm only going to mention 10 of them, but they were to us somewhat revealing.

One, driver training is completely inadequate. The youngster who learns to drive from his uncle or brother is just as good a driver, it seems, and has the same accident record, as youngsters who learn through a high school driving course or through commercial driver training. There is no proof we could find that one is better than the other. So there is some shortage there.

Second, good drivers cause most of the accidents. If we took the advice of some people who say, "Plant these guys who are caught drinking and driving or in accidents in jail and you'll solve the problem," that just does not turn out to be the case. There is a different seven per cent or eight per cent of the drivers causing the accidents every year. You eliminate those seven per cent or eight per cent one year and a new group emerges the next year.

Up to one-half the drivers who have their licences suspended still drive. They're a problem for police and for society.

Trucks take twice the distance to stop than the ordinary motor car. It's something to give us pause when we see a truck barrelling down the highway just behind us and we run into a crisis situation.

Fifty-two per cent of all driver deaths are alcohol-related. Impaired 18- to 19-year-olds are 70 times more apt to die in accidents than the non-impaired average driver. The risk of collision for an impaired 16- to 17-year-old is 165 times as great as for a non-impaired average driver.

By far, the time of highest risk of accident, death or injury is from Friday afternoon, about dark, until early Sunday morning.

A drinking driver in Ontario has one chance in 2,000 of being caught by the police.

The last one I want to mention: We're 100 breathalysers short for effective breathalyser enforcement in the province of Ontario.

These are just a few of the items that we faced during our study. Just a few, but rather startling. So, our recommendations were, we hope, practical. To meet some of these problems and many others. While we didn't try to cost out the recommendations we made, we had a sort of intestinal feeling that they are cost-effective and that they're worthy of very serious consideration by government.

We started with the driver, because of the items that I have mentioned. We made recommendations that the tests given to the driver at government level ought to be upgraded considerably; that the courses ought to be very much upgraded and much more safety-oriented; that the teachers ought to become professionals, that they ought to be very much more effective in their work—and that means far more training. We believe that the community colleges ought to play a very strong part in this whole process. We think that this process of strengthening the whole driver-training process ought to start now. It's a long-term thing but we ought to get started at it.

We recommended that a photograph should be placed on the driver's licence, in order to prevent abuse; that a probationary licence for two years ought to be issued and the new driver should earn his right to drive, over those two years. He should be carefully supervised, sympathetically but toughly, so that by the end of the two years we would hope he'd emerge a far better driver than the average driver today at the end of that period of time.

We also recommended that the older driver, after 50, should have a medical certificate signed by a physician.

Mr. Nixon: That is old.

Mr. Young: This is one of the rather tough ones on the members of this House, perhaps, but we have to recognize right now that the medical profession is obligated, when they find something in the health of one of their patients, to let the ministry know if he's dangerous and apt to drop dead behind the wheel at some time in the future. The medical profession admitted that they feel that they can't blow the whistle on a friend or an old patient; many of them won't do this. So the recommendation came from the committee that, as a matter of routine, the doctors could sign a certificate of this kind. This ought to be done every three years after 50.

At the same time, we recommended special licences for people who are handicapped who might not drive at night or on the freeways and yet might want to go to church or to shop or to do certain errands within the limits of their capabilities.

[8:15]

Enforcement of the law, of course, presents a very great problem. So many people came before us and said; "All we have to do is let the police crack down on these beggars who break the law." The police tell us that's not so simple. There are never enough policemen, never enough black and white cars, never enough equipment. As I mentioned, the breathalysers are over 100 short in this province. Then there's a divided jurisdiction in this province as far as enforcement is concerned. The basic problem is the fact that law enforcement ought to be a citizen responsibility, not just a police responsibility, and, by and large, I suppose, most citizens do feel a sense of social responsibility. But the law-breaker—and there are those in our society, unfortunately—doesn't seem to respond too much to this business of punishment.

Every jurisdiction we visited or heard from, seemed to have the same experience—tough punishment did not solve the problem. What was more important was a feeling that apprehension was pretty certain; a high expectation of apprehension.

A lot of people have the Fuzzbuster syndrome. They want to live just outside the law but they don't want to get caught. In the case of the Fuzzbuster owner, he's willing to spend a lot of dollars in order to have a machine which will allow him to cruise along just outside the law but will prevent him being caught in that law-breaking activity. There are people who feel that way but, by and large, I think most people are law-abiding and very concerned over this whole matter.

The police function, as far as we are concerned, is to prevent accidents, not to collect fines, not to produce revenue, not to apprehend after the fact, although that's part of the function. But that's not their main function, and as far as safety is concerned, we want to see them preventing accidents.

The committee believes the police can be more effective in improving traffic safety; more effective than they are now. It determined that apprehending violators is an effective safety measure only if the violations are likely to contribute to accidents. The committee suggested that to influence driver behaviour effectively, the police must, in addition to apprehending violators, be a visible presence on the road, focusing their efforts on selected accident-prone locations.

The committee recommends a careful evaluation of current enforcement practices aimed at road safety; adequate equipping of police forces to enforce current laws and in particular to enforce current laws relating to drinking drivers; providing legislation so that remote surveillance cameras working around the clock at accident-prone locations can be utilized; and banning such devices as the Fuzzbusters, designed primarily to allow drivers to speed with impunity.

As well, the committee recommends one government enforcement agency have the responsibility for co-ordinating the traffic law enforcement system.

We also recommend we tighten up on the points system, specifically that the violation date from the time of the incident, not from the time of the conviction in court. This means the person who deliberately delays court appearances so that some of his earlier points might drop off, thereby evading the full impact of his 15 points, will be prevented from doing this and the penalty will be exacted.

We also agree with the Attorney General's suggestion the police should no longer have to chase offenders endlessly, but that at the time of the issuing of licence plates, there be a sort of balancing of the books. Anybody who has any outstanding fines or offences which he has not squared up with the authorities, will not be issued plates until that is done. With the computer age, this becomes possible.

As far as alcohol-related offences are concerned, this is an extremely vexing problem and one with which the committee wrestled for a long time. On one or two occasions, I think some of the committee members did some experimentation here. Ultimately, it's social attitudes which count.

Mr. Conway: What was that all about? I don't believe it.

Mr. Young: The car is here to stay. Alcohol is also likely here to stay.

Mr. Bounsall: No, we will wipe that out.

Mr. Young: One of the members of the committee says we will wipe that out. Good luck to him.

Mr. Conway: So does the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziemba).

Mr. Duksza: Exactly. I speak for him as a member of my party.

Mr. Young: The member for High Park-Swansea is not here, but he is doing his best.

Mr. Conway: A contradiction.

Mr. Young: The fact is, as I pointed out before, that accident rates vary with the actual consumption of alcohol, the total consumption of alcohol in any society. It is very difficult for us to combine the two and not expect to pay the price.

What the committee did find out was that experiments have been conducted around the world, and some of them are going on right here in Ontario, in the segregation of offenders. The actual large part of the damage is being done by social drinkers who just refuse to face the fact that two or three drinks makes them dangerous on the highway, even a 0.04 blood test—and our law says 0.08—makes them dangerous. He thinks he's safe and therein lies the danger.

We have recommended that devices be worked out, and they are now known, so that the social drinker can be segregated and perhaps given a course on the danger he is running, not only to himself but to others, and that the habitual drinker, the one who just can't help himself, be weeded out and be given treatment. There is some recorded success in this field in some jurisdictions. We think that's worth doing here in the province of Ontario.

Young people are a particular problem in this field. In 1967, five per cent of the alcohol-related accidents involved young people aged 16 to 20. In 1971, we lowered the drinking age to 18. By 1973, that five per cent had become 15 per cent. By 1975, 37.5 per cent of alcohol-related accidents were among young people of 16 to 20. In other words, in those eight years the percentage has gone up from five to 37 per cent. That was a thing which rather startled the committee and I think startles all those who see those figures.

In facing that problem, we realized that not only must there be a stepped up educational process, right from the beginning of the school system, but we should be banning, as soon as possible, the lifestyle ads which equate alcohol with good times, in our television commercials particularly, that are brainwashing, as I pointed out, our young people every time they start watching television. We also recommended that the drinking age be raised, to 19 years as Saskatchewan did a year ago, and as Maine did just recently—only Maine made it 20 instead of 19. Other jurisdictions are wrestling with this problem and are making recommendations.

We think and recommend that the breathalyser strength be brought up to date in the province of Ontario and that extra breathalysers be bought. The minister pointed out the other day that there is some problem in training people to do this job but, believe me, with a bit of money and bit of urgency, this training can be done rather quickly. The machines are available.

In addition to that, we are recommending the ALERT machine, a new device which the policeman can use himself, which shows whether the blood alcohol count is up anywhere from zero to 0.1—and it is at 0.1 that convictions generally take place. We recommend that the policeman who has that machine and who finds out that the driver is in that dangerous situation can rule him off the road, cancel his licence for 24 hours. In other words, the design of this recommendation is to prevent the accident happening.

This is already being done in Alberta, rather successfully, we think it ought to be done here. We think also that there should be a continuous re-evaluation of all the techniques that are being used in this field; because it seems that we have to have new techniques, and new devices, constantly to reinforce the old ones so that people realize the dangers that are involved.

When we looked at the vehicle, we realized that here, perhaps, was the greatest payoff in the saving of life and the cutting down on accidents. It's not easy to change human behaviour but it is easy to change the configuration of a machine.

We realized that the setting of safety standards is largely a federal matter, but Ontario does have its own representatives on the committees dealing with safety at the federal level. Our voice, particularly where we manufacture almost all the motor cars in the country, should be a strong one there and should be heard.

We believe that things like amber turn lights should be instituted and we're recommending this; that rear window defrosters ought to be installed in Ontario cars; that bumpers be of uniform height, with soft, resilient surfaces, which don't create the kind of damage that present day bumpers are designed to create; we think that can be changed. We think, too, that a very close watch should be kept on the new, experimental safety vehicles now being developed at Calspan in Buffalo, in California and in other parts of the world.

There is some very significant work going on in the whole safety field, redesigning vehicles, particularly the small vehicles which are now coming on the assembly line. We think we ought to keep a close watch there and do a real job.

Seatbelts—we believe they should be retained and that the enforcement of their use ought to be stepped up. The seatbelts and the lower speed limit have already saved a great many lives—it looks to be around 300 or so in the province of Ontario during the past year—that, combined with perhaps other features. But we think this can be improved, because about half our people don't take the trouble to buckle up, so there should be stricter enforcement.

But along with that we are recommending that passive restraint systems be installed in all Ontario cars. The passive restraint system can be either an air bag system, which is there waiting; the sensors blow them up in one-twentyfifth of a second, and then deflate just as quickly to prevent any kind of backlash—that has saved lives—or it might be seatbelts which fasten automatically, as in the Volkswagen Rabbit, as the doors are closed. Either system, as far as we're concerned, will save a great many lives in Ontario.

We also recommend that the inspection service, which is at present doing a good job in Ontario, be stepped up. As a beginning all cars which sustain $800 damage in an accident, should be inspected and all cars five years old or more should have an annual inspection. We think this is just a start. As the system is put in place then it might be dropped back to four, three or two years, whatever government at the time finds adequate.

School buses: We make this recommendation: We are concerned that school boards are making critical safety decisions on the basis of very limited and incomplete information. We recommend that the government gather, evaluate and disseminate information on the equipment, safety features and operation of school buses to local boards and that all vehicles under contract to school boards—that is, the smaller ones below the bus level —and used for transportation of school children, be given a safety inspection by a licensed mechanic every six months.

School buses are fairly safe. Their record is good, but the committee believes that more can be done. We make a bow to local autonomy as far as the local school board is concerned; we did not feel that at this point we should begin to set mandatory safety standards at the provincial level.

As far as trucks are concerned, the committee recommended establishment of a set of regulations for the loading and operation of all trucks driving in Ontario, and that establishment of a special licence to all owners of doubles be instituted. As well, the committee recommended that the United States 121 brake standard for trucks be adopted. The brake standard, which is now in effect in the United States but not yet adopted in Canada, means that the stopping distance of trucks comes down somewhere near the stopping distance of the average motor vehicle. We believe this is an improvement which should be undertaken.

The current 65-foot length limit for trucks travelling in Ontario should be maintained, we believe. National regulations for the transportation and labelling of hazardous loads should be introduced, and Ontario's current dump truck inspection program should be extended on a phased basis to all commercial carriers.

The committee was rather handicapped because of certain events which took place. We were under rather great pressure because during the late winter it was felt an election was more or less imminent and so our work was a bit rushed. Then, when the election did take place and interrupted the job, our staff had to find work in other places. So again we were handicapped. But when the committee was reconstituted, we felt that our main job was to carry through the work we had already done and that our report should be brought together. As a result, some of the safety features of trucking were not touched, and I would hope that the government will give that careful consideration, underriding the back of trucks particularly and other features of that kind.

As far as roads are concerned, the committee felt that Ontario is doing a pretty good job—one of the best jobs, I think, of any jurisdiction anywhere. But there are things which can be done. We felt the speed limit as currently established should be maintained; one or two of our committee members were a bit unhappy with that, but the fact is that that is our recommendation.

There is also growing use of electronics in the field of warning motorists, particularly in the wintertime, of hazardous conditions ahead. We felt that should be examined and looked into by government.

We also saw a tool that is in use in three or four places in Ontario; it's a power tool that can be used by firemen or police. It can rip a motor car apart very quickly, because of its very great mechanical perfection, and can get people out of a car quickly when they are trapped inside the vehicle. That is a matter which we think ought to have very careful consideration by governments everywhere, because with crowbars it may often take an hour, two hours or three hours to get a person out and by that time it is too late from him to be rescued alive.

One of the very important matters which we felt needs to be done is a step-up of the administrative and research program in the province. The committee concerned itself with a means of establishing a point of focus within the provincial government for road safety and ensuring that the benefits of research are fully exploited. The committee therefore recommends that a road safety co-ordinator be appointed to develop and co-ordinate the overall provincial road safety program and make recommendations to ensure that the province is kept aware of promising safety developments around the world. Certainly, research is a matter which should be undertaken centrally by the federal administration—the main research—although provinces can assist wherever they can and in their own particular jurisdictions. But it is essential that research be ongoing and intensive. That may take money but we feel it is important.

These are the recommendations which the committee made. You might ask what is going to be the cost. As I said a few minutes ago, we didn't try to cost all these recommendations. But a great many of them can be done with little or no cost and they should be undertaken almost immediately.

I might list them but I don't want to take the time to do that because others want to speak in this debate. But right now, the accident toll in the province of Ontario is costing us more than $500 million. Medical and hospital bills, to say nothing of the suffering, the care of families of people who are maimed and killed, it's a horrendous total cost which is now being borne by this province. That must be kept in mind when we talk about the cost of implementing these recommendations. We must realize that a 10 per cent reduction in accidents would save this province at least $50 million—and I am being conservative, if I can use that word, in this estimate.

Mr. Bradley: Is it all right to use that word?

Mr. Young: Well, perhaps what we need is a social budget. This country last year produced something like $185 billion gross national product. That's a lot of wealth. Surely there is something there that we can put into this kind of accident prevention program in order to get out of it, on the other side, the social benefits to human life, to property, to welfare, the diminution of suffering. Perhaps we should balance these things off a little bit more.

Which ones of these are most cost-effective in our recommendations? We didn't even try to assess that. But I want to pass on something that the Swedes said to us when we were over there. They said when we started to ask them, "Don't ask us which one of these measures we are taking is going to save 10 per cent in accidents, another one five per cent and another one two per cent. Don't ask us that. We are not even interested in that. What we believe is that all these things are good. And what we are doing is putting before our people a total package. And that total package will save a lot of lives and a lot of suffering and a lot of property." And they are proving it. I think that is the attitude we ought to take. All these recommendations are good.

I urge upon this House and upon this government that it seriously look at these recommendations and the report which backs them up and that we see in legislation at the earliest possible moment these steps which can be taken and which must be taken if our social budget is going to be balanced.

In closing, I want to say a word of appreciation, as the chairman of the committee, to the members of the committee. They did an extremely effective job. They were there for almost all meetings. The attendance was very very high. Two members of the committee, William Ferrier and Phil Givens, served for most of the committee's term but were unable to complete the final few weeks for reasons which we all understand. The member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Norton) was also a member of our committee for a short period of time and we appreciated the input which he gave to us during his term.

Mr. Nixon: He is even here tonight to listen to the debate.

Mr. Young: I want to read to members also a statement which I made at the beginning of the report, and I read it word for word:

"The committee highly commends the work and dedication of its staff. Alan Schwartz, brilliant counsel; Jim Fisher, a skilled consultant; Arna Crocker, tireless research assistant; and Andy Richardson, meticulous committee secretary. All worked beyond the call of duty on a project in which they all believed.

"The Ministry of Transportation and Communications, as well as other agencies of both provincial and federal governments, gave full co-operation. Their help was deeply appreciated. Harvey Mosher of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications staff was made available for full-time liaison work with the committee.

"Expert witnesses from Canada, United States and Europe gave unstintingly of their wisdom and expertise." And this I want to underline and bring to the House's attention. "Their deep concern for positive action towards greater road safety is reflected by the fact that, while they were paid out of pocket expenses, not one of them asked for consulting fees. For this generosity as well as their time and advice the committee is extremely grateful."

We have tabled a report with the Legislature. We're looking forward with great anticipation to the legislation that will emerge from this report.

Mr. Lane: In my role as parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) and as the member for Algoma-Manitoulin, which has suffered more than its share of automobile accidents, I am pleased to receive the report from the select committee on highway safety. The balanced and clearly presented report reflects the committee's most thorough investigations.

Highway safety is a broad issue that crosses many jurisdictional boundaries. The committee's report reflects this, touching upon many governmental responsibilities. Consultation among several responsible cabinet ministers will be required in developing detailed responses to the report. However, the final responsibility for safety on the highway system lies with the Minister of Transportation and Communications as the select committee recognizes. He will act as spokesman on the government's response to the report. He will be giving his views in the future. I was asked to convey to the House tonight the minister's regrets that he cannot be with you at this time.

Interjections.

Mr. Lane: I would like quickly to go through the recommendations to indicate my initial reaction and views as to the responsibilities. Since resources are limited it is necessary to approach new initiatives in order of priority.

I'll deal first with driver training. In the area of driver training there are clearly joint ministerial responsibilities. There is an inter-ministerial task force of MTC and the Ministry of Education, with broad terms of reference to develop and evaluate all facets of road user education. The task force is currently developing education materials on drinking-driving for young people. This was seen as the task force's first priority and, I think, the select committee will concur. MTC will continue its support of police agencies and schools and safety education for young road users. I believe that task force was set up early in 1976.

MTC has already begun to study the licensing of driver schools and develop up-graded personal qualifications for instructors. Better training standards for instructors and new training facilities will be taken up with the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Mr. Parrott).

We have been looking for ways to encourage training for new motorcyclists. There is now a learner's permit for motorcyclists and the ministry tried out a new, much tougher test for new riders, in co-operation with Transport Canada, this past summer.

We see driver education and road user education in general as a high priority area and will seek ways to accelerate development.

Next, we come to testing and licensing. In the testing and licensing area MTC is studying the feasibility of the first recommendation—that is, making the merit points retro-active to the time of the offence.

[8:45]

Second, the photo on the licence is already under development.

Third, the recommended probationary licence for new drivers is close to our own thinking. This recommendation will be given careful study even in preparation of the government's response. Before implementation, we will have to finalize resource implications for driver control, which may receive increased demands.

The fourth recommendation in testing and licensing suggests a medical certificate for renewal of a driver's licence after the 50th birthday. This requires study as to potential benefits and the possibility of creating substantial costs for the health care system. The practical implications of this recommendation, in terms of benefits derived, inconvenience to the public and cost of administration, give us cause for concern.

I might add here, for the benefit of the members, that I have been 50 years old for several years. I drive 40,000 miles a year and, as a matter of fact, I have more than a million miles of safe driving to my credit. I would be a little upset if I had been asked to have a medical all these years that I have been 50. Personally, I would be a little upset with that one myself. What somebody else may have to say about it is something different.

Mr. Mackenzie: Talk to my grandfather.

Mr. Lane: That's fine.

I suggest that the fifth recommendation, eye examinations for drivers over 70, is looked upon with favour. The ministry is considering restricted licences for some older drivers for implementation at an early date.

The committee's views on testing and licensing generally seem slightly less in line with our own thinking than was the case in the previous area. We have some concerns that are not reflected in the report. As stated earlier, we have some reservations about the proposed medical certificate for drivers over age 50.

The impaired driver: There is an inter-ministerial task force comprising officials of the Ministries of Health, the Attorney General, Transportation and Communications, the Solicitor General and Education. This task force will be considering the government's response to the recommendations in this area. I believe this task force was set up in September 1977.

The last recommendation in this area stresses the importance of the evaluation of drinking-driving countermeasure programs. We cannot stress enough the need for orderly development and evaluation of programs in this area, where the stakes are high and the results so difficult to achieve.

The impaired driver is a high-priority safety area. However, it will take a great deal of work to resolve the basic social questions involved and to develop effective technologies for solving the various problems in this area.

The enforcement system: A number of recommendations on the enforcement system have practical implications for the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, but enforcement activities are the responsibility of the Solicitor General (Mr. MacBeth) and the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry). The Minister of Transportation and Communications will delegate to these ministers the responsibility for responding directly to these recommendations.

The automobile: The first recommendation in the automobile section is that the police should increase enforcement of the current seatbelt legislation. As stated, this is a police responsibility; however, we see increasing seatbelt use as a broader responsibility, and the government has already established a task force under MTC leadership to initiate steps to further seatbelt use.

New vehicle standards are a federal responsibility. MTC will continue to consult with and advise the responsible authorities in the development of new standards. After-market vehicle equipment is a provincial responsibility, and preventing the sale and installation of unapproved equipment will be thoroughly studied. One thing that comes under this section that is still a responsibility of the federal government is the seat for a baby. Most other kinds of that type of equipment are the responsibility of the provincial government.

The proposed provincial standards for new vehicles would represent a major departure, with serious implications for manufacturers and consumers and with questionable potential benefits. I would not see as likely provincial action on this recommendation.

We think Ontario has a very efficient inspection system for passenger cars but, in the light of the committee's recommendation, we will be re-examining the benefits and the cost of extending this program. Generally, we see the automobile as a somewhat lower priority area for provincial action. Speaking from experience—I have been in the insurance business for over 22 years. We have always insured automobiles and we have had a lot of experience with accidents and the cause of them. The little saying that goes with the business is: "It's not the nut that holds the car together, it's the nut who holds the wheel who causes the accident."

The school bus: The recommendation that the ministry provide information on school bus safety and equipment to boards is well taken. It happens in an informal way now but making the process more formal and systematic will be explored. A new and more rigorous system of inspection for school buses has been prepared and is nearly ready for implementation. This new system will meet the requirements suggested in the select committee's recommendation.

The truck: The first recommendation on trucks suggests reflective material on the rear of trucks over 18,000 pounds. We have been more concerned with the question of under-ride protection on the rear of trucks, and this is currently being examined by ministry officials. Part of this would be a barrier underneath a truck to keep the car from going underneath it and cutting off the top of the car and driver, as has sometimes been the case in accidents.

The second and third recommendation in this area suggests the codification of the best industry safety practices for maintenance, driver control and loading of trucks. MTC has been working on regulatory improvements of this sort in the trucking industry. There is also a major research study under way on the stability of combination vehicles.

The adoption of the 121 brake standard for trucks is a complex technical issue. We will continue to consult with the responsible federal authorities.

MTC has been studying the revision of the 65-foot length limit for trucks. I note that the chairman of the select committee has indicated that he sees some flexibility in this recommendation. MTC is still developing evidence and information on which we will base the final decision. The minister will be reporting on this matter later.

The minister has been pressing the federal government to take action on the regulation of hazardous loads. In the meantime, we are moving to introduce regulations that would apply within Ontario.

We have recently made substantial improvements in the inspection system for commercial vehicles. We will look closely at the costs and benefits of the committee's recommendation to extend to all trucks the periodic inspection now carried out on dump trucks.

The road: If I may speak for a moment on behalf of the minister and ministry officials, I would like to acknowledge and express appreciation of the committee's tribute to the ministry's efforts to create a safe and efficient highway system. MTC will consider in detail the committee's recommendation on stop signs at railway grade crossings. We will be passing a recommendation on reflectorization of rail car sides to Transport Canada which has done research on grade crossing accidents recently and is the responsible agency.

The ministry has a continuous program of evaluation of new technologies in highway structures and hardware. A light, aluminum, fixed-base pole is already in use, and the ministry is looking at Swedish technology as recommended.

We are quite pleased with the effects of the reduced speed limits in the province and foresee no further changes.

The ministry will continue to monitor new means of communicating with drivers, as suggested in the recommendation on "condition-ahead" and weather-warning devices. I might say that a speed-warning system is presently being tested on a Highway 400/401 ramp.

The committee recognizes the high quality of the Ontario road system. We believe that this is an accurate perception but we are not prepared to rest on our laurels. We will continue intensive efforts through research and development and improved management to make the highways safer and more efficient.

Administration and research: MTC has a long history of giving high priority to safety in all relevant decision-making. It has recently improved its general administrative ability through the creation of explicit guidelines and various organizational changes, and these improvements should also be reflected in safety conditions.

As the select committee suggests, co-ordination between government agencies is important and special efforts are needed to ensure that it takes place. We already have a number of interministerial task forces, co-ordinating specific safety-related projects.

As mentioned earlier, the Minister of Transportation and Communications will serve as the government spokesman on highway safety, referring special issues to his cabinet colleagues. The role of co-ordinator within the MTC will be assigned to the assistant deputy minister for drivers and vehicles, reporting directly to the deputy minister.

The recommendation that better provincial support is needed for crash rescue will be examined in depth.

Considerable federal-provincial co-operative research has been taking place on road safety. The CCMTA and the conference of ministers responsible for motor vehicle administration have taken it upon themselves to give structure and direction to this activity. These co-operative efforts will become more numerous and more fruitful in the future.

I can only agree that high priority should be given to evaluation of effectiveness of current road safety programs. Resources are scarce, needs are many. Potential benefits are as precious as life itself. We cannot make the possible allocation to resources to programs unless we know how well the programs are performing. MTC has been a leader in developing evaluation techniques, and intends to maintain this position.

The committee recognizes that good organization and systematization are crucial to effective new highway safety initiatives. I see this as the main thrust of the report, and it squares nicely with our own views. We need systematic evaluation and development of existing programs and efficient organization for new developments.

These are fundamental to progress in highway safety. The select committee recognizes that expedient or hastily conceived programs will not give results in lives and dollars saved. Properly organized hard work will.

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the chairman, the member for Yorkview, and all the members of the committee and the very efficient staff of people that he mentioned. We think that this committee has produced a very good document, a document no doubt that will save many, many lives in the future. And I want to congratulate the committee on its success.

Mr. Nixon: I want to join with the last speaker in congratulating the member for Yorkview in his chairmanship of the committee. He never failed to be moderate in our deliberations. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, he was convivial as always. He was, in my view, an excellent representative of this House when we met delegations both in this province and elsewhere.

Mr. Foulds: Is this the member for Yorkview that I know?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, it's the one that you know, and I have known him longer than you.

Mr. Breithaupt: The one and the same.

Mr. Nixon: As a matter of fact, the first time I met the hon. member, if you will permit me a brief digression, Mr. Speaker, was just a few weeks before a by-election to be held in the constituency then known as Brant. I was working away in the education system in Brantford and there was a light tapping on the door. I opened it, and who should be there but this distinguished grey-haired parliamentarian-to-be who gave me some very good advice. He advised me that I should go into public life. I took his advice. So, I am here and he is there. But that was the first occasion, when he was doing a little proselytizing—I was already a member of the United Church, so there wasn't much he could do to improve that.

Mr. Lane: You both should be here.

Mr. Nixon: But he has certainly been shown to be a good parliamentarian and, to come to the business of our report, he has been a vocal proponent of highway safety in this House even before it was particularly popular. Before I'd ever even heard of Ralph Nader—

[9:00]

Mr. Foulds: We'd heard of Fred Young.

Mr. Nixon: —the member for Yorkview was yammering away about safety. So it was a great pleasure to serve with him on the committee. There are a number of other members of the committee here tonight who will be expressing their views on the report and some of the aspects of it. Two or three of the members are no longer here in the House. Mr. Givens has gone on to other responsibilities.

Mr. Cunningham: But not as safe.

Mr. Nixon: At our concluding meeting, I thought it was very appropriate that the chairman asked Mr. Givens to come back and join with us as we, what you would call, wound things up. It was also appropriate that in his capacity as chairman of the police commission, he brought one of those handy-dandy breathalysers so that neither he nor any member of the committee would in any way exceed the bounds of the law. I suppose it might be something that the House should consider to provide one of those things for every member. It might give us the kind of moderation that we would hope for and keep us out of trouble from time to time.

Mr. Breithaupt: From time to time.

Hon. Mr. Norton: But not on this side.

Mr. Hennessy: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Cunningham: It would be a correctional service in itself.

An hon. member: The member for Fort William is having apple cider.

Mr. Nixon: Again? Actually, the other member that I was thinking of when I was trying to recall the members of the committee who are no longer with us, in the sense that they were members of the House, is Bill Ferrier. I understand that Bill also has, what you would call, lit on his feet and is advising Mr. Justice Hartt in his peregrinations in the north and in establishing the way the northern universe is to unfold. And from what I can gather about Mr. Hartt's procedures and concepts of his job, Mr. Ferrier probably will be able to go directly into retirement when that job is completed.

I'm not sure whether there are other members who should come under our investigations here tonight, but I did want to say something particularly about the road system and what our findings were in this review.

I must also agree with the hon. parliamentary assistant, who in his own riding is known as "Four Lane," for reasons that I have never been able to determine. I must agree with him that we have an excellent highway system. I have driven a lot on the roads of the province and I would be immodest enough to say that I have probably driven on them more than any other politician here. Mind you, my mileage has been somewhat reduced of late, but I've been into all those lovely communities in the north, south, east and west and even some of them in the middle.

I think our road system is excellent and the safety provisions governing it are in the most part excellent as well. I've got a few pet peeves that I will get to; the members of the committee have grown quite tired of me referring to them, but I can't let this occasion go by without referring to them, however briefly.

Mr. Bounsall: We will have another committee so that you can air them some more.

Mr. Conway: Let's not talk about trips now.

Mr. Nixon: No, this is not the time to talk about trips. But there will be another occasion for that too, and it may come sooner rather than later.

Mr. Breithaupt: Sooner than you think.

Mr. Nixon: I was thinking of some of the innovative provisions that have been implemented in terms of safety measures on the road system of the province. One that some people have commented on, even to the committee, were the great plastic barrels of sand that you see stuck out in the roads to keep drivers from killing themselves when they run into a concrete abutment or something like that. They're rather ugly. We're perhaps used to them, but the efficiency and record of usefulness of those sand barrels is one of the most amazing things that you could ever think of. We've seen the movies in our committee hearings of the way they are used.

As a matter of fact, one of the interesting aspects is that those blooming plastic barrels of sand have been patented by somebody down in the United States, and he is busy selling them to progressive jurisdictions like this one. It just goes to show that if you have any imagination and the ability to sell, you don't really have to sit here and wait for your ship to come in. But that particular gentleman had a good idea. It's amazing that it was patentable, but we've got those barrels.

You might be interested to know, Mr. Speaker—I feel that you would—that right outside the gate of our home farm about a week ago an unfortunate young man decided he was going to use the road system to end his life. He was driving a small truck at high speed. Just a quarter of a mile from our gate, there is a railway overpass with a heavy cement abutment right in the middle of the road, with two lanes on each side of it. It is well-protected by these sand barrels. He was going straight for the middle at the highest speed that his truck could achieve. When the sand stopped flying around and the smoke cleared away, he was almost uninjured. God forgive him, and I hope he is feeling better, but his best deliberate attempts could not allow his truck to even touch the concrete.

It really was a most amazing demonstration, even more impressive than the ones we saw on the films when we were shown these various devices.

As far as I am concerned, I want to add some congratulations to those people in the ministry who have been innovative in some of these respects. In my opinion, it is only when the politicians, and I refer to them selectively, those who are in a position to dictate to the ministry, decide to do things for reasons other than for efficiency and pure safety that I find some of our regulations are a little asinine.

Maybe quite a lot are asinine. There was a certain degree of frustration in the hearings of the committee. I am sure the other members would agree with me on that. Many of us would have preferred concepts about what was good and what was bad as far as driver safety goes.

For example, most of us were under the impression—and I can remember Mr. Givens as a member of the committee enunciating this very clearly and forcibly—that the great problem on the roads in Ontario was the number of impaired drivers and that the accident toll associated with that was heinous and sinful. Both of those adjectives, I guess, apply. It seemed all we had to do was instruct our police forces to crack down with laws and regulations which we would make as tough as any in the world.

In our investigations, however, we found that the laws of Canada and Ontario are and were as tough as any in the world, with the exception of a couple of banana republics where the penalty was death by firing squad. I am not kidding members, that is so.

Mr. Conway: Socialist, every one of them.

An hon. member: No banana republic is socialist.

Mr. Wildman: Firing squads all wear funny hats and they have all got red coats.

Mr. Nixon: The mistaken concept that most people have is that all we need is to have tough laws and that will stop the carnage on the highways.

The chairman was always talking about the carnage on the highways. It was a phrase he used repeatedly, and I suppose properly so when you see the statistics he put before us tonight.

However, the answer is not tough laws, it is not simply enforcement. The answer really continues to escape us. It is probably all of those things, plus somehow sensitizing, through public education of every type, the concern and responsibility of the individual. Frankly, after having been involved in public life for a number of years, I am not as optimistic about the outcome of that approach as I once was.

One of the interesting aspects in another jurisdiction—I think it was one of the American states—was that a chunk of money was made available for some very interesting experimentation in this regard. The individuals who had been convicted of impaired driving were given an option of going to jail or going to a special series of sensitizing classes where they were shown the results of those accidents and were put through a very carefully constructed series of educational and sensitizing procedures. The statistical rating of this thing was really appalling, because it turned out that the ones who had been found guilty but were not punished in any way had no different accident records afterwards than the ones who went to jail.

As a matter of fact, the ones who had been treated to this elaborate modern procedure of education turned out to have a higher accident rate and more recidivism as far as impaired driving is concerned than those who had had no modern treatment at all.

It really is an appalling thing because many people—and I suppose it goes with Liberal philosophy—have always had this tremendous confidence in the education process. All you have to do is get the individual and educate him properly and these social problems will disappear. I no longer believe in that aspect, and so my Liberal philosophy has to expand in other ways, perhaps just as valuable.

Mr. Warner: It is always flexible.

Mr. Conway: Nothing wrong with the right wing.

Mr. Foulds: That sounds like a move left myself.

Mr. Nixon: No, I'm for the firing squad; on a selective basis of course. Of course we'll check their political cards before we make the decision.

Mr. Speaker, I don't want to deviate unduly, but I'm talking about the frustrations, not necessary in this debate but in the hearings that we undertook. The second area had to do with driver training. Having been a teacher myself—

Mr. Wildman: In Sault Ste. Marie, wasn't that?

Mr. Nixon: —I was perhaps innocent enough to think that it would be possible to take a young person, very well motivated, anxious to get a licence, anxious to be able to get hold of his or her dad's car and go out independently on the road, and all we had to do was see that they were properly trained; that they understood the rules of the road, the dangers and so on, and that that would reduce the accident toll at least for that group.

We examined it as carefully as we could. We had the opportunity of bringing here world authorities, the people who had used great stacks of public money to undertake the most elaborate surveys, using large control groups; using groups that had had the advantage of the most modern and appropriate driver training, those that had had ordinary training, and those that had obtained licences without any training at all.

The frustrating aspect was the statistical difference could not be detected. As a matter of fact, in one of the European jurisdictions that I believe some of the members of the committee flew to during their peregrinations—

Mr. Warner: Were they in a plane?

Mr. Nixon: —I think it was Belgium—as long as you have the age credential, you simply go in, pay a fee and get a driver's licence without any instruction or any practical tests whatsoever. The results there, as far as accident were concerned, were exactly the same as in a jurisdiction such as ours, where we are quite proud of our training procedures in the high schools and where we want to strengthen the testing procedures before a licence is obtainable. So there were aspects of our investigations that were extremely frustrating.

However, I suppose even in spite of the statistical information that was made available to us, we still recommend strengthening the enforcement of the control of impaired driving and that sort of thing; and we want to change the whole procedure for training drivers and for awarding licences.

I suppose we just felt compelled to do so even though in most cases the statistical and research information did not indicate in any strong way, if indeed in any discernible way, that our recommendations were based on the kind of independent research we had at our disposal.

We had an extensive tour of the province.

We were up in the Thunder Bay area, Sault Ste. Marie—

Mr. Foulds: That is just the near north.

Mr. Nixon: —and we went to Sudbury where our meeting was well advertised. We hired a beautiful room in the Holiday Inn and we had the coffee set out and the chairman was at the head of the table and our research staff were there with pencils poised and—nobody came.

That was the only time we broke into print. The Globe and Mail had a front page story about it. So at least perhaps in some kind of a reverse way we—

Mr. Germa: The Holiday Inn is under boycott, I haven't been in it for five years myself; they are not unionized.

Mr. Wildman: They are not unionized.

Mr. Nixon: I don't know what building other than the Steelworkers you can go into without a picket line in front of it up there; you can't even go into the mine workers' place without offending somebody.

Mr. Germa: It's fame of a sort.

[9:15]

Mr. Nixon: In almost every one of these areas where we had hearings, I was very much impressed by the representatives of the provincial police, and municipal police forces as well. It may be that their bosses had said: "Okay, these guys are coming to town and you better go down there and tell them what you think." While we would certainly pay great attention to their formal presentation, which had been prepared in conjunction with lots of people back in headquarters, it was often just as useful, once we got that out of the way, when the questioning actually elicited some personal responses and experiences from the policemen concerned. They're out on the roads patrolling and no doubt have experienced almost anything that might occur.

This brings me to one of my pet peeves; and that has to do with the speed limit which the representative of the minister said "is satisfactory as far as the ministry is concerned and will not be changed." I'm sure that he speaks for a great majority of the people of the province of Ontario; everybody thinks it's great, but nobody obeys it.

Ms. Gigantes: I do.

Mr. Conway: The member for Carleton East says she does.

Mr. Nixon: Evelyn, I've often wanted to pop you one.

Mr. Warner: She doesn't drive.

Mr. Nixon: All right, the member for Carleton East obeys the speed limit, and I think that is great.

Mr. Warner: She doesn't drive.

Mr. Foulds: My mother does.

Mr. Nixon: I was going to talk about little old ladies in tennis shoes, but I thought I might arouse her.

Mr. Foulds: It's not tennis shoes, it's mukluks.

Mr. Nixon: I have been very concerned that in a tremendous sort of orgy of self-righteousness we have reduced the speed limit. We expect everybody to say: My, aren't they great, because this is going to be so important to save energy and stop the carnage on the roads and so on. I just believe it is the biggest piece of hypocrisy that's come into this House for a long time, because our roads are excellent and they're built for a standard 70 miles an hour, 100 kilometres per hour. As a matter of fact, they tell me that you could go probably 130 kilometres an hour without putting too much sideways strain on your new radials.

Mr. Germa: Change it.

Mr. Nixon: I would just say this, Mr. Speaker, the roads are excellent. I've been waiting for the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) to take the sales tax off cars, the way he did before the election of 1975; that was the last time I bought a car. I finally decided that I couldn't wait any longer and I bought a nice Chev just a few days ago; a nice piece of standard, efficient transportation. I'm telling you, it is a marvelous car, Mr. Speaker. I know you can't drive those smaller cars, but for those of us who drive standard transportation, it is a marvelous car. It's responsive, it's comfortable, it's quiet—

Mr. Warner: What make?

Mr. Nixon: Chev, I told you. I defy anybody to drive at 80-kilometres per hour on these good roads. I don't believe anybody but Evelyn does, and Evelyn has got a lot of strange propensities.

Mr. Warner: She doesn't have a licence.

Mr. Nixon: It probably is a bit of a joke, everybody can cite their own experience, one way or the other, but in my opinion there aren't one per cent of the drivers on the road who obey the speed limit. This is a serious matter for us, because the argument that, well at least they drive a little slower than they would if the speed limit were put back up to 70 miles per hour, which I guess would be about 115 kilometres or something; I just do not buy the argument. The police have said to us: "Yes, we like the lower speed limit"; but they also say: "If we're going to enforce it we need a lot more black and white cars; a lot more radar; and we need more eyes in the sky"; that sort of thing.

If we're prepared to have these speed limits and expect them to be obeyed, then we are going to have to shovel out the money for enforcement or else accept the point that everybody in the province is ignoring the speed limit. I don't believe we can afford to enforce it the way it is, and I believe it brings our legal procedures into great disrespect.

I have stated that view frequently, but I've not been able to convert anybody on the committee particularly; and I always get bad letters if anybody reads my views, because they think it is such a good thing to have low speed limits—as long as they can drive any speed they want.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Is that how you got the name "Fast Bob"?

Mr. Nixon: No.

Mr. Bradley: It's "Fast Alan", not Fast Bob.

Mr. Conway: What about the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Pope)? He's got a story to tell on this one.

Mr. Nixon: The Solicitor General (Mr. MacBeth) admitted in the House here that he's been known to go at least two-miles-per-hour over the speed limit. I don't know whether this was with his government driver in his government limousine or not.

Mr. Breithaupt: Or on government business.

Mr. Nixon: Anyway, I have made the point as strongly as I can. I'd simply like to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that other jurisdictions had reduced the speed limit at the time of the energy crisis when they couldn't get the fuel to maintain their national needs—I'm thinking particularly of the United Kingdom—Then when the fuel supply increased again, at least they had the good sense to put the speed limit back to where it was a practicable one and one which people could obey, or at least realize that enforcement was practical and significant, an enforcement level that could be supported by everyone. Right now I believe that is just a shambles and a farce in this province.

The last point I want to refer to is the seatbelt situation. I have now trained myself that I feel uncomfortable driving unless I have the seatbelt fastened. I've never been stopped by a policeman and I have never been fined. I do believe it is a good law and that the statistics associated with it must surely counteract any criticism that we still get.

Mr. Conway: Yet another honest Grit.

Mr. Wildman: What about Bob Johnston?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: What about that day you happened to be sitting on the QEW in that car? What the devil were you doing out there anyway in a red Camero?

Mr. Nixon: Anyway, I know you want to get on with this without too much more delay, Mr. Speaker, since there are many other members who want to take part.

One interesting aspect with respect to this part on protection, which I think is the best way to save lives and really the only significant way to save lives, has been our review of the air bag situation. The chairman of the committee, who spoke a few moments ago, dealt with that point effectively. I expect the car I buy after this one—I like to keep them a long time and take all the depreciation I can before I trade them in—will have an air bag in it, whether or not I want one.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The question is whether it will have to fit or be installed.

Mr. Foulds: Will the Minister of Health fit in the front or the back?

Mr. Nixon: I was present at probably the only demonstration of air bags that's taken place in Canada.

Mr. Warner: We are watching one now.

Mr. Breithaupt: Since the last election.

Mr. Conway: And what did the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Henderson) say?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nixon: I understand there was a demonstration of the air bag system in Toronto recently, but it was low pressure and was not the demonstration we had at GM headquarters. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, I never had so much respect for our chairman as I did when they said, "Okay, whose going to sit in front?" We all hemmed and hawed, and the member for Yorkview came forward and said, "I'll sit in front."

Mr. Breithaupt: That's what $10 a day will do.

Mr. Nixon: The six of us got in this nice little car, a small Buick. Nobody down there at GM had ever seen this blooming thing work before. They were hanging out the windows to see this. All the engineers and the big brass had come over in the company plane from Detroit. They were all standing around and here were these six—shall I say innocent members of the Legislature—packed in this junior-sized Buick.

The engineer was out there with a big red button. We all had to put on safety glasses. We should have twigged at that point. The engineer said, "Are you ready?" He pushed the button; and boy, does that thing work. It was like a shotgun going off in a telephone booth. That was the way it was officially described.

I will tell you, it was a bit scary; particularly when blood started running down the chairman's cheek. The air bag pushed his safety glasses up against his cheek. I don't think he had to have stitches, but he was certainly injured in the course of his duty and his responsibility.

However, if the GM people hadn't been so careful with their safety glasses and so on, the only injuries would have been a couple of skinned shins from—who was it? Was it you?

Mr. Bounsall: The vice-chairman.

Mr. Nixon: Oh yes, the member for Mississauga South (Mr. Kennedy). He had the skin shucked off his shins because of some malfunction or other. But none of us were injured by the impact of the accident, mostly because the car was not moving.

However, we were very impressed with the mechanics of the air bag. We had gone to the research centre at Detroit. We had seen it working. We had been subjected to the arguments from the administration of the big three motor companies about how terrible the air bag system was, but we had also been subjected to the contagious enthusiasm of the scientists who developed it and who were not prepared to sit around and listen to anybody, even their bosses, say the air bag was unreliable and ineffective.

Frankly, I was convinced of its reliability and effectiveness. I suppose since it's going to be mandated in the United States, it also will be mandated here. We will probably be driving with that kind of protection, and I believe it will give as large a reduction in highway deaths and injuries as our seatbelt law has up until now.

In this review I want to say that although a couple of times I was on the verge of thinking the review was not entirely worthwhile, I now believe it was. We are in a position to take some steps and make some changes in the province which will continue this jurisdiction in its position of leadership.

The point the chairman made as far as the numbers of deaths and injuries means this is still an appalling source of injury and death in this province. We in this House have a tremendous responsibility to do everything within our power to see this death and injury rate is reduced.

Mr. Mackenzie: I will make my comments fairly short tonight, but there are a few points I want to make. I want to join with the others in offering my congratulations to the chairman of the committee, I think the accolades are well deserved. The member for Yorkview has been raising the issue of automobile safety in this House for a long time and I suppose in his own way—he probably wouldn't like the comparison—he has been our Ralph Nader of the automobile safety field and really was at it long before we heard of Ralph Nader down in the United States.

We have had a couple of people who pioneered in this area. I can't help but think of the fight on hazardous substances in environmental matters we saw undertaken by Fred Burr, who has now left us in this House. They have both been a little bit ahead of their time and willing to break some new ground in these particular areas.

I found the committee informative and rewarding. I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, I have more reservations now. I may feel a little more negative now, and some of it has to do with the preliminary report of the minister I listened to tonight. My position probably is the reverse of the member for Brant-Oxford Norfolk (Mr. Nixon). I went into it feeling we had the opportunity to do some really important things, and one or two of the reasons I felt this way was that early in the game we knew what it was costing us in the province of Ontario. We knew we were dealing with half a billion dollars in direct losses to this province; we knew we were dealing with 1,800 or 1,500 deaths; and tens of thousands of injuries. Actually it was very difficult; you could put a pretty good price tag on it in terms of the actual costs, but you were never sure of how high it might go in terms of all the social costs as well.

When we took a look at the problem we faced, and the necessity of reducing the accidents and injuries on the highways of this province, I was impressed. Maybe I was a little naive, but I was impressed with the idea that if we could only get some of the recommendations through, and if we are only dealing in five, 10 or 15 per cent reduction in the problems in the province of Ontario, a 10 per cent reduction is $50 million.

Surely if we can come up with a decent report and some positive recommendations, and recommendations that are not likely to be too costly—the suggestion of cost seems to scare governments today—we have a chance of making some meaningful impact on the problems on our highways.

I thought it was worth the efforts for these reasons.

Two or three individual points in the report should be dealt with. I don't think the inspections of the vehicles are necessarily one of the key points. I think the automobile manufacturers, while I may have other differences with them, do know how to make a pretty good car in North America. I think there have been improvements in the standards and in the safety of the automobiles in our province and in our country today.

I was impressed with one of the things that came out very clearly in Sweden. I am wondering if we sometimes forget some of the spinoff costs. They have an annual inspection in Sweden, and while costs seem to be one of the arguments given for not getting into it in this country, it is really not a major cost. It is being covered and it is not a drain on the taxpayers in that particular country.

One of the things I found interesting, apart from keeping the cars up to standard, was that since they had instituted the annual inspection of automobiles in Sweden the average life of the cars on the road in Sweden had increased from 10 to 14 years. We are still at about nine and a half years in this particular province. It might be worth taking a look at the cost savings if the people were able to keep their automobiles running that much longer.

Mr. Nixon: I think if we all drove Volvos we probably would have the same results.

Mr. Mackenzie: It seemed to be one of the things that may be we could learn a little bit about. Maybe there are savings over and above what you could see immediately, but I think the five years are a step in the right direction, and I am hoping that it is reduced progressively from that point.

Mr. Wildman: You are becoming progressively more conservative.

Mr. Mackenzie: One of the things that became very obvious—and the chairman of the committee dealt with it at some length, and so did the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk—was the fact that there are some problems with the training we have, the standards I guess and whether or not the training programs for young drivers or new drivers are achieving any results. If there was one common thread through all of the recommendations made to us, even where they had made these massive studies referred to, it was that a short-coming in most of the driver training schemes is the emphasis on safe driving, defensive driving. Certainly I think we can set some standards and work at a much greater awareness of just what may be involved.

Another thing that I found interesting—and I think this is one of the important recommendations—is effect of the probationary licence period over two years. We found that the high accident rates weren't entirely with the young drivers—although there is a bad rate there, and when you combine it with alcohol there is no question we have a problem—but we found the graph showed that there was about a three-year period before you get down to the average in terms of your safety record in driving.

We found that that unsafe period applied to new drivers at any age, as well as to younger drivers. It may have been a little more pronounced in younger drivers, but first-time drivers had a period of time in which they had a higher accident rate across the board.

It seems to me that ties in with the kind of habits we develop, the kind of training that we may give people and the perception of responsibility. I think social responsibility is a word that is valid in terms of what we do on our highways, because social costs certainly are a major problem.

If we make new drivers, either young drivers or the older drivers but first-time drivers, earn that licence—and that's the intent, it's not really a very major recommendation—but if we can make them earn that licence through a longer probationary period, we may start to develop an understanding that they have a responsibility to the community; they have a responsibility to develop more cautious and safer driving habits.

It is also important that driver instructors, as part of this package, have to receive the training and have to be recognized not as anybody who can pay a small fee, hang up a shingle and become a driving instructor, but as an important and legitimate trade in our province. The training should be to that end. The position of a driving instructor should carry some prestige with it and should be a recognized occupation.

Regarding enforcement and penalties, I have some agreement with the previous speaker that tough laws and tough enforcement are not necessarily the answer, but I would have a little more respect for his presentation if he had recognized, rather than riding his one hobby-horse—the speed limit—one of the things that was said to work by every jurisdiction we visited; seat belts, yes, but also the lower speed limits. It does have an effect.

Sure, our highways may be built to allow high-speed travel, but I suggest that may have been before we had some of the congestion we've got on our highways today. I really can't see the validity, even on the stretch from here to Hamilton or here to Brantford, of the speeds we had previously when you take a look even late at night at the kind of traffic on that particular road.

If you're going to have accidents at a 70- or 80-mile-an-hour rate, there's a heck of a lot we can do to prevent injuries and deaths. I think the lower speed limits are legitimate. The information, the figures and the background material are there to indicate clearly it is a saving factor. I might buy the previous speaker's argument that tougher laws or tougher enforcement are not the answer if he had also at least taken a look at that issue. If he can buy seatbelts, I can't understand why he is in such a hurry. I didn't know he admired "Flying Phil" Gaglardi in BC so much.

Mr. Nixon: I don't speed.

Mr. Conway: I'm sure the member for Hamilton East drives back to the cottage at 50 miles an hour.

Mr. Mackenzie: No, I have to be very honest, I don't. But, let me tell the members what I do. Maybe it's a weak argument, but I think it's a valid point. I think what has happened with the speed limit is exactly what the police told us would happen—while people aren't obeying it to the mile that they're supposed to, it has generally meant a reduction.

One of the problems is that they don't have enough people to do the necessary enforcing. We probably don't want to spend that kind of money in that particular area in any event. But when the speed limit was 70, people were not usually charged until they got up to about 80. There seems to be an eight- or nine-mile override that's allowed. When they reduced it to 60, then drivers went 69. Sure, they may not have been obeying the law, but there was a lowering generally of the speed limits across the province, and I think that's had some real effect. It has certainly shown in the jurisdictions in Europe, as well as here, where we questioned them about it.

Mr. Laughren: Unless you are on the federal RCMP list.

Mr. Mackenzie: I don't know how we do this particularly, but in terms of the suggestions for tougher enforcement or tougher laws, it's the perception of being caught.

One of the things I found fascinating on the committee—and in the first stages it seemed to shock most of the committee members—was the number of unlicensed drivers. What do you do with somebody when he has broken the law, when he's been caught once or twice, when he has finally had his licence taken away from him, and he continues driving? I was shocked to hear from the ministry people that there are as many as 50,000 or 60,000 people driving in this province without a licence in any given year.

I'm not sure that that's accurate. One of the things that seemed to come through in that area was that nobody could prove there was a higher accident rate. In fact, there was probably a lower accident rate among those people driving without a licence. I can only project my own feeling and that's, once again, having broken the law to that extent, I understand the perception of possibly being caught, thus the extra-cautious driving that went on with these people may have been one of the reasons why we couldn't prove there was a tremendous number of accidents in this group of people.

The perception of being caught is a problem, and I think there are some valuable tools and valuable recommendations in the committee report. We asked for things such as some of the cameras that are being tried in some of the European jurisdictions. We're not trying to do this on every highway or even in a small percentage of them across the province, but if you have high-speed, high-accident highways the idea of a camera that is triggered by the speed of the car and takes a picture of the licence plate of the car, plus recording the time and the actual speed, is something that would probably have the same effects in this province that it seems to be having in Germany and Switzerland—that is a substantial reduction, as much as 60 or 70 per cent, in the problems occurring where they are using this particular gimmick.

I don't know what one does with the police complaint that to carry out the enforcement we would need more black and white units or more of the various tools. We may or may not have been wrong in attempting to toughen up the penalties a little bit, but it is a problem that I could not come to grips with, and I don't really think the committee came to grips with it. How do you relate or compare the costs?

While I think these points are important, the point I want to end with is that when I started out on this committee I had the feeling we might really be able to do something. We might save some money, save lives and have some effect on the social costs in our province. I was of the feeling—maybe, as a new member, a bit naively—that because we were able to come up with recommendations that we could all agree with and support, these recommendations would be accepted and passed by the House—at least a good chunk of them. Maybe then we could realistically look at the five or 10 or 15 per cent reduction in the cost of accidents across the province.

I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it may be just my initial reaction or a growing, disturbing gut reaction I am having, but I listened very carefully to the preliminary response from the minister, as delivered by his parliamentary assistant and I get the feeling that again we are going to study to death all the things that we covered in the committee, and that very few of the recommendations are going to see the light of day in the immediate future.

Mr. Foulds: Postponed, postponed.

Mr. Mackenzie: I don't think the committee was an expensive one, I think that what we did—

Mr. Laughren: Look at the Tories over there. John Rhodes is sleeping.

Mr. Mackenzie: —and learned was valuable. I think the recommendations are good and the possibility is there of some substantial savings. But I get the distinct feeling that the $300,000 or whatever the committee cost this Legislature will be wasted. Looking at the potential savings—even if it is only one or two per cent against that $500 million a year cost—those recommendations are not going to see the light of day. Then we really will have wasted that money and that would be a tragedy.

I hope I am wrong; I sincerely hope I am wrong. But I don't have a good feeling right now about how much of this report is going to be enacted into legislation. If that should be the case, then I say the government of this province is going to have to do a little bit of answering, in my opinion, for its lack of action. I hope I am wrong.

An hon. member: John Rhodes is asleep.

Mr. Mackenzie: The recommendations in this report were largely unanimous. I hope this government will move on these recommendations, and that we see some of the savings that we understand can be made.

Mr. Laughren: May I take John Rhodes' pulse?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, it is with some sense of personal satisfaction that I join this debate on the report of the select committee on highway safety. I was privileged to serve on this committee and, therefore, shared in the shaping of the recommendations to the government and to the Ministry of Transportation and Communications.

Some hon. members: I hope so.

Mr. Johnson: I truly hope the member for Hamilton East is not correct in his gut feeling, and that this report does see the light of day.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Johnson: I might just add as a comment that I think possibly we should mail a copy of Hansard to the OPP detachment in the Brant-Oxford-Norfolk area.

It is not my intention to go into the recommendations in detail. I realize other members will have discussed some of the recommendations that I am going to talk to them about, but I would like to elaborate on a few. I urge all the members of this House to give serious consideration to all of the recommendations.

I would be remiss if I did not pay tribute to our chairman, the member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) and the committee staff for their interest in this excellent report. Also, I would like to compliment the Ministry of Transportation and Communications for its total co-operation and support.

Mr. Foulds: How about the minister? He has to implement it.

Mr. Laughren: Don't forget the member for Fort William (Mr. Hennessy).

[9:45]

Mr. Johnson: I realize there may be some opposition to a few of these recommendations such as the one requiring licensee's photographs to be imprinted on the licence. Some may feel this is one more example of a necessary government intervention in the lives of private citizens. I agree with those who believe government should keep out of that area as much as possible. But, in looking at this particular recommendation, I think it is necessary to balance the public good against what I believe is, in this case, a meaningless interpretation of freedom. Such a step might cause some inconvenience but inconvenience is a far cry from infringing on individual freedom.

Our courts and our police forces are all too aware of the number of drivers who continue driving after their license has been suspended, simply by using someone else's licence. Such a situation is intolerable and could be averted if this recommendation is implemented. By the way, I feel this photograph should be coloured.

For the same reason, I supported the committee's recommendation that drivers be required to have a physician's statement certifying they are physically fit to drive and that such a certificate be required every three years after a person reaches 50. Sorry, but the member for Algoma-Manitoulin will have to take his physical.

Mr. Lane: Who are you kidding?

Mr. Johnson: It is a well-documented fact that our physical capabilities are affected adversely as we grow older. The process varies considerably from individual to individual. What this recommendation does is recognize that fact and provide protection for both the driver and all others who use the highway.

The requirement that eyesight be tested yearly after the age of 70 is based on the same premise. Surely no intelligent person would advocate licensing people who are physically unfit to drive. The only criterion for receiving the certificate is a doctor's opinion that the individual is not a potential menace on the highway. I would submit that such a requirement is both reasonable and responsible.

I would like to deal with the matter of impaired drivers. I would suggest the record speaks for itself. In Ontario in 1975, alcohol was a major factor in 12 per cent of property damage, 19 per cent of all non-fatal injuries, 26.5 per cent of all fatal accidents and over 50 per cent of all drivers deaths.

This is a very serious problem and the committee has made several recommendations dealing with it. I would like to focus on one in particular and that is the one asking the government to raise the legal drinking age to 19. This tends to be an emotional issue for many people, most of whom wave the dual arguments that if a young person can go to war, or if he or she can vote, they should therefore also be allowed to drink. I would suggest that those who advance such a case reveal both a shallowness of thought and a lack of reasoning ability.

I would agree that a young person serving in the armed forces is exposed to responsibilities and discipline that should be recognized by having increased privileges open to him. I would also agree that those who serve in battle are similarly entitled to all the privileges open to adults. However, we do not have compulsory military service in Canada, and this nation has not taken part in war in 32 years. So I would suggest that using those examples to justify allowing 18-year olds the right to drink is a staggering example of faulty logic.

Mr. Conway: Yours is the double standard.

Mr. Johnson: There is also a substantial difference between having the right to vote and the right to drink. Through advertising, motion pictures and television, our society has created a glamorous lifestyle image around the use of alcohol. To many people it is synonymous with good times and becoming an adult. Those are goals for which most young people are striving. The teenage years are not easy years and perhaps at no other time are we so susceptible to peer pressure to conform, to go along with the rest of the group. We can do no harm by having these young people wait one more year before they begin dealing with alcohol and there's every chance we might do some good.

I would suggest there is no similarity between this situation and the process of voting. Casting a vote in an election represents a responsibility, an opportunity which will hopefully develop an interest in politics and eventually lead to youth participation in government.

Mr. Conway: Let's raise the drinking age to 77.

Mr. Johnson: It does not involve peer pressure and it does not occur every weekend. One cannot equate the two. It should also be noted many teenagers themselves want to see a change in this law and that should surely indicate such a step has merit.

Our highways are well constructed, our police forces on all levels including the RCMP are efficient, but neither factor will do much good if we fail to provide adequate laws to ensure highway safety. If a madman kills a dozen people and remains at large, citizens are terrified and demand action. A typical example would be the Son of Sam in New York city this past summer. If we have an outbreak of a contagious disease and a hundred people die, society panics and again demands action. But here we have a killer that in 1976 wiped out over 1,500 people, injuring another 83,000, and many of us treat it with apathy, indeed accept it as inevitable. How, in the name of reason, can we accept anything so destructive? Accidents on the roads are the leading cause of deaths of our young people. More than 700 of last year's victims were under 25. One week ago tonight, in my riding in the town of Bolton, six young people were involved in a car accident—three died and three others were seriously injured. The same night, near London, two cars collided—four people died and one was seriously injured. Seven fatalities in one night. How many will die this weekend?

Accidents on the roads are the fourth leading killer in the province. I submit to the hon. members of this House this committee has presented them with a good report. Accept it or amend it, but for heaven's sake take action now.

Mr. Conway: Bounsall for leader.

Mr. Bounsall: As a member of this highway safety committee, I must admit how much I enjoyed the work and the pleasure I felt in listening to and talking with the expert witnesses who came before us so often here in Toronto and whom we travelled to see—all persons very dedicated to reducing highway injuries and highway fatalities, each in their separate way. It was also a great pleasure to serve on a committee chaired by the member for Yorkview who, for all his legislative life in this Legislature, has worked so hard in this area to ensure there be stiffer regulations with respect to automobiles and vehicles on our highways. He is a fine person to work with, because of his dedication and interest in the preparation of this report.

In looking over the work of the committee in our report, three of the four items which we recommended in our interim report of November, 1976 are already in place. For example, the moped helmet requirement. We experimented with handing out a publication at the time of the 1977 licence renewal, indicating just how tough our drinking-driving laws were in Ontario. An information card was given to all those renewing their licences, because we found most people didn't realize, and certainly most members of the committee didn't realize when we first got on the committee, just how tough our laws were as the result of some recent changes in 1976.

Unfortunately, that experiment didn't work too well. It was a very good, informative card. Unfortunately, they weren't handed out with a great degree of enthusiasm by the persons within our licence branch out there across Ontario. They were there on the counter in most instances and most people didn't read them. I still think it was a good attempt to educate the people of Ontario and that we should try to continue in some form to so do.

Also, we implemented the system of classified drivers' licences tied to the weight, size of vehicle and so forth. That's been implemented and we had recommended that. There is one left, however, and I can't quite see why we're taking so long to implement it.

In order to reduce car theft and often joy-riding by juveniles, we've recommended that the government bring in legislation imposing a stiff penalty for leaving keys in the ignitions of our cars or vehicles when unattended. I realize this isn't the sole prerogative of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. This is probably legislation in another ministry. Perhaps that is the reason we haven't had it before us for debate yet.

I would certainly urge the ministry not to drag their feet any further in seeing that that comes forward.

I regret that there were a couple of areas that the committee did not have time to investigate in our terms of reference. Equipment standards for tow trucks was one. We never even had time to make a start at the investigation in this area. The other was the operation of multiple vehicle combinations. The problem there was we could never come up with a final recommendation because of conflicting evidence which we were receiving. The evidence we were getting from Alberta, from California, from the Netherlands and to a certain extent from England was not in complete agreement. I regret that we couldn't come to any conclusions.

Since we had that information presented to us a year ago now and during the winter, further studies have taken place. There have been further tests in Alberta and California which may well have resolved some of the unanswered questions in our minds at that time. I regret that after having gone this far in investigating vehicle combinations that the committee cannot meet again this January or February, review the results of those experiments and come to some more definitive conclusions which, I believe, are soon going to be there for the making.

Also, there were other areas which we would have liked to investigate but simply did not have time for. There were various presentations at public meetings relating to the effectiveness of bikeways as a replacement for some of our vehicle traffic upon our roads and how that tied in with the excellent system of bikeways for mopeds and motorcycles in Holland. I would have liked to have investigated that whole area more and to have been able to make some recommendations. It was an area which we really couldn't get into.

One thing which our committee found, right from the very start, when we got talking to people from other jurisdictions, was that we've already done in Ontario the two main things which would most help to reduce accidents and fatalities. Those were the lowering of the speed limits and the compulsory wearing of seatbelts. Various people who came before us said, "You've already done it. These are two major steps." These were primarily people from the States. They said, "We wish we were able to achieve in our state what you have done already."

[10:00]

This, of course, left one of the main areas of great concern still wide open to us; that is the drinking and driving which occurs in the province of Ontario. The more we delved into that, the more we found there was no easy answer to that problem either.

One other thing I might mention at this time. When we talked to experts from other jurisdictions it became clear that this was the area which they were proposing we had to work in.

They then said another thing to us: "You, in Ontario, have the Addiction Research Foundation which does excellent work and does excellent studies." And some of them said to us, "We wish we had an equivalent body in our jurisdiction that could give advice and provide research data on the whole drinking problem. Of course, any drinking problem relates to the drinking-driving problem." So we found out that in Ontario we do have some major advantages over other areas.

Certainly, what became clear to us all right at the start was the excellent job which the Ministry of Transportation and Communications has done over the years on the engineering side in Ontario—the actual highway design, the actual engineering innovations in our highways. The highways themselves are safe in Ontario. It's the other areas that we have to look at.

In the area of driver education, it was quite clear that we really have no evidence that it does any good at all, and our focus in our report was on the training of the instructors in driver education—so they could put a greater emphasis on safety in their programs, in their instruction, and that courses be offered in our community college to train those instructors.

We had a lot of dissatisfaction from private driving schools around the country about having to come down and take a two-week course in Toronto from the Ontario Safety League—only to find that the Ontario Safety League said: "Look, we do this. We know it is inadequate. Come and give us a hand in doing it. Take it over. Let's give some real non-Mickey Mouse training to our driving instructors in Ontario.

"We are certainly not fighting any recommendation that those courses should be centred in our community colleges, and made more readily available to the people in Ontario who wish to take courses to allow them to become much better instructors."

If you look at the whole report, there are areas which stand out and interest each member more than other areas. I feel that one of the major recommendations is in the testing and licensing area. The one that stands out is the probationary licence—this two-year probationary licence for all beginner drivers irrespective of age.

It's really an early intervention system. From, I believe, the state of North Carolina, came very conclusive evidence that if one could intervene early on in someone's driving behaviour one stood a fair chance of being able to adjust that behaviour. And this is a recommendation which follows from that psychological study, the behavioural study which indicated that behaviour could be changed.

How do you do it? You must try and do it early. The warning letter system, where the warning letter comes at three points rather than six; the personal interview at six points rather than nine. And at nine points a new concept comes in for the probationer—he takes a driver-improvement course, one which is not there in the regular demerit point system for other drivers. His three-month suspension would begin at 12 points rather than 15 with possible extension of that probationary system.

I think that's a very attractive system. If the psychological and behavioural studies are correct, this early-intervention system stands some fair chance of having some effect upon the driving behaviour of our young drivers, if we intervene and try and change their driving behaviour quite early on after they are allowed behind the wheel. My only problem with that whole probationary licence system is that it is only a two-year probationary licence. I would have preferred to see it a three-year probationary licence, since it is only an early intervention concept anyway.

From that same section, a point which caused a lot of discussion in our committee from time to time, was that for all drivers when found guilty of an offence, demerit points would accumulate from the date of the offence rather than the date of the conviction. We were told at various times that what happens is that someone gets 12 or 13 points under our current system, the point where another offence would put them over the 15 points. At this point they will delay their court proceedings until further points have dropped off at the other end in the two-year period. So they can then go ahead and be convicted and get points dating from conviction at the moment and still be under the 15. I think this will certainly relieve the courts of delays for charges which would involve demerit points, as a result of back-dating it, whenever it is heard, to the time of the offence itself. If that results in suspension, even if that suspension takes place sometime later, it is a very good step forward.

In the alcohol and drinking-driving section, I am very certain that the banning of lifestyle advertising is a significant recommendation of the committee. Also, the one there that is of very great interest to me—a very early intervention, an on the spot penalty, which has been proved from behaviour studies in North Carolina and Oregon, I believe. That is the 24-hour suspension, if the blood alcohol level is between 50 and 100 milligrams per 100 millilitre. It stands to be effective because it is immediate, it is on the spot—it gets the driver off the road immediately when he is found with that level of alcohol in his bloodstream. It is much more effective psychologically as a tool for achieving our end, of causing people to not drive if they have been drinking, by the immediacy of the penalty. And it is a penalty which would not appear on their driving record. It is one which I would highly recommend to the ministry to see that this is carried out, using the new ALERT devices which have been developed for this purpose.

It is quite interesting to see that in the report from the parliamentary assistant indicating the ministry's response to our final report of the committee, the sort of conditions-ahead warning systems Fred Burr suggested has met with some favour and the ministry will be continuing to work on this system. I remember when the former member for Windsor-Riverside first proposed it way back in the fall of 1971. Our committee considered it, we recommended it, and I am glad to see that the ministry is considering it.

There are also various areas of the committee's work which appeal more than others and in which we have our pet peeves. I almost wrote a dissent to one recommendation in the area of vehicles, in what is in our purview to recommend in the vehicle area. I'm speaking of where we recommend that the Ontario government support the introduction of amber turn signals on all cars sold in Canada, and of course in Ontario. I support that recommendation, but as members of the committee know, one of my pet irritations as a driver on the road is the amount of signalling which is not done. Nothing frustrates me more or gets me angrier or makes me a less cool driver than to be piled up, waiting at a stoplight and then to have the car ahead of you signal after the light changes. I would like to have seen a recommendation in the report that there would be some penalties imposed and enforced on those people who create needless backups behind them by not signalling their intentions well in advance, as they are required to do in the state of California, penalties being imposed if they don't.

Having felt rather strongly that that should occur and since it is not in our report, I therefore can't get all that excited if we're going to make our turn signals amber when so many people in the province of Ontario don't pay much attention to the proper use of their turn signals. When they do, the amber light is certainly a step forward in contrast to the red.

Throughout the whole report I was interested in the arguments about seatbelts versus passive restraint systems. I was quite interested in the way in which the United States is going, where they're tending to recommend, in the very near future, that either the air bag or the wrap-around seatbelt, which wraps around you when you get in the car so you just have to buckle it up, should be mandated.

I was certainly interested in being in the back seat as one of the six members in the car in which the air bag was tested at the GM location in Oshawa. Most of the members at that time were tending to support strongly the recommendation about passive restraints in combination with seatbelts. When the bag went off and our chairman suffered a cut on his chin, I believe it was, when his safety glasses were knocked down to that location, and the vice-chairman suffered two bruised shins as a result of the panelling containing the air bag on the passenger side coming down rather sharply upon his shins, I could envisage any possibility of a positive recommendation in this area being wined out. It's a credit to both our chairman and our vice-chairman that, in spite of that experience, we have the recommendation in our report.

I want to say again that it was a great pleasure for me to serve on a committee that had a chairman so dedicated to his job as the member for Yorkview. I must admit as well that the other staff on the committee all worked very enthusiastically and very hard—Allan Schwartz, our counsel; his consultant, James Fisher; the research co-ordinator, Arna Crocker; and the representative of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, Harvey Mosher. All the members of the committee enjoyed Mr. Mosher's input from time to time in the committee and his great willingness to check back very quickly with any of the small points we asked him to check with in the ministry.

Of course, the clerk of the committee, Andrew Richardson, did a very capable job, as always, of seeing that we were in the right places at the right times and properly set up.

Mr. Warner: Poor choice of words.

Mr. Nixon: Do you want to run through that one more time?

Mr. Bounsall: No, that's fine right there. I'm not going to revise that at all.

Mr. Warner: How were you set up?

Mr. Bounsall: I just would say to the ministry, I was a little bit concerned, as was the member for Hamilton East (Mr. MacKenzie), with the slight negativeness in the initial reply by the ministry. We don't expect him to believe in all of the report, let's say, but he appeared to be not all that interested in it as much as we on the committee would have thought the ministry would be. We hope this is simply an impression, that this is not really the truth of the matter and that most of these recommendations will find their way into legislation.

[10:15]

On the committee we all felt that no one, or two, or three, or four or a dozen of these recommendations taken and implemented would be, by themselves, all that useful. We have here a package of 52 recommendations. Not one of them was the answer, not even six or seven taken in concert, were the answer. But if all were put together and implemented it would result in a package that would result in attitude changes in Ontario which could materially increase highway safety and reduce the accidents and the fatalities. So to pick and choose a few and not really seriously attempt to implement most of them, we on the committee feel would be a serious mistake. It would reduce the effectiveness of the steps which are taken.

I urge the ministry to do its best to implement each and every one of these recommendations.

Mr. Jones: I am happy to have the opportunity this evening to join in the debate on the recommendations of the highway safety select committee. I would like to add my appreciation to the member for Yorkview for the excellent job that he did as our chairman, and I say that most sincerely. I also thank the vice-chairman, the member for Mississauga South and the very excellent staff that served all of the members.

It has been said before, but what has been discussed tonight are the most serious deliberations over the past few months on this subject. I would be remiss if I did not touch on one of the sections of the report considered by the members of the committee to be probably the most serious factor: namely alcohol.

It has been touched on by earlier speakers this evening that it is the largest single killer of our young people in this province. That, indeed, has to be startling to all members of this House and requires some very sober reflection.

I have had an opportunity in the past to deal with this particular aspect of the report. I consider it to be one of the most serious facing our young people, as I have the opportunity to deal with many of their concerns.

This issue of alcohol and the fact that it is so deeply implanted in our society is, I suppose, something that was underscored to us as never before in our recent deliberations in the compiling of this report. We see it in terms of social consequence. We saw it in terms of dollars and cents as we looked at the tremendous cost in hospital occupancy, and all the other effects of it.

The previous speaker mentioned how we were considered by a lot of other jurisdictions to be fortunate to have an agency such as the Addiction Research Foundation to supply us with a constant monitoring of drugs and alcohol and the consequences thereof. I know it has been popular with certain members of the press to somehow attempt to discredit this particular agency. It was of comfort for us in Ontario to hear these people from different jurisdictions, with equal expertise, say that ARF was looked upon as one of the best-recognized internationally.

The ARF report is contained in our report. ARF estimated that no less than 16 per cent of all the suicides in this province and something like 10.6 per cent of all the homicides are directly attributable to alcoholism. We also saw that alcohol was involved in 50 per cent of manslaughter cases, 30 per cent of rape cases and 61 per cent of all assault cases. I mention this as I speak to the select committee on highway safety because the committee members found that it was impossible to divorce these other social problems of our times and all their consequences from the overall alcohol as we looked at it in the context of driving and drinking and the abuse thereof.

We looked at these estimates and we saw how the problems had doubled in the past 10 years. This is the big contributor to collisions on our highways—the statistics are rather obvious to us all—12 per cent of all the property damage accidents, 19 per cent of all the non-fatal injury accidents, 26.5 per cent of all the fatal accidents and 51.8 per cent of all the driver deaths in the accidents had that alcohol component. I think it particularly behooves us to recognize that our young people were disproportionately swelling the numbers of impaired driving convictions, as well as the number of alcohol-related collisions. We just touched on the very sobering thought that this was the biggest single killer of our young people in this province.

As the chairman in his opening comments touched upon, and others have referred to, back in 1967 we saw 5.5 per cent of young people's accidents being alcohol-related collisions. Then, after the very contentious issue of the day in which the legal drinking age was lowered from 21 in 1971, the number of alcohol-related collisions involving young people literally skyrocketed. By 1975, the percentage had reached the 37.2 per cent that the chairman mentioned and it is still rising.

We saw in the final report of the select committee that the Traffic Injury Research Foundation had studied the effects of age and drinking. It showed that 18- to 19-year-olds are 70 times more likely to die in motor vehicle collisions than the average non-impaired Ontario driver, twice the rate of impaired persons in older categories.

We touched on and saw the statistics from the study in London with the 18- to 21-year-olds increasing 174 per cent. Among that, the 24-year-old group, as a comparison, were something in the order of 33 per cent, a totally disproportionate number of increased alcohol-related collisions.

The sad thing of it all, statistics aside, is that they are bright young people with futures to be lived in this province, with experiences to have and contributions to make, which are so often snuffed out by the mixture of alcohol and the automobile that is so much a way of life with them as it is with the other age groups in our society.

When the Addiction Research Foundation said to us, and it is contained in this report, that they judged that 28 persons would not have died in automobile crashes between August, 1971, and July, 1972, and that some 4,450 collisions would not have taken place in that period, we cannot help but have been sobered by that reflection. As legislators, we have to consider most sincerely a debate that is about to take place in this Legislature.

So, in looking at that problem of the young drinking driver, I know it was probably the most sober of all the many reflections that we had in approaching a root cause. Looking at the root causes, we discovered early that young people were but a part of the overall increased consumption and frequency of alcohol in our society. I think the recommendations clearly point out, as another report submitted not terribly long ago also did, that a package of various recommendations is needed. Central to this debate swirls this contentious issue of the age and what effect it might have in contributing towards the reduction of this horrendous cost and waste of our most precious natural resource, the young people of this province.

In this past decade—it was touched on by other speakers and I would like to underscore it—that the powerful advertising of alcohol has conveyed very clearly a message to young people that virtually all recreational activities require the consumption of alcoholic beverages. Young people, in trying to emulate the attractive lifestyle they see on television, have created for themselves in many cases serious alcoholic problems.

Mr. Warner: Stop them from doing it. You've been asked to for a whole year.

Mr. Jones: The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere is raising a question about the report, about the recommendation on lifestyle advertisement. Similarly, with the contentious issue of age, it was recognized that these were issues of such magnitude as not to be played political football with—

Mr. Warner: That's what you have been doing.

Mr. Jones: —but rather to be examined by all members of this House and, as they were in the select committee in a non-partisan way, to be seriously reflected upon and weighed. Thus came the recommendation that we see in this particular report which has just recently been tabled, is now being debated and being taken in hand by the government for its consideration.

On the issue of having lowered the age to 18 and the subsequent debate now for consideration as per this recommendation and a bill about to be debated in this House, we see a lot of people scurrying into the sidelines of the debate. I was happy to see that the members of the committee, led by the chairman, showed the courage to meet the issue and the debate foursquare and to examine in depth the issue and the side issues of the subject.

The fact is that alcohol has pervaded our high schools. All the investigation and all the evidence that are contained in this report and the other studies that are being done and have been done point clearly to the fact that the social functions of our high schools are increasingly being affected by alcohol. With increased consumption rates affecting our young people, the saddest of all are probably the younger ages. There is the so-called ripple effect whereby grade 9 students and even young groups than that in elementary schools are now being affected.

There is this great debate about the age 18 limit and whether one year would effectively help to remove the peer pressure we know exists so clearly in the high school age groups. As we look to the statistics and see in the report that 97 per cent of the students are in the under-19 class, there is a very big bridge separating those who have left the high school system for post-secondary or the world of work. It's a very real cut-off point, of course. We see something in the order of 1.6 in the early part of the school year and then it increases so as to give an average of some 97 per cent existence in the schools. It would be a very real factor in helping reduce the availability to young people and the pressure on those at 18 who legally can acquire drink and are part of our peer pressure group of the younger and younger ages that the rippling effect has involved.

We all know that young people are gregarious, do travel together and have all that extra opportunity for tragedy that all too often has been the case. One of the earlier speakers, the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel, recited a real experience and tragic accident resulting in death in his riding. I think every member here can recite some incident similar to that. We would be less than responsible, I suggest, if we weren't to take this particular recommendation and all the various soberly thought-out and reflected-upon recommendations to heart for serious consideration.

I'd like in closing simply to express to the chairman and the members of the select committee in which it was my privilege to participate as they brought forward this report, my gratitude for the honesty and, yes indeed, in some subjects the courage, they showed in bringing forward these recommendation as they have in this report. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Acting Speaker: This item is discharged from the order paper.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1977

The House met at 10 a.m.
Prayers.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, this is a time when normally I would be tabling a supplementary estimate this morning. Unfortunately, however, I don't have it in my hand as yet. I expect to have it later on this morning. I wonder if I could have your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, and the indulgence to interrupt the proceedings of the House at the time that I have that supplementary estimate for Community and Social Services and table it in the normal manner.

Mrs. Campbell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I understand the supplementary estimate to be tabled is only that of Community and Social Services. It is totally impossible from our point of view to proceed to discuss Community and Social Services without having the supplementaries in the ministries of the Attorney General, Health and Correctional Services, since they interrelate. I had taken the trouble to advise the House leader last evening of my position.

There are also reconciliations that have to be made in my submission in the Community and Social Service estimates in any event. I rise on this point because the order of business for next week has been announced and unless these matters can be dealt with over this weekend I don't believe Community and Social Services can proceed.

I am, therefore, asking your advice, Mr. Speaker, because we have four and a half hours left for those estimates and it would be inappropriate if we lost that time in estimates by reason of what I can only refer to at best as the very sloppy way in which this matter has been handled. I would seek your guidance and hope there might be other estimates that could proceed in the event that the government is unable to meet all of the conditions upon which I, for one, would be prepared to sit.

Mr. McClellan: In speaking to that point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have to agree with my colleague from St. George. Let me briefly illustrate a part of the difficulty.

In his statement of June 30, which he said was the contents of the order in council creating the new vote, the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) said there was $32.2 million for juvenile corrections in vote 2804. He provided a background statement that showed there was $35.6 million in juvenile corrections. In the program, resource summary, which his ministry provided, the item had changed to $37.2 million for juvenile corrections. In the estimates book of the Justice policy field, under vote 1503 for juvenile corrections, is the amount of $36.3 million. So we have four incompatible sets of figures with respect to juvenile corrections alone.

Until we can have a proper reconciliation statement, and a proper understanding of the supplementary estimates from the other three ministries, we cannot proceed with the Ministry of Community and Social Services estimates. It illustrates why this minister arranged for a management-consultant study earlier in the spring to look at his serious problems.

Mr. Lewis: Oh for the return of the prodigal. Where is James Taylor? Will ye no come back?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Speaker was not privy to, or not a part of any of the negotiations that took place yesterday between the House leaders. I understand supplementary estimates will be forthcoming in the next few moments. I haven't had a chance to peruse them nor have other members of the House.

I can only say that dealing with supply for Community and Social Services is the responsibility of that committee. If the majority of that committee feel the information before them is not sufficient for them to proceed, they are the managers of that committee. It's up to them to make a decision as to whether or not they feel there is sufficient information with which to proceed. The House or the Speaker cannot intervene unless they are specifically requested to do so by the committee.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

FRUIT JUICE PURCHASES

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce a new policy in regard to the purchase of fruit juices served in all correctional institutions operated by my ministry.

An hon. member: Are we being ripped off?

Mr. Lewis: You don't like Anita Bryant, is that it?

Hon. Mr. Drea: She's not going to like me.

I have instructed that the serving of imported orange and grapefruit juice is to be discontinued when supplies already ordered have been used. No existing contracts will be cancelled but no further contracts for these items will be established. Once supplies of imported juices obtained under present contracts are exhausted, only Canadian-produced fruit juices will be served, particularly apple and tomato juices. In the case of grape juices, only juice from grapes grown in Ontario will be purchased.

I believe this new policy will play a role in assisting Canada in its balance of payments and in providing employment and new markets for Canadians. This policy also recognizes the continuing support that my ministry's institutions, many of which are located in borough settings, have always received from the farming community in Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: Frank Drea for Treasurer.

CROP CONDITIONS

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the Minister of Correctional Services for his announcement on behalf of the agricultural community in the province of Ontario.

As members are aware, the harvest season this year has been a rather difficult one, with unusually heavy rainfall in September and early October. Nevertheless, Ontario farmers have managed to harvest a large proportion of most crops under these unfavourable conditions.

The very good weather we have had for the past two weeks has also greatly eased the situation. In several areas of the province, a light first crop of hay resulting from a prolonged period of dry weather was followed by good yields of second and third crops of both hay and haylage. Some of the silage corn crop could not be ensiled at the proper stage of maturity and moisture because wet fields prevented harvest equipment from operating. Some of this corn has since been harvested as grain corn.

In general, however, overall forage supplies appear adequate for the winter feeding period. Grain corn yields and quality are generally good. Bushels per acre are above average as are pounds per bushel. The prolonged growing season allowed time for the kernels to develop to full maturity. The excellent weather of the past two weeks has been helpful to winter wheat producers whose fall planting has been delayed by wet conditions. Wet fields have dried sufficiently to allow some late planting of winter wheat.

The news about white beans is not so good. This crop suffered from the wet weather. However, the news is not all bad. Some farmers are finding yields and quality surprisingly good.

High rainfall in the late summer favoured soya bean production with yields of 40 to 60 bushels. All the vegetable crops except a few potatoes have been harvested and the yields have been generally good. There is some concern with the harvesting of crops in the Holland marsh because of the extremely wet weather, and there is some problem with the potato crops.

Considering the adverse conditions, Ontario's largely successful harvest is a tribute to the ingenuity and management ability of our farmers. However, in spite of the generally favourable results of the harvest, some individual farmers have been hard hit. I wish to inform the members therefore that my ministry has decided to postpone payments of principal for one year to farmers with Ontario junior farmer loans and to participants in the Ontario young farmer credit program who may be having trouble meeting financial commitments due to the adverse harvest weather conditions.

We are also asking the federal government to join with us by postponing principal payments on federal farm credit corporation loans for farmers who have been constrained financially by the poor harvest weather. I made this request to the federal Minister of Agriculture about two weeks ago and although he has not as yet agreed to this course of action, he has not rejected it. He tells me he is investigating possible alternatives, so I trust that help in some form will be forthcoming from the federal government.

I believe we have a great responsibility to the farmers of this province. They are crucial to our economy. We have invested in their future and ours with these loan programs. We must not become so inflexible that we cease to be a help to them.

NEGLIGENCE AMENDMENT BILL

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Today I intend to introduce for first reading, the Negligence Amendment Act. The effect of these amendments will be that damages and contributions to indemnity will be recoverable for loss or damages incurred by any passenger caused by the negligence of a driver, regardless of whether the vehicle was carrying passengers gratuitously or for compensation, regardless of whether the negligence of the driver was gross or simple negligence.

The Act itself is essentially a consequential amendment in support of the repeal of the so-called guest passenger provision as proposed in section 16 of Bill 85, The Highway Traffic Amendment Act, 1977. As the repeal of the guest passenger provision is a matter that touches on civil rights of action in the administration of justice in the province, section 16 of the Highway Traffic Amendment Act was proposed by the Ministry of the Attorney General at the request of the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow).

As a result of Bill 85 and the amendments that will be proposed here today, all passengers will have an equal right of action against the negligent driver, regardless of whether the vehicle was being used to carry passengers gratuitously or for compensation. Under the present law, unless the vehicle is being used to carry passengers for compensation, an injured passenger must prove the driver has been grossly negligent. In every other instance, the driver is liable for his simple negligence. This discrimination against the guest passenger has long been assailed by the courts, the legal profession and a number of study groups including, most recently, the select committee on company law in its report on automobile insurance.

This anomaly in our law of negligence is long past due for reform. I am pleased to assist in implementing these much-needed amendments.

ORAL QUESTIONS

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

Mr. S. Smith: Would the Speaker inquire on my behalf as to who is in charge of the government at the moment, who the senior minister is?

Mr. Lewis: The Minister of Correctional Services, I would think.

Mr. Speaker: Would anyone care to indicate who it is?

Mr. Cunningham: Don't be so bashful.

Mr. Speaker: The Chairman of Management Board.

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Chairman of Management Board: In view of the major changes in ministry budgets, not only the shifting around from one ministry to another such as we were discussing earlier this morning, but also the major changes indicated in the recent issue of Ontario Finances, will the minister tell this House when we might expect all the supplementary estimates, as committees of this House are currently discussing budgetary estimates that are really quite out of date?

Is the government planning to wait until just before the Christmas recess and then tip-toe in and land on the desk and on the table with several hundred million dollars worth of supplementary estimates? The government knows already that these estimates we are discussing now are irrelevant. Why doesn't it bring in all the supplementaries?

Hon. Mr. Auld: In the normal course of events, supplementary estimates come along towards the second or third quarter of the fiscal year. We have always in the past had only one set of supplementary estimates. Technically, there is no impediment of which I am aware that there can be only one set of supplementary estimates. I suppose if we want to put up with the administration, the time and cost involved, we could have them every week.

At the present time, we are gathering from the operating ministries what supplementaries they may be anticipating. I would hope we would have "sups" before the Christmas recess and certainly not during the last couple of days before. On the other hand, the longer we wait the more we have.

I should point out that where reductions take place it is not necessary to have supplementary estimates because every year we have some unspent funds. The purpose of estimates is to authorize the spending of the funds, but it doesn't mean that those funds have to be spent, and I am sure this House wouldn't want that kind of requirement. In fact, one of the comments yesterday in the debate on the Leader of the Opposition's resolution indicated—incorrectly, as a matter of fact—that there was a great flurry of spending in March to make sure all the money was spent. This is not correct. In fact, I made a statement about it last year. However, that's aside from the point.

I will endeavour to give the House, in the next few days, an indication of when we might expect the supplementaries.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Does the Chairman of Management Board not agree that it is somewhat pointless for people to be sitting in estimates committee discussing estimates when Ontario Finances is published quarterly, making it quite plain that those figures are simply not relevant, that they are not in fact appropriate to the discussion that should be going on?

Surely the minister has enough respect for the parliamentary process to bring in major supplementary estimates as soon as he has them, leaving enough time for intelligent debate on these matters, and not just come in, as has been said, a week or a couple of days before the Christmas recess and land us with millions of dollars worth of supplementaries.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) has pointed out on a number of occasions, Ontario Finances is made up of a combination of figures, actual figures and estimates, both in terms of expenditure and revenue. One notices changes in various totals from quarter to quarter because of changes that take place in those two overall categories. I don't think this House would want the estimates to be changed every quarter because of other estimates that have been made, which also change from time to time, if I'm not getting too convoluted.

The spending estimates of the ministries are set, and they are maximum amounts that the ministries are permitted to spend, subject to unexpected large expenditures for which there are provisions either by Management Board order or by special warrant, of which we have a diminishing number each year.

All I can say at this time is that I will attempt to give the House an indication as soon as I can as to when we might be bringing in all the supplementaries that we now know of, or whether we may bring in some and trust it won't be necessary to have more, because we still have five months to go in the fiscal year.

REVIEW OF BOARDS AND COMMISSIONS

Mr. S. Smith: A new question for the Chairman of Management Board: Since he and his government saw fit yesterday not to support the resolution, the so-called sunset idea—although, frankly, I think they were more frightened of the sun shining in some of their private Tory patronage fiefdoms,—

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: How can the Liberals stand up and say that?

Mr. S. Smith:—a resolution which would have conducted a much needed review of the hundreds of boards and agencies and commissions—

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Does the member want to debate it again?

Mr. S. Smith:—and since the minister mentioned that he and Management Board are carrying out some type of assessment of their own on all these boards, agencies and commissions, can he tell us whether in fact he intends to table in this House the information and the deliberations of Management Board with regard to all the agencies, boards and commissions, and whether he will allow his information and his decisions to be shared with the procedural affairs committee of this House, for instance, since it's part of the committee's frame of reference to look at these matters?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition is, I am sure, aware that Management Board is a committee of cabinet and our discussions are in the same category as cabinet discussions. The decisions are made public. Some of the reports that are involved may well be made public, depending on their total relevance, I guess.

The actual discussions on who said he was in favour of something and who said he wasn't are not public, because when we finally produce a report, or when cabinet comes out with a decision, it is a unanimous decision. Sometimes it takes longer than others to get a unanimous decision but that's what it is.

Mr. Wildman: Except in the case of Edwardsburgh.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I might say, in terms of the comment about patronage, that the Leader of the Opposition, and I hope I'm not maligning him incorrectly—

Mr. Conway: But maligning him none the less.

Mr. Reid: The minister hopes he is maligning him correctly, that is what he is trying to say.

Hon. Mr. Auld:—but let me say I am not incorrect in my assumption that he was the one who said there were a number of these boards and commissions that should be done away with because they hadn't met. If they hadn't met, then the patronage would be somewhat limited on account of the fact that the members are paid a per diem and if they don't meet they don't get paid.

Mr. S. Smith: Oh, what nonsense.

Hon. W. Newman: That is true. Look at McRuer's report. Why don't you read it before you make all these statements?

Hon. Mr. Auld: However, I think I have answered the main question.

Mr. Reid: Don't tell us you read it?

Mr. Lewis: You read McRuer?

Hon. W. Newman: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: You mean somebody read McRuer to you.

Hon. W. Newman: Parts of it anyway.

Mr. Breithaupt: In very small doses.

Mr. S. Smith: Came out in paperback, is that it?

Mr. Lewis: Inch by inch.

Mrs. Campbell: My question is supplementary to the answer given by the minister. Could he tell us whether it is a fact that the Community and Social Services estimates were introduced in the fashion in which they were as a result of a decision of Management Board, since he has said they do announce their decisions? Would he give us that information?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I didn't say we announce our decisions. We make recommendations to cabinet as a committee of cabinet. Obviously the government agreed with the introduction of the estimates of Community and Social Services in the form that they were introduced.

I might just say, in addition to what I said yesterday, that I am informed as of yesterday that the order-in-council method was deemed to be unconstitutional. I am informed that the Clerk of the House said it was questionable.

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am going to turn my guns on the heavyweights. I have a question for the Minister of Energy.

I want to ask the minister, in light of the document which he tabled in the House yesterday of the contract between Ontario Hydro and Gulf Minerals, what he understands the chairman of Hydro to mean when he says, "I am sure you realize that public disclosure of the terms and conditions of a commercial contract such as this one is against common practice, and for good reason." How can it be against common practice to reveal the terms of a contract between a public corporation, paid for by public money, and a company in the private sector?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would only have to surmise the mental processes behind that particular paragraph.

Mr. Lewis: The mental processes?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Yes. However, I could, if the member invites me to do that. I would suggest there may be some sincere and legitimate concern on the part of the chairman of the Hydro board that the competitive system in terms of bidding might be destroyed, so that you could arrive at a common price if there was full disclosure of everyone's bid in terms of the contract. I would surmise that.

This, I may say, is apparently of some concern now in some of the US utilities where they have been asked not to disclose that. What is resulting apparently is a common single price which is not the best price that the utilities might be able to get if there were a lack of public disclosure in terms of those contracts.

I am just surmising what may be behind that. Hopefully the indication of concern by the chairman of Hydro will be further developed and we will be able to take some positive position on it.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, could it be that he did not wish this contract to be disclosed to the public even after it had been signed? Not only does it provide for an automatic escalator clause for wages and for material inputs, but it also provides, incredibly enough, for an automatic pass-through of any taxes or royalties paid subsequent to the signing of the contract, and any costs incurred in upgrading mine safety or mine conditions? Is it not an unprecedented rip-off for Gulf Minerals, into which Ontario Hydro entered openly, with subsequent charges to be borne by the province of Ontario? Isn't that why Ontario Hydro wants to hide the details of the contract?

[10:30]

Mr. Warner: That's disgusting.

Mr. Mancini: That's why you let him off the hook.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: No, would be my answer to that. If the member would like my view on the question of royalties he raised—

Mr. Wildman: He asked for it.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: As the member appreciates, even now the delivery of uranium would be half of the current market price.

Mr. Lewis: That is not the point.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: It is the point, though.

Mr. Lewis: The point is that we were taken.

Mr. Speaker: Order, the question has been asked.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: The point of royalties is that presumably Saskatchewan, from where this uranium comes, could add royalties to the extent of matching the Hydro price to the world price and we in Ontario would have to suffer those additional royalties. They would be fed through in the contract so that the Hydro consumers would then suffer those additional prices.

Mr. Lewis: That is what is happening.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: And that could very well happen. If the member is asking me whether that's a concern of the Hydro chairman, it may very well be a concern of the Hydro chairman.

Mr. Lewis: But you agreed to that.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Hydro hasn't agreed to that at all.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been answered.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: If what members opposite want to do is to try to increase uranium prices to Ontario Hydro so that the consumers of electricity in this province are penalized, then why don't they say so?

Mr. Lewis: Why don't you resign, for heaven's sake?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Smile when you say that so the press doesn't take it seriously.

Mr. Deans: You haven't even read the contract.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is not a debate.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Regarding this very contract and regarding the comments that the minister has made saying that the chairman of Hydro made a good argument that that contract didn't need to have government approval, would the minister kindly table that argument in whatever form it exists and would he explain why it is that the government now rejects that argument for the present contract with Denison?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I did not say Hydro made a good argument in that regard.

Mr. Lewis: You said "mental processes."

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Again it is a fiction that is created by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister said it yesterday.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary. Does he not understand, as minister, that Gulf Minerals entered into this contract for ores that it had in the early 1970s at a tremendous rate of profit with a guaranteed return over the years, on top of which Ontario Hydro gave it the right subsequently to add in all additional royalties and taxes and all additional costs relating to mine safety or mine upgrading plus all mineral input? Does he not recognize that that is a violation of the use of public money and that he should condemn Ontario Hydro for that kind of contract?

Mr. S. Smith: That's normal practice.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Is the leader of the third party suggesting that that is what happened?

Mr. Deans: It did happen. It is in the contract.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a point of personal privilege. It doesn't amount to that? You are shaking your head.

It's Friday morning. I can see, however, that compassion will glint in your eye. On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is intolerable—

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of order.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary then. Is it not intolerable that the minister should have tabled a contract, in this Legislature yesterday, which he clearly hasn't read or absorbed, and in which he doesn't understand what the sections on price adjustment mean, but he appears to be agreeing with us because of his incredulous response? If so, why doesn't he haul the chairman of Ontario Hydro into his office and tell him that he can't rip off the public this way?

Mr. Deans: What's wrong with this minister?

Mr. Warner: There is only one thing left for him to do—resign and save himself some honour.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I compliment the leader of the third party on being a master of fiction.

Mr. Wildman: When we are dealing with the minister, it's science fiction.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I was asked if I would table that contract. In my open way I was happy to table that contract. I read it very thoroughly, I may say, before tabling it. I am familiar with the base price and the escalation clauses; and if the hon. member would familiarize himself with that, I think he would appreciate that this contract actually provides for a very good deal for Hydro consumers.

Mr. Lewis: Yes and for Gulf Minerals.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Why does the minister not simply explain to the leader of the New Democratic Party that these escalation clauses happen to be normal practice and address himself to the important matter of the base price paid originally, which is $2 above even the world cartel price, in a clearly rigged bid which Hydro must have known was a rigged bid when it agreed to it?

Mr. Lewis: It is not normal commercial practice, damn it, to include those increases.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Again, I would be happy to discuss this with the Leader of the Opposition if he doesn't understand it. Certainly if he could appreciate what was happening in terms of the world price of uranium throughout 1974, then I don't think he would make that accusation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West with a second question?

Mr. Lewis: No, I don't want to take any more time, Mr. Speaker.

PLACEMENT OF RETARDED PERSONS

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services. I wonder if the minister is aware that in the county of Essex there are no facilities for the retarded and that, in fact, these retarded people are kept in nursing homes and lodges?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the fact that there is a proposal currently before our ministry to establish a group home residential facility for the mentally retarded in Essex. It is a proposal which was received by our ministry from the district working group about the end of March of this year.

Our staff have been working with the local association towards the establishment of this facility, the latest meeting having taken place some time during the summer; I'm not sure of the precise date. But at the present time we were under the impression, as a result of a statement made to our staff by the president of the association, that they would not be in a position to proceed until some time this fall, by which time they expected to have appointed a director of the association to oversee the implementation of the project.

We had not expected them to proceed before this fall and we have had no further communication from them at this point indicating that they are now ready to go ahead. But as soon as we do hear from them, we are prepared to proceed in co-operation with them to place such a facility in operation in Essex.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary: Is it not a fact that ARC Industries of Essex has had this proposal before the ministry for at least two years? Is it not also a fact that ARC Industries of Essex could have had the opportunity to purchase two or three different homes but was not able to do so because the ministry just did not put forward the funds? And could the minister table, in this House, any other county with the same population as Essex which does not have any facilities for its retarded?

Hon. Mr. Norton: To the best of my knowledge the information of the hon. member is incorrect. Prior to the end of March of this year, the proposal had been presented—and I'm not sure precisely when—to the district working group for consideration, which is the process by which we receive advice and recommendations from local community groups on the establishment of the most appropriate facilities in those communities.

We didn't receive the recommendation from the district working group until March 30, I believe, of this year. So to suggest that that has been before our ministry for two or two and a half years, certainly according to my information, is incorrect. They may have had some prior communication with the ministry about the development of a proposal, but there was no proposal before us until the recommendation of the district working group was received.

I might have some difficulty in tabling a county in the House, but if there is any further information in that respect—I don't know offhand; I'm sure there are other counties where there is a need for greater service or greater facilities than are presently there, but I'll check into that for the hon. member.

OTTAWA JOURNAL LOCKOUT

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour: In view of the fact that there is a very limited number of strikes in the province at this time, partly because of this government's support for the Anti-Inflation Board, can the minister say why it is that the Ottawa Journal lockout continues for now in its 55th week? Could she say what the government is prepared to do to stop the bad-faith bargaining by the employer in that case?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, as I'm sure the hon. member knows, the ministry has been actively involved in attempting to resolve this particular dispute for a very long period of time. We have devoted and delegated to it some of our most able mediators and conciliators and we have appointed an industrial inquiry commission.

The present dispute resolves around one specific segment of the striking unions involved in that dispute in Ottawa. An attempt being made valiantly by one of our most able mediators to find a solution to the potential retirement problem of some of those workers is, I think, causing the difficulty at the moment. It is a matter in which we have been actively, deeply and vigorously involved and that involvement is in no way lessening.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that the company has been pouring resources from its parent FP group into the Ottawa Journal dispute in order to keep that dispute in being, rather than reaching a settlement, is the minister prepared publicly to condemn that kind of anti-labour tactic by the management?

Hon. B. Stephenson: It's my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that the management has been pouring money into the Ottawa Journal to keep the Ottawa Journal afloat. I'm sure one of the objectives is to preserve the jobs of those workers who are presently working within the Journal, and hopefully to preserve the jobs of those who are still out on strike so that they may have something to come back to.

I'm not willing at all to condemn the publisher for attempting to keep the newspaper afloat. I'm not sure how long he can do it, however. But I would remind the hon. member that the bad-faith provision has been exercised before the Ontario Labour Relations Board in this particular dispute, and it was, I think, deemed that there was some bad faith on both sides, as a result of a decision of the Labour Relations Board.

Certainly I would be unwilling to condemn the publisher for attempting to keep his particular establishment functioning in order to preserve the jobs of the workers in that industry in Ottawa.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister prepared to consider changes in the Labour Relations Act in view of the fact that one alleged action of bad faith by the union before the lockout even occurred was deemed to counterbalance a consistent pattern of bad-faith bargaining by the employer that went on for month after month after month and continues to this day?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, Mr. Speaker, I think that if there is a change in labour legislation necessary, it will not be based upon one instance or one dispute. It will be as a result of an examination of the law related to a number of disputes. If it is found that the law is inappropriate related to the disputes which we have in this province, then we will consider changing it.

Mr. Yakabuski: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: When the Telegram folded here in this city a few years ago, the rank and file of the membership of that union were not informed that the Telegram had allowed the union to examine its books and prove that it was in great difficulties. It seems that at that time the rank and file of the union were not kept fully informed. I'm wondering if the Minister of Labour could ensure—

Mr. Speaker: Are you asking?

Mr. Yakabuski: —that the members of the union involved in the dispute in Ottawa are kept fully informed by their executive?

Mr. Lewis: The Telegram workers were fully informed. That was one of the better things about that fiasco.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I cannot be absolutely sure that every single member is completely informed about the financial situation of the Ottawa Journal.

Mr. Deans: They are probably better informed than the member for Renfrew South.

Hon. B. Stephenson: But I am aware that the Journal has made, I think, a total release of its financial position available to the unions involved. The numbers of members of the various unions involved is not great, and I would think it would probably be easier in that situation to inform all the members of the union than at the Telegram where the numbers were very much larger.

ACTIVITIES OF OPP

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, the member for Scarborough West asked if the Ontario Provincial Police had looked into the activities associated with native people's groups or with some of the activist groups in relation to native people's organizations and movements.

The Ontario Provincial Police is aware of the activities of the American Indian Movement. On April 29, 1976, I responded in this House to a query in regard to that group.

The security branch of the OPP is responsible for the personal security of members of the Legislative Assembly and the Lieutenant Governor. In addition, it is responsible for the physical security of government buildings, including files and computers. The security branch of the OPP gathers information on certain groups and extremist organizations that may be contemplating or committing criminal acts, intimidation or harm to members of the Legislative Assembly or who advocate the overthrow of authority by illegal means.
